374. But supposing there were 300 of your communion and 400 Protestants in Tothill-fields Prison, would not the 300 require the services of a clergyman and occupy his time just as much as the 400 Protestants?—Yes, just as much.

375. Sir John Pakington.] Do I rightly understand you to state that, upon the whole, if you had been properly remunerated for your services in the prison, and had been able to devote your whole time to those duties, you would have performed those duties in a much more satisfactory manner to yourself than you were able to do?—Yes, certainly.

376. Lord Henley.] With reference to the nature of the distinctive teaching, your answer just now almost gave me to understand that the instruction which was given in the prisons was so elementary that there was scarcely any distinctive teaching between Catholic and Protestant; that is not so, I believe?—No, of course not; first of all there are the general points of Christianity, the great truths believed in by the Protestants and the Roman Catholics, and then the particular truths, Catholic, which I call also elementary.

377. And on these points there would, of course, be considerable distinction between the truths taught by persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion, and those taught by Protestants?—Certainly.

The Reverend VINCENT BOND, called in; and Examined.

378. Chairman.] YOU are the successor to Reverend Mr. White, are you not?—I am.

379. You are a member of a religious order, I ieve?—I am a member of a religious order.

380. What order is that?—The order of the uits.

381. What is the average attendance, both ekly and on Sunday, that you give to that ll?—On the average, I spend between two a half and three hours every day. On conion days, which are Fridays and Saturdays, I frequently spend three full hours; sometimes I have spent a longer time.

382. Three hours per day per week is the average for week days, is it not?—I would say the average is two and a half hours, and on those two days, Fridays and Saturdays, I may call it three hours. On Sunday mornings, I attend from 9 o'clock till half-past 10, and in the evening from 3 till 4.

383. Do you receive any pay?—None whatever.

28 March 1870.

384. Do you consider that the receipt of pay, in placing you in the position of one of the recognised officers of the establishment, would give you a better position in the prison?—Certainly it would.

385. Will you just explain to the Committee what are your views with regard to that?—When the officers of the prison see a Catholic priest without any status, or a penny of salary, they naturally would not pay him that deference and respect to which his position gives him a claim, and which is never wanting to the Protestant clergyman.

386. Do your duties in the prison interfere materially with your parochial duties?—They do very materially; I give the better part of every day of the week to the poor prisoners in Tothill-fields; after that, frequently I am unable to do any more work for the rest of the day.

387. Why is that?—Because I am so fatigued.

388. What is the reason of that; is it because the work in the prison is so laborious?—Yes; for there is so much to be done for each individual prisoner.

389. Have you anything to complain of as regards the atmosphere of the prison?—No; I have nothing to complain of as regards the atmosphere of the chapel. I found it at first very inconvenient for two or three Sundays, but that was perhaps because I had never been in a prison before; I have no fault now to find with it.

390. Your work is so heavy, from its nature, that when you come out you are unable to prosecute your missionary duties?—I am unable to perform them with that zeal and efficiency that I otherwise should.

391. Do you agree with Mr. White, that you are to a certain extent more or less a burden upon your brother clergymen?—Certainly.

392. That you are unable to give them that fair assistance to which they are entitled?—Yes.

393. Is it possible that a Roman Catholic can attend, without commission of wrong, to the ministrations of a Protestant clergyman?—I do not understand the question.

394. First of all, do you know that Wesleyans and Baptists may attend to the religious ministrations of the Church of England without sacrificing their principles?—Yes, I do.

395. But it is not possible for a Roman Catholic to attend to the ministrations of anyone but members of his own community?—Certainly that is quite impossible; it would be looked upon as a sort of apostacy.

396. There are a considerable number of Roman Catholics in this gaol, are there not?—Yes, there are.

397. But is there not a very large poor Catholic population in the district?—Very large indeed.

398. Those are the very poorest class, are they not?—Yes.

399. Are they not then those who would be most liable to temptation?—Yes, they are.

400. They rob and get drunk; is not that the general character of the offences committed?—Yes.

401. Are they not rather minor offences than dark and terrible offences?—Certainly, as far as my experience goes.

402. You yourself have nothing to complain of with reference to the authorities of the prison, except that they do not give you that position to which you consider you are entitled?—I have nothing to complain of, save that I, as a Catholic priest, am not upon an equal footing with the Protestant clergyman.

403. And you think that in a free country you have a right to be so?—Yes.

404. Roman Catholics contribute towards the taxes, do they not?—Yes, they pay their share of the rates out of which the prison authorities meet all expenses, and therefore I do not see why those of the Roman Catholic priest should not be included.

405. If you were a salaried officer, and could devote your entire time to attendance in the prison, would not such an arrangement be very much better for those people than the present state of things?—I should think so, certainly.

406. You would then devote a larger portion of your time than you do at present?—Yes; if the regulations of the prison would permit it.

407. Sir John Pakington.] I collect from your evidence that you have nothing to complain of now with respect to your position as Roman Catholic minister in the Tothill Fields Prison, except that your status as chaplain is not distinctly recognised, and that your services are not remunerated?—That is so.

408. Mr. Dimsdale.] I wish to ask you a question with reference to the size of the chapel; are you of opinion that the chapel is too small for the requirements of the Catholic prisoners?—My impresssion is that the chapel is considered to hold, and I believe it has held some times, 170; that is as many as it will hold, and of course we know that there are more than 170 Catholic prisoners, so that there must always be some excluded; I think we have had as many as 220 in the prison; the last returns give that figure, therefore I presume there must be many Catholic prisoners who are unable to attend service in the chapel.

409. You might strike a per-centage off the number?—I could not say at all how many there would be that would not be able to attend; perhaps 20.

410. Mr. Synan.] You told the Committee that the labour of the prison made you encroach upon the services of your brother clergymen and necessitated your being a burden upon them—Yes; that is so.

411. Does not the labour of the prison encroach upon the services which your people naturally expect from you as a missionary priest?—Certainly.

412. So that the people suffer as well as your brother clergymen?—Yes; certainly they do.

413. Are you not supported by the voluntary contributions of those people?—I am.

414. Consequently, if you received a salary you need not press upon these voluntary contributions so much as it is necessary for you to press upon them now?—No.

415. Mr. Guest.] You speak of your parochial duties; do you hold the same parish that Mr. White held?—Yes, the same parish; St. Mary's Westminster.

416. Is it an understood thing that whoever is chaplain at the House of Correction at Westminster, is also the chaplain to the parish?—That, I believe, is the present arrangement.

417. Mr. Fowler.] Are there still three clergymen to the 5,000 population in St. Mary's?—Yes, as in Mr. White's time.

418. Lord Henley.] Were you present in the room during Mr. White's evidence?—Yes, I was.

419. A

419. And you heard the evidence he gave relative to the conduct of the matron upon the 12th April 1868?—Yes, I heard what was said.

420. Have you come into collision with the authorities of the prison in any similar manner?—No, I have not; I had not the same obstacles to surmount.

421. Do you agree with Mr. White with reference to the difficulties of proselytising upon your part?—Quite so; it would be impossible.

422. The prisoners are supposed to be of one communion or the other when they come into the prison, and they are supposed to remain so?—That is so.

423. So that there is no power of proselytising given you?—None whatever.

424. Mr. Downing.] Supposing you had an opportunity of proselytising, would you as a Roman Catholic priest consider yourself justified in taking advantage of it?—I should not think of it for a moment.

425. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Still the Protestant clergyman has an opportunity of doing so if he wishes?—Yes; I am told that all the prisoners pass through his hands; that is one of the things I complain of; it is open to great abuse.

426. Have you made any application with regard to salary?—I thought it was simply useless, and I did not apply.

427. But your not having done so does not imply contentment with your present position?—By no means.

428. Do you agree with what Mr. White has said, about the laundry and kitchen being employment particularly desired by the female prisoners?—As far as I know, it is so.

429. You have no knowledge of females having entered themselves upon the register as Protestants, in order to come within the range of those employed in the laundry and kitchen?—The fact does not come within my experience.

430. Lord Henley.] I want to ask you with reference to the Protestant chaplain having all the prisoners passing through his hands, which I describe as an abuse; will you describe to the Committee in what way they come under his hands?—I am not in a position to know what passes between the Protestant clergyman and the prisoners; I merely know the fact that they do pass through his hands; that he sees them on their entering the prison, and that he asks them questions; I am informed that they do not bear directly upon religion; I speak from hearsay.

431. If they declare themselves Catholics, they are not expected to attend any service or administration on the part of the Protestant chaplain?—They are not expected to do so.

432. Chairman.] Is it your impression that the Protestant chaplain asks them any questions before they declare what creed they belong to?—I do not know.

433. Mr. Downing.] I wish to call your attention to the Act of Parliament, the 5th section of which repeals a former Act, which enabled a minister to visit a prisoner, whatever his religion may have been; that is repealed, and it is said "unless he has not been attended by his own clergyman for 14 days"; now, if you had been absent for 14 days, the Protestant clergyman might then visit the Catholic prisoners?—Quite so.

434. Mr. O'Reilly.] Is it the fact that you, and the two other clergymen who have these 5,000 poor Catholics under their charge, are supported by the voluntary contributions of those 5,000?—Yes.

435. And, therefore, am I right in my conclusion, that the salary of the chaplain of the Westminster House of Correction is paid by the poor Catholic population of the parish?—It is paid by the poor Catholic population of the parish; I will not say wholly, for friends help towards the full payment of it; the poor could not pay it all.

436. You are assisted by voluntary subscriptions from the district?—Quite so.

437. Mr. Dimsdale.] Are the Roman Catholic prisoners excluded from the laundry?—I think not.

438. Mr. Holt.] Do the Committee understand that the 5,000 is the number in the district, or the number of the congregation?—That is the number of the congregation under the priests of St. Mary's.

439. Mr. Fowler.] That includes some of the upper classes?—Very few of them indeed.

440. Sir John Pakington.] You said something about a question being put by the Protestant chaplain to the Roman Catholic prisoners, and you stated that you had been told certain things; will you inform the Committee who told you?—If that is a fair question I have no difficulty in answering it; it was one of the officers in the prison at Tothill-fields who told me.

441. Is it not a question that you would be at liberty to ask the prisoners themselves?—The fewer questions of this sort put to them the better.

442. Mr. Guest.] You say you occupy about two and a half hours each day in the prison?—Yes, I think about that.

443. Do you go at any time of the day, or have you a stated time?—I only go in the morning, on week days.

444. Is that on account of the regulations?—No; it has not been the custom to go at any other time.

445. You do not find that the prisoners are employed so that you cannot gain access to them?—I do not think they are ever so employed.

446. Mr. Synan.] With respect to the laundry which you have been asked about, is it not a more favourable service than any other service in the prison?—I believe it is considered in that light.

447. With respect to the Protestant chaplain; has the Protestant chaplain access to the prisoners on their entrance?—I am told that he has.

Captain DONATUS O'BRIEN, called in; and Examined.

448. Mr. Dimsdale.] YOU have been for some time Chairman of the Visiting Justices of this prison at Westminster, I believe?—This is my second year of chairmanship.

449. Will you inform the Committee what is the number of sittings in the Roman Catholic chapel?—It has been stated that there are 150; there have been as many as 176 prisoners seated at one time, but in ordinary circumstances 150 would not be found an inconvenient number.

450. Could the chapel hold more than 150?—Not very conveniently; much depends upon the weather; complaints have been made in very hot weather of its being overcrowded.

Captain D. O'Brien.

28 March 1870.

451. What is the number of Roman Catholics in the prison at the present time?—According to the last return, the number of Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison was 178; that was the return made on the 26th of March; on the 19th of March, the previous week, there were 179; in the previous week to that, namely, the 12th of March, there were 166; in the week previous to that again there were 169, and in the previous week to that there were 161; they rather augment as I go back.

452. What is the number of Roman Catholic warders?—Six.

453. Are those specially apportioned to that part of the prison in which the Roman Catholic prisoners are confined?—Yes.

454. What are the present regulations with regard to the laundry?—Roman Catholics and Protestants are employed there without any reference to their religious persuasions.

455. And since when has that regulation been in force?—If I recollect rightly, since the end of July last year.

456. Was that in consequence of Mr. White's remonstrances?—It followed Mr. White's remonstrances.

457. At what period were the regulations set on foot that the Roman Catholics should be excluded from the laundry?—I cannot give you the date.

458. And you cannot tell for what reason that regulation was originally made?—The regulation was made because it was found to be very inconvenient to take the Catholics from the laundry at different times, for their religious services. But in order that there should be compensation to certain of the Catholic prisoners for their being taken away from the laundry, which they considered a boon, it was thought desirable that they should be employed in the garden instead; and therefore they were permitted to be employed in weeding, hoeing, digging a little, and so forth, of course under proper surveillance; and that was considered by them, and by the visiting justices, as a certain compensation for their being taken away from the laundry.

459. Is the laundry much preferred by the prisoners?—Throughout all prisons, the laundry is preferred to other occupations.

460. What books are supplied to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—They have in their cells the "Guardian of the Soul," or prayer-book; sometimes it is called one, and sometimes the other. They have the "Douay" Testament, and in addition there are the "Lives of the Saints," and I think some other books, which are given to them by the priest at his discretion; the "Guardian of the Soul" and the Testament are always in the cell; the other books are given, of course, as the prisoners desire them. The prisoners are very ignorant; many cannot read, and in those cases it would be absurd to give them the "Lives of the Saints," or books of any description.

461. Is any singing, or anything in the shape of a musical service permitted in the Roman Catholic service at the prison?—Yes; not very long ago a request was made by the priest that he should have a female warder told off for him to lead the choir, and to assist in leading the Catholic services; and inasmuch as in the Protestant chapel there is an officer who performs a similar service, the visiting justices thought i was only due to Mr. Bond to grant his request.

462. With regard to the instruction in th school, are the Roman Catholics taught there a well as the Protestants?—The instruction in th prison is of a very secular character, as well a of a religious character; secular instruction i given by the schoolmistress, who is a Protestant but when she has the Catholics together, no Pro testants are present. She gives them secula instruction only, teaching them to read and spell and so on; but all religious instruction is give by the clergymen of the two persuasions.

463. By the Protestant and the Roman Ca tholic clergymen?—By the Protestant and Ro man Catholic clergymen. The Protestant clergy man sees a number of prisoners individually about 30 per day, in a room fitted for that pur pose; the priest sees about 25 per day in room set apart for that purpose underneath th chapel, and into which opens his own particula room, where there is the confessional, and hi desk, and what he thinks necessary for the carry ing on of his duties.

464. Were you visiting justice in Augus 1867?—Yes.

465. Do you recollect the fact of Mr. Whit remonstrating with the visiting justices becaus the Roman Catholics were only instructed indi vidually, and not 25 or 30 at a time?—Yes, tha was so.

466. And what was the ground on which hi application was refused?—The exact particula have at this moment escaped my memory.

467. You are not aware that it was in conse quence of an opinion which had been obtaine from Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. (now Sir) Joh Hannen?—Yes; and on a future occasion I wi give the fullest information to the Committee o the subject.

468. Now will you go to the month of Januar 1868; I believe that Mr. White applied for schoolmistress to teach the Roman Catholic pri soners?—No, not then; what he applied for w a person to visit the cells, not a schoolmistres somebody of the nature of a Bible woman; th was his intention. The word "schoolmistress was not made use of in his letter. The applic tion made by him was reasonably stated in h evidence; it was not for a schoolmistress, b for a person whose duty it should be to go fro cell to cell, as a sort of Bible woman, to read to t prisoners, and nothing else. But inasmuch there was no such person allowed under the pris rules for the Protestant prisoners, the magistrat did not think it desirable to allow one for t Catholic prisoners.

469. An application was refused, I think, two Protestant ladies to visit the prison in 186 —Yes, it was.

470. And upon that ground you refused similar application from a Roman Catholic la in 1867?—Yes; soon after the Prisons Act w passed the question came before the Commit of Visiting Justices as to admitting lady visito The opinion of Judge Hannen (then Mr. Ha nen) was taken upon the subject, and he gave as his opinion that it was not within our pow to allow it; nevertheless as there had been so ladies in the habit of visiting the prison for so time before, it was thought desirable that th visits should not be discontinued; accordingl resolution was passed prospectively. If the Co mittee wish it I will read Mr. Hannen's opini

471. What is the date of it?—The 21st of pril 1866: "The clerk laid before the visiting stices the case which, in pursuance of the re-lution of the 7th instant, had been submitted Mr. Hannen on the question: Whether the siting justices have a discretionary power to rmit ladies to visit the female prisoners for the rpose of giving them religious instruction,' gether with Mr. Hannen's opinion thereon, of nich opinion the following is a copy, namely, I am of opinion that the visiting justices have discretionary power to permit ladies to visit e prison and give religious instruction to the isoners. It is the duty of the chaplain to give ligious instruction to the prisoner, and he is ly empowered to appoint some one, with the nsent of the visiting justices, to read portions the Scriptures, when the prisoners are as-mbled for religious instruction; but the in-uction must come from the chaplain himself.' fter a considerable discussion, it was on the otion of Joseph William Thrupp, Esq., seconded Francis Healey, Esq., resolved, that although e opinion of counsel is adverse to the admission ladies to visit the prisoners, yet, with reference seven ladies who have been accustomed to sit the prison, and read to the prisoners, and herwise render them assistance towards their formation, the visiting justices now assembled not advise any alteration to be made in those lies communicating with the prisoners;" since en one of these ladies has almost ceased to ne, the next is dead, the third does not come, ourth comes, and is very useful. The duties of e last lady to whom I have referred are chiefly pying or writing letters for prisoners who are eigners, or translating letters from abroad; I not sure that she does anything else.

472. In consequence of that opinion of Mr. nnen's, you refused an application from the otestants in 1866, and from the Roman tholics in the following year, for permission to it the prison?—Yes, we refused the applica-n of two Protestant ladies, whom I, myself, uld have been very glad to have allowed to ne, and we refused the application of a Catho-lady in the following year.

473. Is any Protestant Scripture reader em-yed at present in the prison?—No.

474. Neither Protestant nor Catholic?—ither the one, nor the other.

475. I believe at a subsequent date you re-ed Mr. White's application for a harmonium? Yes, it was considered undesirable that instru-ntal music should be used in the prison.

476. It was considered undesirable either for otestants or Catholics?—Either for Protestants Catholics.

477. I will now call your attention to the fitting of the chapel; I believe a room was prepared order of the visiting justices, for Roman Ca-llic worship?—The subject was considered y carefully for some time by the justices, and y thought it desirable that there should be a ce properly fitted up for the Roman Catholic vice; it so happened that the prison architect Roman Catholic, and we put him in commu-ation with the priest; his plans were adopted, the place fitted accordingly; it is usually ed the Roman Catholic chapel.

478. What do you think the expense of those ngs would be?—I have at this moment for-ten the exact sum, but if I recollect rightly, I am pretty sure that I am right, we told the 0.60. architect not to exceed 200*l.*; we considered the expenses under two heads; one regarded the fittings of the chapel which we granted, but we refused the other, viz., to supply the priest with or to pay for, those articles said to be necessary to carry on the service, such as the tabernacle, the pix, vestments, candles, and so forth, making a marked difference between those things which he had been in the habit of bringing in for the service before, and that which we ourselves thought it right and proper to provide for his reception.

479. The latter articles necessary for the service he has to provide at his own expense?—We make no inquiry about them; those articles are his property, and he takes them away when he chooses to do so; we have nothing to do with the mode in which he conducts his worship, or with the articles he uses to conduct it.

480. Mr. White applied for the payment of a clerk whom it was necessary to have to help him to perform his services, did he not?—I do not recollect about payment. If Mr. White has said so; I have no doubt Mr. White's statement is correct.

481. But you did not permit him to have this boy in the first instance, but subsequently you did permit him?—Yes.

482. There was some dispute as to the age of the boy, was there not?—There was a question as to age; we did not think that a big boy should be admitted into a prison where there were none but females; and he was refused on account of his his size and age, but afterwards a smaller boy came, and he was admitted.

483. Were you a visiting justice on the 12th April 1868, when the matron was supposed to have made an address to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—No, I do not think I was; I think that at that time I was off, for I have no recollection of the circumstances which have been stated by Mr. White; as to the matron speaking to the prisoners in the yard, she is present, and will tell her own tale.

484. With regard to the laundry question; on 21st August 1869, there was a complaint made by Mr. White respecting the Roman Catholics being excluded from the laundry?—Yes.

485. And the case of two prisoners was brought before you; what answer did you give to it, and upon what grounds?—The whole is set forward in the printed report of the visiting justices for that quarter.

486. Then it has not been the case that the exclusion of the Roman Catholic prisoners from the laundry had a proselytising tendency?—The thing is impossible.

487. And you accepted this clause in the report, "The reason such distinction was adopted was because the Roman Catholic prisoners were frequently absent a portion of the day from their work in the laundry, either at confession or early communion; and the consequent hindrance in the washing caused wrangling between prisoners of different sects, and numerous reports and punishments"?—We accepted that from the matron's report as being the truth.

488. Subsequently there was a dispute with Mr. White, in consequence of which he left?—Yes, there was a difference.

489. Who was appointed Mr. White's successor?—Mr. Bond.

490. Have you had any differences with Mr. Bond?—No; Mr. Bond, as far as the little I have

Captain D. O'Brien.

28 March 1870.

have seen of him goes, would be a credit to any position in which he might be placed.

491. Mr. Hutton.] Those articles for the service were left behind by Mr. White, and are still to be used?—I suppose so; we have made no inquiry about them.

492. Is it right, according to the views of the visiting justices, that articles should be left in the prison, under the charge of the visiting justices, which do not belong to them?—Those articles are not in charge of the visiting justices; we take no notice of them whatever.

493. You simply permit them in the chapel?—We neither permit them nor forbid them; those articles are brought in by the priest, and he does what he likes with them.

494. Mr. Synan.] You gave your permission that Mr. White should be appointed chaplain to the prison; did you know that he was to be chaplain to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—He was appointed for that purpose.

495. Did he, as chaplain to the Catholic prisoners, tell you that there were certain essentials, things necessary for the conduct of his religious services?—Yes, he sent in a list of them.

496. And your answer is, that you had nothing to say to the essentials of Catholic worship or Catholic service, and that he might provide them or not, just as he liked?—That was practically the effect of it.

497. And you gave an answer to an honourable Member that he might take them away to-morrow if he liked?—Yes.

498. And leave the Roman Catholic prisoners in your prison without the essentials of Catholic worship?—If he pleased.

499. The justices had nothing to say to the essentials of Catholic worship, or as to providing necessaries for the Catholic service?—Nothing whatever with regard to the articles referred to.

500. Did the chaplain tell you that these were essentials to the performance of his religious service?—I think very likely the word "essential" was made use of in his list.

501. And your answer is, that the visiting justices, as the superintending body over the Roman Catholic prisoners, have nothing to say with reference to these essentials?—Nothing whatever.

502. And those prisoners might provide themselves with them if they thought fit, or not?—The prisoners could not provide them for themselves.

503. Who is to provide them?—The priest might do so, as he does now.

504. It is to be done by voluntary effort upon the part of any benevolent person who likes to do it?—Yes, no doubt.

505. With respect to the clerk, was the application for that clerk in writing?—It was.

506. Will you read the letter?—"12, Earl-street, Westminster, March 14th. Gentlemen. I write to inform you, that a clerk will be required for the Sunday service of the Roman Catholic prisoners in the Westminster House of Correction. With your sanction, therefore, I will appoint a boy to act in that capacity, and will instruct him to wait upon you for your approval of him. As singing forms an essential part of our service, I have asked the Honourable Mrs. A. Ellis to act as organist. This lady has kindly consented so to do, and will be happy to wait upon you, if you think it expedient that she should do so. I have the honour, gentlemen, to be your obedient servant, Alfred White."

507. Was the refusal in writing?—The minute is as follows: "In reference to the above application made by the Reverend Alfred White, the visiting justices, having considered all the circumstances bearing on the subject, feel themselves constrained to refuse both the requests."

508. Do you keep a record of the refusals?—We keep a record of all the letters we send, and of all those we receive.

509. Did the letter to Mr. White state that you refused his application on account of the size of the boy?—That I cannot tell you.

510. You can produce that letter?—The answer to his letter shall be forthcoming.

511. You state now, that that was the reason in the minds of the justices?—Yes.

512. You do not know the expense of the fittings up, but I understand you to say that you gave orders to this architect that they should not exceed 200*l.*?—That is my impression.

513. So that the actual expenditure might be much less than that sum, might it not?—No; it turned out to be more, because after the fittings had been completed, the architect sent in a bill of some 15*l.*, which was over and above the money that the magistrates at first agreed to pay for the construction of the chapel.

514. So that it might have exceeded 200*l.*?—Yes, it might.

515. You got an opinion, on the 21st of April 1866, from Mr. (now Judge) Hannen, that it was contrary to the Act of Parliament to allow ladies to visit the prisoners?—Yes, we did.

516. You had seven ladies previously visiting?—Yes.

517. And you allowed them to continue their visits?—We did.

518. Do you consider that a violation of that opinion?—I can only state the facts.

519. But you told the Committee that your principle, and that of the justices, was to administer equity in the prison between Protestant and Catholic, and that having refused two Protestant ladies permission to visit, you placed the Roman Catholics on the same level, by refusing them; were not there seven Protestant ladies visiting at the time?—Yes.

520. And did they continue to visit?—Yes.

521. How long did the seven ladies, or any of them, continue to visit?—There are two of them continuing to visit now.

522. You told the Committee that there was an application made to you by Mr. White in 1868 for a schoolmistress, and you stated that you considered that she was to be a Bible reader?—Yes.

523. Whether she was to be one or the other there was an application made?—Yes, as Mr. White has stated.

524. The application was refused, I believe?—The application was refused.

525. Was that application in writing?—Yes.

526. By letter?—Yes.

527. And there is a record of it?—Yes, the letter is as follows: "The Rev. A. White presents his compliments to the visiting justices of the Westminster House of Correction, and would feel obliged if they would appoint 'Scripture reader' for the benefit of the Roman Catholic prisoners. As great numbers of these unfortunate Irish women cannot read, such a measure as the appointment of a Scripture reader would be of the greatest service to them, and tend much to their reformation."

528. W

528 Was the refusal made by letter?—Yes, was.

529. And there is a record of it?—Yes, the inute of the justices is as follows: "It was re-olved that Mr. White be informed that the oman Catholic prisoners have the same advan-ages as the Protestant prisoners, and therefore he visiting justices do not deem it advisable to omply with his request."

530. Now, you state that having refused in 868 the application made by Mr. White for a choolmistress or reader for these Roman Catho-cs, you allow by the present rules the Protes-ant schoolmistress to teach the Roman Catholics s well as the Protestant inmates, in that prison? -Yes, but separately.

531. You of course do not know what that Protestant teacher taught the Catholic inmates? -So far as I am informed, she confines herself o secular instruction, and gives no religious in-ruction.

532. But you do not know whether those in-tructions were carried out or not?—No, I do ot, beyond what I am told.

533. With respect to this correspondence, will ou inform the Committee of the resolution of he 21st of August 1869, to which that letter efers? —I have the minutes of the 21st of Au-ust 1869.

534. Have you the resolution that Mr. White, his letter of that date, refers to?—Yes; it is s follows: "Resolved, that a reply in the fol-wing form, enclosing a copy of the matron's eport of the 31st of July last, be sent to the ev. Alfred White," and then comes the letter hich is before you in print.

535. Now, by his letter of the 21st August 869, Mr. White makes a complaint of a specific ct, namely, that one of his people, called Mary lorgan, who was lying dangerously ill, and who ad entered herself as a Protestant, stated to m, on his ministration, that she had entered erself as a Protestant; and that another person, amed Margaret Parker, who is now in Brixton, ad also done so, in the hope of being employed the prison laundry, as Catholic prisoners were cluded from that place; your resolution does t refer to that specific complaint, does it?— o.

536. And the matron's report does not refer that specific complaint, with reference to ether Mary Morgan was entered as a Pro-stant, and whether she was or was not em-oyed in the laundry, if so entered, because she as really a Catholic?—It does not refer to it. will explain the facts with reference to Mary Morgan. They were these: when she came in-the prison for the first time (I cannot give you e date), she stated herself to be a Protestant. ot very long afterwards she was taken seriously , and sent to the infirmary, where she was sited, as a Protestant, by the chaplain, Mr. ine. As I understand, she told Mr. Hine at she was a Catholic, and that she had called rself a Protestant because she did not like ing sent to Parkhurst, in the Isle of Wight, here Roman Catholic convicts had been sent. communication was at once made to Mr. White, d from what Mr. White has said, she told n that she entered herself as a Protestant for e purpose of being put into the laundry. From at time forward she was treated as a Catholic. hat was what was reported to me.

537. Was the history of Margaret Parker similar to that of Mary Morgan?—I have for-gotten her history.

538. Lord Henley.] I wish to ask you a ques-tion as to the custom of the prison with respect to the Protestant chaplain seeing the Roman Ca-tholic prisoners, which we are told he does, on their first arrival in the prison; is that the case? —Every prisoner is seen by the chaplain, and when the chaplain is told by the prisoner that she is a Catholic, he ceases to have anything to say to her.

539. There is no sort of religious communica-tion going on between them, I believe?—None whatever.

540. Mr. Fowler.] I think I understand you to say that the chapel at which the Roman Ca-tholic minister performs service is large enough for the average number of Roman Catholic pri-soners in the prison?—Yes, I consider it to be so.

541. There may have been cases when the prison was exceptionally full, when it would have been unable to accommodate them, but as a rule it is large enough?—In this book which I have brought with me, appears the number of Catholic prisoners weekly in the prison; of these there is a per-centage (I do not think I am wrong when I say about 10 per cent.) who are on the sick-list, or who are under punishment, or for other reasons are not allowed or able to go to the Roman Ca-tholic place of worship. Upon these grounds, after having considered the subject very fully with my colleagues, we came to the conclusion that the accommodation which the Roman Ca-tholic place of worship would afford was sufficient to meet the average necessities of the case.

542. In the Return which has been presented to the House of Commons, I see that on the 20th of July last year there were 220 Roman Catholic prisoners; that was, I presume, a very excep-tional number?—Yes, that was a very large and exceptional number. The number of Roman Catholics was about 220, but at that time we were unusually full of prisoners.

543. But, on the average, the chapel is suffi-ciently large to accommodate all who wish to attend?—I think so; I say distinctly that it was with the intention of accommodating all those who might attend that it was constructed.

544. Viscount Enfield.] Is there a Bible wo-man or a Scripture reader in the Westminster Prison?—There is neither.

545. The propriety of having an additional schoolmistress was once discussed, was it not?— I remember the subject being discussed at one of our committee meetings.

546. But it came to no actual resolution; no action was taken upon it, I believe?—No.

547. Mr. Downing.] I think you stated to the Committee that in each of the cells of the Ro-man Catholic prisoners there was a "Garden of the Soul," and a "Douay Bible;" have those books been paid for out of the county rates?— Yes, they have.

548. Will you be good enough to read the application that was made on behalf of the Ro-man Catholic lady for permission to attend the prison?—Yes; it is dated 5th April 1867.

549. Who made that application? — Lord Enfield, and an answer was written by the clerk, quoting the opinion of Mr. Hannen. Lord Enfield's letter was as follows: "5th April 1867: Gentlemen, I have been requested by a Roman Catholic Lady, * * * to ask your permission for her to visit the Roman Catholic female prisoners at the House of Correction at Westminster, in company with" (another lady), "on whatever days and at such hours as may be consistent with the rules and regulations of the prison in question. I have the honour to be, gentlemen, your obedient servant, Enfield."

550. What was the answer Lord Enfield received?—"The visiting justices having taken into consideration the application contained in Lord Enfield's letter, it was resolved that a letter in reply be addressed to his Lordship as follows, namely:—'8th April 1867. My Lord, I am directed by the committee of visitors of the House of Correction at Westminster, to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 5th instant, asking permission for' (two ladies) 'to visit the Roman Catholic female prisoners there, and, in reply thereto, to inform you that the committee are not able to give the permission your Lordship has applied for. The subject of the admission of ladies to visit the prisoners was very fully considered by the committee about a year since, and the opinion of Mr. Hannen, the counsel of the Home Office, was obtained to ascertain whether the committee were justified by the Prison Act, 1865, to allow of such visits. That opinion was so decided, that although the committee did not deem it right to revoke the permission under which some ladies had for many years visited the prison, yet they were obliged to decline acceding to two new requests, similar to that now made by your Lordship. I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient servant, Charles P. Allen.'"

551. At that time were the seven ladies you mention visiting the prison?—They were on the prison list, and, more or less, attended.

552. One lady is dead since then, is she not?—I think so.

553. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Have you got a list of the things which the Roman Catholic minister stated to you were essential for the conduct of Catholic worship?—I have not, but I think I could procure it for you.

554. You drew a broad line between the things you thought fair and desirable, and the things you thought it was not desirable that the county should pay for?—We did.

555. Was the Protestant chaplain to provide anything out of his own pocket for the ministrations of his religion?—Nothing.

556. Was the garden work which you say was given as compensation for the loss of the laundry work, considered as such by the Catholic prisoners?—I was given to understand that such was the case.

557. Does your experience prove that that was a mistaken notion?—I am not aware that it was so.

558. But you have come to the conclusion that the laundry is considered a very desirable species of employment?—Throughout all the prisons in the country, laundry work is considered to be preferable to other employments.

559. Was that known to you at the time when the Catholic prisoners were not allowed to participate in the enjoyment of the laundry?—It was so patent that there could be no mistake about it; having been so long connected with prisons as I have, I can tell you that throughout the country laundry work is considered to be a privilege.

560. Therefore, it was taking away a privilege not to allow them to work in the laundry?—Yes, but compensating them in a measure, by allowing them to work in the garden.

561. When the justices came to the conclusion that that was not adequate compensation, they removed the prohibition, and allowed the Roman Catholics to work in the laundry?—No, they yielded to the desire of the Roman Catholic priest; as far as my memory serves me, it was done because it was his strong wish that we, as justices, should do that which he considered right towards his flock.

562. The justices yielded to the request of the Catholic priest, and then turned the Catholic priest out for making the request; was not that so?—By no means; certainly not. The one had nothing whatever to do with the other.

563. Was it not the case that Mr. White was turned out for having made known to the public that his requests had been refused?—The honourable gentleman will see the broad difference between the two circumstances.

564. I want to follow that up; he was dismissed for having made known to the public that his request had been refused?—Permission to attend was withdrawn; it is the same thing.

565. Was there any intimation given to Mr White when that resolution of the justices was sent to him, that it was a confidential communication?—No.

566. Had he, on the face of it, any reason to suppose that the visiting justices of Middlesex having come to a decision which he considered important to his co-religionists who are unhappily in prison, would object to their decision being made public?—No; there was no intention of concealment, and no idea of making it a confidential communication to Mr. White.

567. You did not consider him an officer of the prison, did you?—He was in that anomalous position, that some might consider him an officer and some might not; it would entirely depend upon what view might be taken of his position. I do not think that in the ordinary acceptation of the term he could be called an officer; that is to say, in my own experience I have never found a person in his position who was called an officer; it was an unusual and an exceptional position.

568. Mr. White was not wrong in considering himself not to be an officer?—He was, I think, right.

569. If he had been a salaried officer of the prison, he might have naturally supposed a communication from the prison authorities to be a confidential communication?—That I cannot speak to.

570. I will put the question in another form: if a gentleman connected as Mr. White was with the prison, not considering himself an officer, received a communication such as Mr. White received from the visiting justices, would it be unreasonable that he should suppose, not being an officer, that it was not a confidential communication, but one which he was at liberty to make public?—Irrespective of whether it was a confidential communication or not, it was considered by the justices so wrong in him to communicate to the public press what they had told him, that they considered it impossible they could work together, and that they must therefore dispense with his attendance.

571. You have stated to the Committee that one reason for refusing a Bible woman to Mr White was, that as there was no one for the Protestant Protestant prisoners, it was undesirable to appoint one for the Roman Catholics; do you think that the Protestant prisoners would have felt aggrieved if they had appointed one for the Roman Catholics?—The visiting justices do not take into consideration what the Protestant prisoners might think upon the subject.

572. Did the converse of this argument, as applied to the case of the chaplains, strike the visiting justices, namely, that as there was a separate chaplain appointed for the Protestants, it was desirable that there should be one for the Roman Catholics?—It is impossible for me to say what struck the visiting justices; if I was asked the question as a private individual giving his evidence, I should be able to answer your question, but I cannot answer for the justices.

573. You stated that the visiting justices did not consider it necessary to appoint a Roman Catholic reader, inasmuch as there was no Protestant one. I want to know whether it was upon the same or upon what grounds you considered the appointment of a salaried chaplain?—I cannot answer that question.

574. I may take it that you have no complaints to make with regard to the Protestant schoolmistress?—I have never heard of any.

575. With regard to the laundry question, however it may have affected the minds of the Roman Catholic prisoners, there was no intention of proselytising on the part of the visiting justices?—None at all; proselytising by such means in a prison is impossible.

576. Are you aware of there having been any crowd in the Roman Catholic chapel, or of prisoners finding any difficulty in obtaining accommodation there?—I have heard no complaints lately, although I have made inquiries.

577. Although evidence has been given that prisoners have been unable to obtain seats, that has not been officially brought before you?—Not lately. I should add what I do not think has been stated before, that on the Sundays, when there are two services, those prisoners who might be omitted from the morning service, would be taken to chapel for the afternoon service.

578. Who settles who are to go in the morning and who are to go in the afternoon?—The matron.

579. Is the same matron there now who was there in 1866?—Yes.

580. Was there any complaint made to you of the matron's address to the prisoners?—I do not know anything of that circumstance.

581. Are Roman Catholic warders specially told off to attend the Roman Catholic prisoners?—Yes, they are hired for that purpose as Roman Catholics.

582. You have received no complaints (excepting the general complaint relative to there being no salary) from the Roman Catholic priest or from other Roman Catholics, with regard to the administration of their religion, at present?—None whatever. With respect to the matter of payment, I have my own opinion upon the subject, but the visiting justices of Westminster House of Correction have not expressed that opinion.

583. Chairman.] You state to the Committee that the matron decides who are to attend the morning Roman Catholic service, and who are to attend the afternoon service; is it known to you that it is a rule of obligation from which they cannot shrink, that Catholics must attend morning service on Sundays?—I am unacquainted with the ceremonies of the Roman Catholic religion.

584. You stated a circumstance which struck me as being very remarkable, you say that the number of prisoners augment as you go back; can you account for that gradual diminution up to the present time; I would ask as to whether you would attribute it in any way to the beneficial ministrations of the chaplain?—Not in the least.

585. What do you attribute that diminution to?—It depends probably more upon the season than upon anything else.

586. The pressure of poverty, I suppose, during certain seasons?—Yes, partly so.

587. Are you strongly in favour of religious instruction for prisoners as a means to their reformation?—I am; but unhappily I have found from my own experience that it is scarcely effective; I question much the reformation of any prisoner of any sort, or either sex, being effected by any kind of religious teaching in prison.

588. Do you mean to say that if carried out to its fullest extent it would have no effect upon the prisoner's future conduct?—Having been connected with every description of prison since the year 1847, I maintain that practically no religious teaching in prison of any sort does affect the conduct of the prisoner when that prisoner goes out; at any rate exceptions to that rule are very rare.

589. Supposing a prisoner comes in ignorant of the truths of Christianity, would you think that grounding that prisoner in the truths of Christianity, and impressing upon him the moral obligations arising from that teaching, would have no effect upon the prisoner's future, when he goes out?—I think that the effect would be very little, and is scarcely to be appreciated, in consequence of the circumstances in which the prisoner is placed when he is released from prison; but on the other hand I should be very sorry indeed if it should be supposed that a person who has had my experience, should for a moment suggest that religious teaching should be done away with.

590. But, practically, you seem to consider that the religious ministrations of the clergyman are really useless, because they are unavailing?—Unhappily they are unavailing after discharge.

591. When you come to consider the whole of the costly apparatus for imparting religious instruction, it is almost a wrong to the ratepayers to provide for it, because it is useless and worthless, is that your opinion?—It is not worthless; it is not a wrong to the ratepayers; it is that which ought to be continued, though it does not produce the effect which one would wish upon discharged prisoners.

592. Why should it be continued?—I think it would be monstrous if you were to deny those prisoners attendance at church, and the ordinary ministrations that are given by clergymen.

593. But if all these are a practical mockery, and bear no fruit, why should you keep them up?—For the reasons I have given; you must give them instruction, you must give them religious teaching, and you must read the Bible to them, though the effect produced may be but very little afterwards.

594. You would continue it then in order to produce that minimum effect?—I would; it is worth while to produce any effect, however small it may be.

595. You

Captain D. O'Brien.
28 March 1870.

595. You are in favour of endeavouring to produce as much effect upon the Catholics as upon the Protestants?—Yes.

596. And to put them in a condition of perfect equality with one another?—Yes.

597. Do you not think that all prisoners, as Queen's subjects, whether Catholics, Jews, or whatever may be their creed, should be upon the same level?—Yes, I do; and I am bound to add, my experience is that where you get a Roman Catholic minister doing his duty judiciously in the prison he has greater control over the prisoners than the Protestant clergyman has.

598. Suppose, as in this case, that a number of these poor people come into the prison who have been neglected by their parents, and have fallen into crime from various temptations, and are there instructed in the truths of their religion by the Roman Catholic clergyman, do you not think that that may have a beneficial effect upon the future life of the prisoners?—That is what I question.

599. You question that as applied either to Protestants or Catholics?—Yes.

600. You say that a minimum good result might be produced?—Yes.

601. Ought you not to give the Roman Catholic clergyman the fullest access to the prisoners, and in fact induce him to occupy all his time, to produce something more than the minimum effect?—I would give him the fullest powers as to time and as to attention that he could ask, always provided that the discipline of the prison was carried on; I do not think there can be a doubt about the propriety of that.

602. But at the same time, do you not think that some longer time might be given to the Roman Catholic priest than is given to him, or than he can practically employ at the present moment for the purpose of teaching the Roman Catholic prisoners; I am referring to the House of Correction at Westminster, in the present instance?—I should not stint his time.

603. Then if you do not stint his time, ought not you to pay him?—I have no doubt whatever with respect to paying a Roman Catholic priest.

604. Is it your opinion that priests ought to be appointed on the prison staff, with salaries?—It is; I think that there should be an end put to the question of whether the priest is merely permitted to attend the prison, or whether he as an officer; he ought to be appointed in the usual way, as any other officer on the prison staff is appointed; and he ought to be paid fairly.

605. You consider that he ought to be an officer amenable to the prison authorities, and removable if he commits an offence against the rules?—Yes; he should be subject to all the rules and regulations laid down by the visiting justices, and sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

606. I want to ask you, with reference to one point; the authorities of the prison pay for wine for the Protestant service for communion on the Sunday, do they not?—Yes.

607. Has it come to the knowledge of the visiting justices that in the celebration of the Catholic divine service, wine is essential?—The visiting justices have never entered into that question.

608. Ought they not to enter into that question; do you think it is fair that a priest should not only get none of these necessaries, but should be out of pocket by purchasing them?—I will give you my own opinion; I think that all those articles that are given to the Protestant clergyman should be furnished liberally and freely to the Roman Catholic priest who performs those services.

609. With reference to Mr. Bond and Mr. White, you say you have no complaint to make of Mr. Bond, nor has he any complaint with you, and Mr. White has no complaint either, but is it not the fact that Mr. White's position was different from Mr. Bond's; that Mr. White, from one cause or another, had to undergo a regular uphill fight to procure that state of things which Mr. Bond now enjoys?—I cannot agree to the word "fight;" I am free to admit that he exerted himself honestly, fairly, and conscientiously to obtain certain things, and one by one those things were granted by the magistrates after full consideration and deliberation, and I think I may add, in a liberal and free spirit, as soon as the magistrates thought they were doing right in acceding to his requests.

610. Were you there at the time when Mr. White was only allowed to see one prisoner at a time, and when a cell in the jail was the only place where he could administer the Communion to the Catholic prisoners?—I was not; but I do not hesitate to say that that was a state of things that ought not to have existed.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain DONATUS O'BRIEN; further Examined.

Captain D. O'Brien.

31 March 1870.

611. Sir John Pakington.] I HAD not the opportunity of examining you on Monday last, and there are one or two questions I wish to put to you, in consequence of certain statements you made in your evidence; you stated that, in July last, a change was made in the arrangements which had the effect of allowing Roman Catholic women again to be employed in the laundry; I want to ask you what was the cause of that change?—I believe it to have been in consequence of the remonstrance which was made by the Catholic priest, Mr. White.

612. In consequence of Mr. White's remonstrance, the visiting justices, I presume from your answer, came to the conclusion that it was not just or fair to exclude the Roman Catholic women from the advantages, whatever they might be, of the laundry; that is the substance of your answer, I believe?—The visiting justices thought that it would be a fairer arrangement; that is the substance of my answer.

613. I presume, it would be a fairer arrangement, on the grounds which I have just stated?—Yes.

614. Under those circumstances, why were the Roman Catholic women excluded from the laundry, previously to July?—I think it will appear from my evidence, that the Roman Catholic prisoners had been excluded from the laundry in consequence of the matron having reported that their work in the laundry was interrupted by their being taken away for their religious duties, and that caused, so far as the Roman Catholic prisoners were concerned, a cessation of their labour, which was found to be inconvenient.

615. I believe the visiting justices considered, previously to July, that the interruption caused by the attendance of Roman Catholic prisoners at their religious duties was a good reason for their not going into the laundry; but subsequently to July, they decided that that interruption was not a sufficient cause?—Yes, that was so.

616. Did you consult the Roman Catholic chaplain with reference to whether the religious duties of the Roman Catholic women really did necessitate their leaving the laundry or not?—There was no consultation with him that I am aware of.

617. Are you aware that if any such consultation had taken place, the Roman Catholic chaplain could have told you that the religious duties could easily be arranged so as not to interrupt the work?—I did not go into that.

618. But you did not try that, did you?—We did not try that.

619. You made some very strong statements on Monday, which possessed greater weight than they would otherwise have done, on account of your long experience in prisons, to the effect that however right it may be to give religious instruction to prisoners, that religious instruction produces no good effect upon the prisoners?—I stated so, after release.

620. Upon that subject I want to put to you this further question: do you think it possible for anybody connected with the management of a prison really to judge what may be the effect of religious instruction upon the mind of a prisoner, after his release?—I think it would require long experience and considerable inquiry before anybody could come to a just conclusion upon the point; but, so far as I have been able to form an opinion, that opinion was given to you. In the Report of the Select Committee on Transportation, which sat in 1856, the subject was very fully gone into, and, as I think, exhausted. The subject created a great deal of discussion at the time throughout the country, and that discussion turned to a certain extent upon the evidence which I gave, which was of great length. I hold in my hand the Index to that Report, where the heads of my evidence are set down.

621. I think you will see that your answer does not quite meet my question; I ask you a question of a very general nature, whether you did not think it next to impossible for any human being to judge what might be, through future life, the effect upon the mind of a prisoner, of the religious instruction he had received?—As regards an individual it is certainly almost impossible.

622. Then I would only ask you, after that frank answer on your part, whether you do not think think it is somewhat dangerous to make a sweeping assertion to the effect that religious instruction produces no effect upon the minds of prisoners?—I did not intend to convey the idea that religious instruction produced no effect upon the minds of prisoners. I intended to convey the impression that the effect of the religious instruction did not last when those prisoners were discharged from the prison.

Captain D. O'Brien.

31 March 1870.

623. Have you ever been enabled to trace any number or any of those prisoners to the close of their lives, to see what the effect of the religious instruction has been?—I have no such data. My impression is a general impression, formed, especially as regards females, after having been the visiting director for many years of Brixton Prison, where female convicts of the worst description were confined.

624. Is your impression in any degree founded upon the fact that from most prisons, I presume from all, a considerable proportion of the prisoners come back again after repeated convictions?—A very great proportion of them do.

625. Is your opinion of the comparative uselessness of religious instruction founded upon that fact?—Not particularly so; but from inquiries which have been made at different times (but so long ago that I cannot tell you exactly what those inquiries were), and upon the recollection of circumstances which occurred more than four years ago.

626. There are a considerable proportion of prisoners from all gaols who do not come back again under subsequent convictions. I presume you have no means of judging what the effect of religious instruction may have been upon the minds of those prisoners?—No.

627. There is one other subject which I wish to touch upon; as I understood from the evidence of yourself and other gentlemen on Monday last, there have been repeated decisions on the part of the court of quarter sessions to give no salary whatever to the Roman Catholic chaplain; you, I think, are and have been for some time chairman of the visiting justices; will you tell me how many magistrates constitute your visiting committee?—Twelve.

628. Is it your habit as a committee ever to meet and discuss business collectively?—The committee meet once a week.

629. Upon those occasions, when you have so transacted business collectively, has the propriety of giving a salary to the Roman Catholic chaplain ever been discussed by your collective committee?—I can scarcely say that it has been discussed. It has been talked about, but no more; the subject has never come before the committee during the time that I have been connected with it, in a substantive form.

630. How long have you been on the Committee?—Since the beginning of 1866.

631. You are the chairman, are you not?—I am now in the second year of my chairmanship.

632. You have expressed your own opinion to be in favour of giving a salary to the Roman Catholic chaplain?—Such is my individual opinion, and I have expressed that opinion.

633. Under those circumstances how did it happen that you did not bring that question formally under the consideration of your brother magistrates in committee?—I did not think it my duty to bring forward every opinion that I might have held myself.

634. It is an important practical question as regards the management of prisons, is it not?—Doubtless.

635. Would it not be right for you as chairman of that body to ascertain how far all, or any of your brother magistrates, concurred with you upon that subject?—No, because their opinion would be simply a matter of opinion. The payment, or otherwise, of the priest, would depend upon the court.

636. Their opinion being, as you say, only a matter of opinion, was not it very desirable in the office which you held, that your brother magistrates should know what that opinion was?—No, I think not; on the contrary, I think as it is one of those subjects upon which men hold very strong opinions, unless there is some question practically before them, it is injudicious to raise a question which will undoubtedly bring out strong differences, and almost always produce angry discussions.

637. As chairman of that committee do you, or do you not, know what was the preponderating opinion of your colleagues; was it in favour of a salary to the Roman Catholic chaplain, or were they opposed to it?—I think that the opinions at one time would have been opposed to it, but the opinions lately would have been probably in favour of it. The committee is a fluctuating body; three members go off at every quarter sessions, and three new ones come on; therefore, what might be their collective opinion, so far as I am able to judge, or rather guess, at one time, would possibly not be their collective opinion at another time.

638. Supposing that you had at any time thought it your duty to take the opinion of your colleagues on the committee, and you had ascertained that the majority of the committee were in favour of a salary, and had, as chairman, made a representation to the court of quarter sessions in favour of granting a salary to the Roman Catholic chaplain, looking to the official position which you hold in connection with the management of that prison, do you not think that such a representation from the visiting body might have had a very considerable effect upon the decision of the court of quarter sessions?—I think it would, if that opinion had been unanimous, but I know that it was not unanimous. and, so far as I am concerned, as chairman, I am bound to obey any resolution that may be formed by the committee as a body.

639. Do you not think that a representation proceeding from the chairman and a majority of the committee ought to have, and probably would have, a considerable effect upon the decision of the court?—I think it would have a considerable effect upon several members of that court, but I am not prepared to say that it would have that effect upon the body of the court.

640. Whatever the effect might have been, you, at all events, did not try the experiment?—No.

641. You are a magistrate, I believe?—Yes.

642. As a magistrate, were you present in court at the time of either of those two discussions which we have heard of?—I think I must have been, but I do not remember the particulars.

643. Do you remember whether or not, upon either of those occasions, you, as one of the members of the court, and chairman of the visiting committee, expressed your own individual opinion in favour of giving a salary to the Roman Catholic chaplain?—I think not.

644. Yet

44. You were silent upon the subject?—I not think that the subject has come before the rt since I have been chairman of the West- ıster Committee. I am pretty sure it has not.
45. Were either of those discussions subse- nt to your being a member of the visiting ımittee?—Since my membership; yes.
46. You were present as a member of the rt, and a member of the visiting committee ɔn this subject was under discussion, but you not express any opinion upon it?—I have no ollection of having done so.
47. Since you have been connected with the ting committee have there been many oners in the House of Correction, with ɔect to whom it was within your knowledge they were neither Roman Catholics nor ıbers of the Church of England, but con- ɔed with other religious persuasions?—I can you no precise information upon that sub- ; it has been so, but to what extent I cannot

48. Have you ever had any applications made ou in your official position for the admission ıy Protestant minister to visit prisoners who ɔ Protestants, but not members of the Church ngland?—I do not remember any.
49. Chairman.] Do you remember being ent at a general meeting in 1868, when Mr. thall Laurie moved this resolution, "That ɔnsideration of the large number of Roman ıolic prisoners usually confined in the ddlesex House of Correction and Westminster ewell, whose religious instruction, according ıeir own persuasions, is dependent at present the gratuitous and voluntary services of ıan Catholic ministers, it be referred to the ɛctive committees of visiting justices of those ɔns to consider and report their opinions as ıe amount and mode of appropriation of a ɔnable remuneration to be paid, under the isions of the Prison Ministers Act, 1868, to an Catholic ministers officiating in these ns?"—I was present when that resolution proposed.
50. You voted for the motion in 1868?—I did.
51. Mr. O'Reilly.] Let me ask you a ques- first, with regard to the size of the room used Roman Catholic chapel; do you know what ize of it is, either by cubic space, or floor ?—No; but I can furnish that information e Committee.
52. Can you say what is the average per- ge of casual absentees, as I may call them, s to say, those who cannot attend the ser- —It varies from 10 to 15 per cent.; it is r over 10 per cent., as reported by the ɔn.
53. Then out of 170 prisoners, the Committee infer that there would be left something ɛen 150 and 155, who would be able to at- —Yes.
54. Do you consider that the chapel is well to accommodate 150 prisoners?—Amply; the intention of the magistrates to give ccommodation, and they might have given, ad been thought necessary, rather more ac- ɔdation than they did; the priest's room, as alled, is divided by a partition from what is the Roman Catholic chapel, and when it rst constructed there would have been no lty in running that partition a little more westward, so as to have given, if it had necessary, a few more seats.

655. You mentioned that six Roman Catholic warders were appointed specially, in consequence of there being Roman Catholic prisoners confined in the gaol?—Yes.
656. Will you inform the Committee when those six Roman Catholic warders were first appointed?—They were first appointed about two years ago.
657. Then am I right in concluding, that up to the time when this special provision for the Roman Catholic prisoners was first instituted by the justices two years ago, they had not considered it necessary to appoint any Roman Catholic warders?—No; there was certainly one Roman Catholic warder, but not appointed as such.
658. As I understand (you will correct me if I am not right), the justices refused permission for three things, I think: on the ground of legality, as I understand, in each instance, they have subsequently found reason to change that belief. In the first instance in 1866, when you were a member of the visiting justices, but not the chairman, the justices refused permission to the Roman Catholic priest to see more than one prisoner at a time, on the ground that they had not legally any power to order otherwise, but at a subsequent date, about a year later, they came to the conclusion they they had legally a power to permit him to see the prisoners collectively, and gave that permission?—That was so.
659. Then on the first application of the Roman Catholic priest to be allowed a boy to act as clerk for the religious services on Sunday, the justices refused absolutely, in writing, as you have mentioned in your evidence, to allow any boy?—I believe that is correct.
660. They refused that application on the ground that they could not legally grant the application, but subsequently they withdrew that refusal, and allowed a boy to be employed, subject to a limitation as to his age?—Yes.
661. In the third instance, the justices took a legal opinion with regard to permitting strangers to visit the prison, and that opinion of Mr. Hannen's having been that they had no power to permit such visitations, they refused all subsequent applications, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, on the ground of that opinion, but continued to give permission to certain persons to visit the prison, notwithstanding its alleged illegality, because they had been doing so before that opinion was given; am I right in saying that?—Yes, quite so.
662. Can you explain to the Committee, in the first instance, how the visiting justicesdiscovered that that which they had considered in 1866 to be illegal, was not illegal?—Yes; upon the question being raised, the opinion of Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Hannen were taken upon the subject, which opinion is entered upon the minutes; Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Hannen were of opinion that the magistrates could not legally allow the prisoners to be collected for worship; in consequence of this, certain gentlemen not on the Westminster Committee obtained the opinion of Sir William Bovill and Mr. Day, in November 1866; the two opinions were conflicting, and under those circumstances the authorities of the Coldbath Fields House of Correction submitted an opinion to Sir John Karslake and Sir Roundell Palmer; that opinion does not appear upon our minutes, because it was not asked for by the Westminster Visiting

Captain D. O'Brien.

Justices, but it came before the court. Sir Roundell Palmer's opinion and Sir John Karslake's opinion were directly opposite to the opinions of Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Mr. Hannen. Then the court came to the conclusion that Sir Roundell Palmer's opinion and Sir John Karslake's opinion ought to be acted upon, and in consequence of this, the magistrates of the Westminster House of Correction thought it would be well to proceed upon the latter opinion. That was the way they came to admit those prisoners to be seen collectively by the priest.

663. Then can you explain to the Committee the change of opinion upon the part of the justices with regard to permitting a boy to officiate as clerk to the services?—At first the application was refused upon a discussion in the committee and upon a resolution of the visiting justices; it was afterwards brought forward, reconsidered, and the opposite conclusion was come to by a majority of the committee. I do not think that at that time I was on the committee. The visiting justices, however, having altered their opinion, agreed that a clerk or acolyte should be admitted.

664. But am I right in understanding that in this case neither their original opinion, nor their altered opinion, was founded expressly upon any legal opinion given to them as in the other case?—As well as I recollect it was founded upon their conception of the law.

665. Then with regard to permitting visitors; the visiting justices took the opinion of Mr. Hannen that they could not legally allow visitors to visit the prison?—They did.

666. But the visiting justices continued to act illegally by allowing visitors to visit the prison; am I right in that?—Yes. I think I mentioned before that they acted prospectively. A resolution was passed to the effect that it should not be done again, and it has not been done again.

667. Am I right in saying that the visiting justices passed a resolution that, for the future, leave should not be given to other persons, but that their action was not retrospective with reference to the visits of persons to whom they had already given leave?—Yes, that was so.

668. Was there anything in Mr. Hannen's opinion to enable the visiting justices to distinguish between the legality of the visiting in the case of A., who gets permission, after the opinion, to visit the prison, and that of B., who has obtained leave to visit the prison before the opinion is taken?—We raised no such question; leave was given, in fact, as a matter of sentiment; only two of those visitors now remain.

669. With regard to the laundry question, it has been stated that the objection to the Roman Catholics working in the laundry was, that they would be called away from their work when the clergyman wished to see them to give them instruction?—It was so represented to us by the matron.

670. Will you inform the Committee what is done in the case of the Protestant prisoners when the chaplain wishes to see them?—The arrangements are such that they do not interfere with the work. The Protestant chaplain sees about 30 prisoners individually, daily, in his own room, and the priest sees about 25 collectively.

671. If any of those 30 prisoners whom the chaplain wishes to see individually is a prisoner employed in the laundry, how does it happen that she will never be taken from her work, or that the laundry work will not be interfered with in that case?—I beg to refer you for details to the matron.

672. You mentioned, in answer to a question put by an honourable Member on the last sitting, that the exclusion of the Roman Catholic prisoners from the laundry could not possibly have a proselytising tendency, but you also mentioned that the laundry work was decidedly the work preferred by the prisoners, and which they would most seek for?—Yes, universally so.

673. It is also the fact, I believe, that a considerable proportion of prisoners in this prison are persons who have been there more than once, having been re-committed?—Several of them have unhappily re-committed a great many times.

674. In the case of a prisoner who had entered herself on one occasion as a Roman Catholic, and who had ascertained whilst in the prison that she would not be admitted to the laundry work because she was a Roman Catholic, if she left the prison and was re-committed again, do you think it would be impossible that her knowledge of the fact that if on the second occasion she entered herself as a Roman Catholic she would be excluded from the most desirable work, could have a proselytising tendency upon her mind?—I should say, certainly not, it would be impossible she will go to the laundry because she likes the work, and gets some beer or extra cocoa for doing the work, but that has nothing whatever to do with submit, with her religion one way or the other; in fact, there is very little religion amongst them.

675. Unhappily, I quite understand that would not affect the prisoner's religious belief the slightest; what I want to know is this, may it not possibly have an influence in inducing her to register herself on the second occasion as a Protestant, in order to get the work which she preferred, and the beer which she would get?—Yes, it is quite likely.

676. And therefore, as far as a Catholic registering herself as a Protestant may be considered a proselytising result, in your opinion that may be the result?—Pardon me for saying that I do not think the term "proselytising" can be connected with the question at all.

677. But I am right in thinking that it may have the result of making a Catholic prisoner subsequently register herself as a Protestant?—Yes, she might call herself so.

678. With regard to the dismissal of the Reverend Mr. White, in answer to a question in your last examination, you stated that it was considered by the justices so wrong in him to communicate to the public press what they had told him, irrespective of whether it was a confidential communication or not, that they considered it impossible they could work together; am I right in considering then, that the ground the justices took was that whether the Reverend Mr. White was an officer of the prison, or not, and whether the communication which was made to him, was a confidential communication or not, it was wrong in him to communicate anything which they told him to the public press?—Yes; that was the ground upon which they withdrew their permission for his attendance.

679. Then they would have considered it wrong for the Roman Catholic priest who visits the prisoners there, and being refused, for instance, permission to see the prisoners collectively, to administer the Sacrament to them, or to give them any other religious instruction, to con-ate that fact to the public press?—They ught so, and I think so.

80. Do you hold that it would not be right the public to get any knowledge of the adistration of the prison in such a way?—Not such a way.

81. May I ask how you would suggest that public could get any information with regard the rules and regulations, and administration the prison, in any other way than in such a as this?—There are various ways in which t information could be obtained.

82. Will you mention them?—The priest ght not to publish; there are a variety of ways ich it is not necessary for me to particularise, which any subject of that sort does come before public; assume that it was not a religious ject, I say that any officer, or visitor attending, o, on a disputed question arising, at once puts self into communication with the press, and olishes the matter, be it in a prison, or in any er department, either municipal or connected h the State, is wrong in doing so; and it is ossible that the magistrates can carry on their ies fairly and reasonably, if one of their cials is at once to rush into print, and state the public what has, or what has not been ne.

83. In your last answer you say that you uld consider it wrong for an officer, or an official rush into print; but your first answer was to effect that you would consider it wrong for person in the position of a visiting clergyman not an officer of the prison, to communicate facts with regard to that prison to the public; you adhere to that statement?—I do; I think is wrong in making an unauthorised communion to the public.

84. You have been a magistrate of Middlesex how many years?—Since the middle of 1865. ft Her Majesty's service in 1864, and became agistrate in 1865.

85. Would you inform the Committee, from r knowledge of the whole subject, what chance e is of any Roman Catholic chaplain being ointed with an adequate salary to the Middle- Prisons if the state of the law be left as it is , entirely optional upon that question?—blic opinion is going on so fast in this matter I have no doubt before very long it will be ded to; it was only so recently as when Lord merston was Secretary of State for the Home partment that he could not get from the House Commons 50*l.* to pay the Roman Catholic st at Millbank. Public opinion ran against , and strong as he was in the House, his pro- l was rejected, and that 50*l.* a year was refused. wever, public opinion has gone on steadily ad- cing in the opposite direction, and I have no bt that it will go on steadily advancing in the e direction, so that before very long we shall that even the law as regards Roman Catholic sts will be so amended that they will be paid.

86. Even in Middlesex, that is my point?—n in Middlesex.

87. Am I right in thinking that it is conrably more than 15 years since the vote of was rejected in the House of Commons?—I k it is about 16 years ago.

88. And you think that public opinion will inue to progress in the same direction at t something like the same pace?—I do.

89. Mr. Holt.] I suppose that in the event ny lady visitors, allowed by the justices to visit within the prison, acting as Mr. White did with reference to any communication which passed between them and the visiting justices, you would think them equally culpable, and would object to their continuing to visit the prison?—I should not think them culpable, because there is no culpability in it; but I should for one, certainly, so far as my individual vote went, refuse to allow them to come in again.

690. If not culpable, it would be equally objectionable on their part?—It would.

691. Will you tell the Committee whether there are any special regulations in your gaol affecting Roman Catholics, which do not apply to Protestants?—Will you define more distinctly what you mean?

692. With reference to books from the library, are there any privileges given to Protestants which would not be given to Roman Catholics?—None in that respect.

693. That is to say, Roman Catholics have as free access to the library to get what books they please, as the Protestants?—Roman Catholics do not select their books, but the priests select them for them, and any reasonable application that is made is never refused; for instance, if a woman wishes to have a book, she speaks to the priest, and she gets it if he thinks it a fit book. Those books are kept apart from the Protestant books.

694. Under what regulations are the Protestant prisoners supplied with books?—In the same way, by application to the chaplain.

695. Mr. Synan.] My honourable friend asked you whether your lady visitors would be dismissed if they acted as Mr. White did; do you consider the lady visitor, whose visit was illegal, and declared illegal by Mr. Hannen, to stand in the same relation to the prison as Mr. White, the chaplain, whose appointment was legal?—Pardon me if I say that I did not state that the visitor would be dismissed. I gave it as my individual opinion, and I added that if my vote were taken upon the point, I would vote for her not being re-admitted.

696. Will you answer this question; do you consider the lady visitors and the Roman Catholic priest to stand in the same relation in the prison, notwithstanding that the visiting of the one was illegal, and the visiting of the other pronounced legal?—If I understand the honourable Member's question rightly, so far as my opinion goes, there is no analogy between the two.

697. You do not consider that they stand in the same relation in the prison?—No; inasmuch as one is a lady visitor, and the other is a priest.

698. Was not the visiting of the one declared by Mr. Hannen to be illegal?—As regards the lady visitors, it was.

699. And was not the attendance of Mr. White under the Act of Parliament, and sanctioned by the visiting justices, legal?—That was legal.

700. Therefore, there was no analogy whatsoever between the two?—No.

701. You were asked whether there were any special regulations with regard to the Roman Catholics, and you answered that there were no special privileges with referenee to the library given to the Protestant, any more than to the Roman Catholic prisoners; are there any special privileges in any way allowed to the Protestant prisoners?—1 do not think there are.

702. Except the laundry?—That distinction does not prevail now; that has been all settled.

Captain D. O'Brien.

31 March 1870.

703. I am speaking of the time when there was an exception made with regard to the laundry?—Then there was that difference.

704. In answer to my question on the last sitting, when I asked you whether Mr. White had made an application for a schoolmistress, you stated, that you thought it was for a Scripture reader that he made the application?—My reply was altogether in reference to the Scripture reader. With reference to the schoolmistress, I do not recollect that I said anything particular; I may have done so. Mr. White did apply for a schoolmistress in 1867.

705. And he was refused?—He was refused.

706. And that is the letter of refusal, in which no cause is assigned for that refusal (handing a paper to the Witness)?—Yes.

707. It is dated the 14th of March 1868, when he applied for a clerk; now, you mentioned something about the size of the boy; all the objection was to the size of the boy, was it not?—That was when the boy, or the young man came, he was objected to in consequence of his size, he was too big in fact, considering it was a female prison.

708. Was not the first refusal absolute, and without any reference to any condition?—Yes; and you will find, in the second page, that the next application was refused in consequence of the boy's size.

709. If you read the resolution, you will see that it was to refuse the application absolutely?—The first application was refused absolutely.

710. The application for a Scripture reader was the subsequent application of the 15th of May 1869?—It was.

711. And that application was refused?—It was.

712. Mr. Guest.] You told the Committee that six Roman Catholic warders were appointed?—Yes.

713. Were there any special reasons given why they should be appointed?—They were appointed, in order to attend solely upon the Roman Catholic prisoners.

714. Were there any reasons given why Protestant warders were incompetent to attend upon Roman Catholic prisoners?—There was no question of competency or incompetency in the matter, but it arose from a feeling that it would be better to have Roman Catholic than Protestant warders for the Roman Catholic prisoners. I did not join in that opinion myself.

715. To attend in the chapel?—To attend in the chapel; it was chiefly on account of that.

716. Were the Roman Catholic warders specially told off to attend upon the Roman Catholic prisoners?—Specially.

717. And as far as possible the Protestant warders are not told off to attend the Roman Catholics?—That is so.

718. I understood you to state that one of the reasons for prisoners liking the laundry was, that they got a little more beer?—They have a privilege of some sort; I thought it was beer; in some places they do get beer, but here, I am informed, cocoa is given to them.

719. Is it not the case in all prisons that the work of the laundry is preferred, independently of those reasons, to other work?—All persons who have been concerned in the inspection of prisons well know that the laundry is a favourite place for prisoners. In the first place, the work is not so monotonous as the ordinary work; secondly, the prisoners always get a little more allowance, because it is considered that the work is so severe that it requires something in the nature of support or stimulus to enable them to do it. Consequently, it is generally the best-conducted prisoners, and those who have been longest in the prison, who are allowed to be there.

720. When the question has arisen at your meetings concerning the payment of Roman Catholic chaplains, has any particular scheme been advanced by which they should be paid that you are aware of?—I am not aware of any particular scheme having been advanced; but speaking as an individual, and not as the chairman of the committee, I may say that I have formed my own ideas of what that remuneration might be.

721. Have you any objection to state to the Committee what your views are upon that point?—None whatever. It appears to me that, as a basis, 10 s. per head per annum might be fairly taken as an average throughout the year for the payment of the priest; but, as in small prisons that would give a very insignificant sum, I would suggest a minimum salary of 15 l. a year, with travelling expenses, say at the rate of about 3*d.* a mile. When, therefore, the number of prisoners of the Roman Catholic persuasion exceeded the number that would give the amount of 15 l. a year, I think it would be fair to pay them at the rate, as I said before, of 10 s. per head. I think I have heard that in some prisons that is done, but I am not sure. In the Government prisons there is a scale laid down, and I venture to refer the Committee to that scale, which I have no doubt will be found a just one.

722. Are you aware whether the opinion which you have now given to the Committee is shared by your brother magistrates?—I never discussed the matter with them.

723. Simply the broad question as to whether or not the Roman Catholic priest should be paid, and not the manner in which he should be paid, has been discussed?—Yes.

724. Is that the principle upon which the Protestant minister is paid in the prison?—No.

725. He receives a lump sum?—There is no uniform system of payment to the chaplains throughout the country; some get more, and some get less.

726. I see here in the Return, that in Tothill Fields Prison the Protestant minister is paid 410 l. per annum; according to your scheme the Roman Catholic priest would be paid 110 l.; do you think that that would be a fair way of remunerating the Roman Catholic priest who would only have about one-fourth of the salary that the Protestant chaplain would have, while he would have to provide for the spiritual welfare of nearly half as many prisoners as the Protestant chaplain?—I think it would be a fair remuneration; I have never taken into consideration the relative duties or proportions of the two.

727. You appear to have been in favour of the payment of the Roman Catholic priest?—Yes.

728. I suppose on principles of equality you would consider it right that equal justice should be meted out to both?—I have not taken the question of payment into consideration as regards any circumstances but those of the priest himself; he has certain duties to perform, and ought to be paid fairly for performing those duties, and upon no other consideration have I regarded the question.

729. You do not consider that it would be advisable to pay the Protestant clergyman upon the same scale as you would the Roman Catholic chaplain?—I would not disturb the present arrangements as regards the payment of the Protestant clergyman.

730. Mr. Downing.] With regard to the warders, will you inform the Committee how many warders there are in the prison altogether?—I cannot tell you off-hand; there are a great many.

731. You stated that the six Roman Catholic warders were employed, as I understand, in the chapel?—Chiefly for the chapel; that was the main reason for their being appointed.

732. Will you tell the Committee what are their duties in the chapel?—Their duty is to supervise the prisoners, and to see that no irregularities take place.

733. During service?—During service.

734. I may take it that it is a very sufficient reason for appointing Roman Catholic warders, that they should be present at the Roman Catholic service instead of Protestants?—Yes, that was deemed a sufficient reason.

735. You stated just now that you regarded the payment of the priest apart from any other consideration than that of his duties, and you stated to an honourable Member near me that you thought it fair to pay the Protestant chaplain 410 l. a year, and the Roman Catholic priest but 110 l.; that is what you have stated, is it not?—I have said so. The chaplain at Westminster has been there above 30 years, I think 35 years, and a good deal of his salary is due to length of service, but I cannot give you the particulars.

736. That would qualify your answer, then; because the Protestant chaplain of this gaol has been for a great many years an officer of the gaol; you would consider for that reason that he was entitled to a larger salary than an ordinary person?—Yes.

737. Then you do qualify the answer you give, so far?—Yes, I do.

738. But suppose that he had been a chaplain who had come in within the last 12 months, would you then say that you would pay him 410 l. for attending to 493 prisoners, and only pay the Roman Catholic chaplain 110 l. for attending to 220 prisoners?—I have never given any consideration to the relative payment of the two.

739. Do you know what the duties of the Roman Catholic priest would be who attends to his duty in a prison where there were 220 Roman Catholic prisoners?—But very imperfectly. I never make it my business to inquire what his duties are, or by inquiry to interfere in the slightest degree with the way that the Roman Catholic clergyman carries on his duties.

740. I daresay, as chairman of this visiting committee, you are aware that the Roman Catholic priest is always exceedingly attentive to his duties in the prison?—Yes, beyond a doubt.

741. Are you aware that he visits the prison generally every day?—Very nearly every day. The number of days that he visits is reported to us weekly.

742. Will you allow me to ask you what would be that state of circumstances in which you conceive that 15 l. a year would be a fair remuneration to a gentleman, that is about 10 d. a day, you understand?—I say that there are cases where there may be in a prison only two, or three, or four Roman Catholics, and I consider that if a priest has to visit them he should have but a minimum remuneration of 15 l. a year.

743. That would depend upon so very small a number as four or five being in a gaol?—At any rate, very few.

744. I value your opinion very highly, and I am sure the Committee do so, too; will you be good enough to fix the minimum number to which that sum should apply?—Let me take what Huntingdon Gaol was when I was Inspector of Prisons for that district. I think that there were not above three or four Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison. I would give the gentleman who came to visit them some remuneration, but I think that if I had been one of the visiting justices there and had to pay a Roman Catholic clergyman more than 15 l. a year for that duty I should consider that I was paying him more than I was justified in taking out of the pockets of the ratepayers, but that result must be a matter to be decided altogether by the visiting justices of each particular prison.

745. Would you be very much surprised to hear that in Ireland, Protestant clergymen are appointed with a salary where there has not been a Protestant in the Poor Law Union for years, and that by Catholic guardians?—Since the time of the famine I have known so little of Ireland that I am not able to say.

746. Would you be surprised to hear that?—I should not be surprised to hear it, if you say so.

747. You have just now said that public opinion was growing in favour of the Roman Catholic priests?—Yes, it is.

748. And I take it for granted, you would say that legislation ought to follow very quickly upon public opinion?—No doubt, and more than that. I do not think that in this particular case, without legislation you will carry the point I have advocated.

749. I find that at this meeting in 1868 there was a majority of 14 against the motion of Mr. Laurie; that is to say, against giving a salary; are you not aware that a meeting has been since held, in 1869?—I really do not remember it.

750. Lord Henley.] I want to ask you one question with reference to this large number of persons who are entered as Protestants; do prisoners often, when asked their religion on entering the prison, say that they are Wesleyans or Baptists, or any other different sect of Protestants?—Yes, and they are registered as such.

751. Are they registered under the head of Baptists or Wesleyans?—Yes, they are.

752. And can you say why this return puts them down merely as "Protestants"?—It is the usual term that is made use of throughout the country. Those prisoners who are Roman Catholics are put down as Roman Catholics, and those who are not are put down as of the Church of England, excepting in the cases of Jews, or Lutherans, and so on.

753. But those who enter themselves as Baptists or Wesleyans are not allowed any difference of teaching from the remainder of the Protestants; all the Protestants are taught together by the same chaplain; is not that so?—Yes.

754. There are no ministers from the other denominations allowed to come into the prison at all?—

Captain D. O'Brien.

31 March 1870

all?—Unless under peculiar circumstances, when they are called for, but there is no machinery for their being permitted.

755. There is no allowance made for them?—No.

756. No payment for their services?—None.

757. Do you remember any case in which, for instance, Baptist ministers have been asked for?—Yes; there have been cases during the time that I have been connected with prisons.

758. Did they visit many of the prisoners, or only isolated cases?—They visited the cases which they had been specially asked to attend.

759. But not to teach the prisoners collectively in any number?—Never.

760. And never held any services in the chapel?—Never.

761. In the scale you have suggested for the payment of the Roman Catholic chaplains, as compared with the amount paid to the Protestant chaplain, did you take into consideration the fact that the Roman Catholic system requires a much closer attendance upon each individual prisoner than the Protestant system?—I really did not; I do not know what the Roman Catholics do, and I have carefully avoided coming to any knowledge of the subject.

762. Therefore you cannot say whether it is so or not; but would you not think that the necessity for confession, for instance, and the other services of their church, would make their duties more severe, and take up more time and more pains than the duties of the Protestant chaplain would, who could address his audience collectively?—Yes, the systems are totally different, I know. At Millbank, the Roman Catholic clergyman has very hard work.

763. But now, if you were to make a fresh plan, would you not be inclined to put the Roman Catholic chaplain, in point of payment, upon an equality with the Protestant chaplain?—I would not.

764. Why?—It is difficult to say why, but such is my conviction.

765. I should very much prefer, if you could give the Committee your reasons?—I rely very much on the established religion of the country, in which we are; the constituted religion of the state is Protestant, and, therefore, if there is to be an establishment, I would not put any clergyman of any other denomination on the same footing as the Protestant clergyman. In Scotland, where I was Inspector of Prisons for a short time, I found the same thing, and from what I saw there, I should not be disposed to place a visiting clergyman of the Episcopal Church on the same footing as I should a minister of the Established Church of Scotland.

766. And you would make your payment to the minister according to the fact of whether his church happened to be the Established Church of the country, or not?—Pardon me; I said I would pay the gentleman who came to do the duty in respect of what he himself did, and not with reference to any other denomination.

767. But I understand you to say that the scale upon which those ministers should be paid, should depend upon whether their church was the Established Church of the country or not?—I meant to imply, that I would not put the others on general terms of equality in the prison, with a minister of the Established Church; I would treat them with respect only to their own congregations; I do not see in the slightest degree why one should be considered with reference to the other; and more than that, I think if you treat them otherwise, you may bring them injuriously into collision with each other, whereas if you keep them apart, each to look after his own flock, the management will be better, the discipline will be better, and the whole arrangement will work better and more amicably, and more for the welfare of the prisoners.

768. You assign no further reason for the difference of the scale upon which you would pay these various chaplains; you say you would pay the Catholic and Protestant chaplains on a totally different scale, and you give no further reason than that the one is a minister of the Established Church of the country, while the other is not?—What I meant to imply, and what I think I did show, was, that I would treat each minister according to his duties, his own flock, and his own position, and nothing else; I never did, and never will, as long as I have anything to do with magistrates' business, bring men together, so that there shall be any differences of opinion, or anything that can lead to the expression of difference of opinion on religious subjects.

769. You are rather diverging from the question which I wished to put; here the Protestant chaplain is paid at the rate of nearly 1 l. per head, and your proposal is, that the Catholic chaplain should be paid at the rate of 10 s. a head down to a certain minimum point?—That is what I have stated as my own individual opinion.

770. You can give no other reason why you make that difference in the scale, but that the one is a minister of the Established Church, and the other is not?—I think not.

771. Mr. Talbot.] An honourable Member on the other side of the table, asked you a question about the way of making certain facts public; what, in your opinion, would be the best way if any officer of the prison felt himself aggrieved, for him to obtain redress; would it not be your opinion, looking to your experience in public matters, that the proper course would be for any officer of any establishment to make his complaint to the head of that establishment?—No doubt.

772. That the Committee may take as a general proposition?—No doubt.

773. Following that out, would it not be the right way for an officer of a prison to address his complaint first of all to the visiting justices, and if he failed to get redress from them, then to the court of quarter sessions, and if he failed to get redress from them, then to apply to the Home Office?—That is the course that any officer should pursue.

774. With regard to religious instruction, my right honourable friend asked you some questions upon some startling evidence which you seemed to have given on Monday, when I was not here; I cannot help thinking it might be satisfactory to you to qualify that evidence to some extent; you stated, in answer to question 588, "I maintain that, practically, no religious teaching of any sort does affect the conduct of the prisoner, when that prisoner goes out; exceptions to that rule are very rare;" am I to understand that you would say that of every class of prisoner, or would you wish to confine that remark to hardened and habitual offenders?—Chiefly to hardened and habitual offenders, but, unhappily, it will go much further; the exceptions that I alluded to were undoubtedly those who were not hardened and habitual offenders.

offenders. I stated in my examination before the Committee upon Transportation in 1856 (I am quoting from the Index), "Great difficulties in the way of the employment of female convicts when discharged in this country. Their reformation is, practically, almost impossible." I have the same observation to make with regard to the greater number of the women that come into our gaols; it is a remarkable fact, that of the women who are twice convicted, half of them are ten times convicted and upwards, as will be found by reference to the tables of the Home Office, generally called "Redgrave's" tables, which were published about three years' ago.

775. Following the remark which my right honourable friend made to you in the course of your examination, there is a large proportion of prisoners who do not come a second time to prison, and of that large number, I presume the great proportion are young persons. Is it not your opinion, from your experience (I do not wish to lead you to form an opinion contrary to your honest conviction), that a large number of that class of young persons who are committed to prison once, and never reappear, may have been materially affected by the religious instruction they have received in the prison?—Unhappily no. The majority of those who come to us are young; but they are hardened in vice, and they come again and again; those who are convicted for the first time, but who may turn out well afterwards are for the most part middle-aged women.

776. I think you stated that you had been an inspector of prisons? — I was an inspector of prisons for Scotland, and for the Midland Counties.

777. Is it the practice in other counties besides Middlesex to employ Roman Catholic wardens for Roman Catholic prisoners?—It is the case here and there, but I do not think it was generally done.

778. Do you think it is a desirable practice? —It is a convenient practice in some respects; but I am not quite sure, were I to have the management of prisons, as I had before, that I would have Roman Catholic officers and Protestant officers in the same establishments. In the management of Pentonville, and Millbank, and Brixton prisons, and at Parkhurst, I disliked having warders of different persuasions, not as regarded the prisoners, because the Catholic warders and the Protestant warders will treat their prisoners, whether Catholic or Protestant, equally well, but it will happen that they begin to discuss matters among themselves, which leads to formation of parties, and to discord, and consequently to an interference with the general maintenance of good order.

779. Have you ever heard of any complaints in cases where all the prisoners are under the charge and control of warders presumed to belong to the Established Church, that those warders have interfered with the Roman Catholic prisoners?—I have never heard such a complaint.

780. You have been pressed a good deal about the question of the relative payment to the chaplains; I put it in this way to you; the honourable gentleman near me, and the noble lord next to him, asked you whether you considered the scale of payment for the Roman Catholic chaplain, which you put at about 10 s. a head, was a fair and liberal scale, whilst you paid the Protestant chaplain 1 l. a head; is it the usual plan to estimate salaries at so much a head?—No.

781. Then you have a plan by which you estimate salaries at so much a head?—I think the average number of prisoners is a fair basis upon which to compute the salaries of superior officers.

782. You not only know what your own plan is, but you have had experience of the plans adopted by public bodies, such as the quarter sessions and visiting justices; have you ever heard of such a plan being proposed, or acted upon, or carried out, as paying such officers as chaplains, warders, governors, and surgeons at so much a head?—Yes; in some of the smaller prisons in the Midland districts that was the way in which some of those officers were paid.

783. Then with regard to the position which a chaplain belonging to the Church of England occupies in a prison, as compared with the position which other religious officers or ministers occupy, is it not your opinion that the chaplain of the Church of England is one of the officers of the establishment?—Yes, it is.

784. Would the ministers of other religious denominations be officers of the establishment? —I recommended, when I last had the honour of being examined by you, that the Catholic minister should be appointed an established and recognised officer of the establishment.

785. But as the practice now is, are those other ministers, officers of the establishment or not?—Permit me to say, that that was a question very strongly pressed upon me before, and I gave a guarded answer to it. Some persons regard them as officers of the establishment, I do not; but, at all events, there was a diversity of opinion upon the point, and as I think it is a matter more of definition of words than of real importance, it would prevent anything like mistakes being made upon the subject, to make the Catholic priest an officer of the prison.

786. But at the present time he is not an officer?—He is a permissive.

787. Am I right in saying that it is not the usual custom of the visiting justices to look upon ministers other than the chaplains as officers of gaols?—That is so.

788. That would be the reason for the difference in the payment of the chaplain and the ministers of other denominations, who might be allowed to visit the prisoners?—It would not weigh in my mind, inasmuch as I would pay the gentleman according to what he does in any capacity he might fill, totally irrespective of other considerations.

789. Taking it upon that ground, is it not the fact that the chaplain of the Church of England, as long as the Church of England is the established religion of the country, is in most prisons an officer of the establishment who is bound to give as much time as the visiting justices require? —Yes.

790. But the Roman Catholic clergy and other ministers come in to visit certain prisoners at their request, and the visiting justices do not lay down what time they shall attend at the prison?—That is so.

791. Would that be a reasonable cause for a difference between the scale of payment for the Church of England chaplain, and for members of the Dissenting bodies?—No doubt, it would weigh with the magistrates.

792. But would it not be a reasonable ground for the difference?—Yes, I think it would.

Captain D. O'Brien.
31 March 1870.

793. Then the Committee may infer that the payments to other ministers than those of the Church of England are in the nature of gratuities, and not salaries?—Yes; any payment made to them would be in the nature of gratuities, and not of salaries.

794. Nobody would imagine that a gratuity should be paid in the same way as a salary?—No.

795. One of the honourable Members of the Committee asked, with reference to the proportion of Protestant dissenters, the proportion of Protestant dissenters in prison is very small, is it not?—I believe it is larger than what is usually supposed; but a great many of the Protestant dissenters put in their names as of the Church of England, when in fact they are not so; but according to the returns it is as you state.

796. I meant rather to ask you, whether it was not in your experience the fact, that Dissenters as a rule, excluding the Roman Catholics from the question, are not numerous in the lowest class of society?—I cannot tell you that.

797. Your experience of prisons would rather lead you to suppose, would it not, that Dissenters are not numerous amongst the criminal class; that is to say, the class who generally fill the prisons?—I do not think that they are so numerous as those of the Church of England, certainly.

798. Is it not also the fact that persons who have never been brought up in any religion whatever, as long as the Church of England is the established religion of the country, call themselves, or are called, for purposes of public convenience, members of the Church of England?—Yes.

799. Therefore it is not likely that any large number of persons would ask for the services of a dissenting minister?—That is so.

800. If they did ask for such services would they be refused, in the Westminster prison, for example?—If any prisoner, who was ill, wished to see a minister of his own denomination such minister would be sent for.

801. Have you ever known a case in which, on any prisoner asking for the religious ministrations of a minister of his own denomination, that request has been refused?—I think not.

802. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] In answer to my honourable friend, you gave the Committee what you considered the proper course of appeal on the part of an officer of a prison having to complain, first to the visiting justices, then to the court of quarter sessions, and then to the Home Office; in the case of a Roman Catholic priest not considering himself, and not being considered an officer of the prison, is it not possible that that course might not present itself to his mind as the only legitimate way of making an appeal?—It is quite possible, and if a Roman Catholic priest was to ask my advice as to what he should do, I should recommend him to appeal to the quarter sessions, and finally to the Home Secretary; there is no rule about it.

803. Is it not your wish in desiring to give those gentlemen salaries that they should, in fact, become officers of the prison?—Yes.

804. And if they were officers of the prison, they would be brought, in your opinion, into more satisfactory communication with the prison authorities, and would be more likely to ask your advice, and to follow that course of appeal which you think is the proper one?—I think so.

805. The Catholic ministers would feel that their status was recognised, and altogether they would feel that their position in regard to themselves, and the authorities of the prison, was more satisfactory?—It would be so both to themselves and to the visiting justices.

806. With regard to paying the Roman Catholic chaplain, it is your opinion that whatever minister of whatever persuasion does really work in a prison should be paid fairly according to the work that he does?—It is.

807. Although you propose one particular scale you would not bind yourself to that; you would not wish to be bound by that, but you would pay the labourer according to his work?—I would.

808. Chairman.] You would, I presume, give the clergyman who devoted his time to this important work as much as would maintain him as a gentleman according to his position in life?—That is material.

809. Therefore if this arbitrary payment of 10 s. per head would not result in a fair remuneration for the clergyman's time, you would not be bound by that; you would give him as much as would fairly support him?—I would give him as much as would support him, and not make it a matter of legislation.

810. But supposing this 10 s. only reached to 80 l. or 90 l., and the clergyman gave a large proportion of his time to his duties, would you consider so small a sum as that a sufficient payment to the clergyman?—I do not know enough about these gentlemen to give you an answer upon that point.

811. Do you consider that any man could maintain himself as a gentleman, pay house-rent, and meet all the expenses of his position, for so miserable a sum as that?—Again, without desiring to compare one with another, I might say that there are a great many curates who do not get as much.

812. Just to clear up the matter of the meeting of the Middlesex magistrates, where the proposal for the payment of the Roman Catholic chaplain was made, do you remember a meeting of last year, 1869, when a proposal of that sort was made by Mr. Bagshawe?—Yes, I think I do; but I have no distinct recollection of it.

813. You do not know to the contrary?—I think there was such a meeting.

814. Towards the close of last year there was such a proposal made to the Middlesex magistrates, and it was rejected; was not that so?—I daresay there was, and I might have been present in court when it was made, but I really do not recollect much about it.

815. Mr. O'Reilly.] In answer to a previous question, you assented to the proposition that the payment to a Roman Catholic clergyman attending on Roman Catholic prisoners, if made, ought to be looked upon in the light of a gratuity for a voluntary service given by a person not an officer, not under the control of the authorities, and not bound as to the quantity of service which he gave; I wish to call your attention to one case: in the borough gaol of Liverpool a Roman Catholic chaplain has been appointed by the prison authorities at a fixed salary, upon a condition that he reside in the prison, and give his entire time to the duties of the prison, subject, with reference to the amount of time he occupies, and the other conditions of the performance of his duty, to the regulations of the justices; would you consider that in that case the payment to him should hould be looked upon as a gratuity for a volunary service?—In that case it is a payment for n absolute service, but still he is not by law vhat the honourable Member has called an officer f the prison.

816. Will you explain to the Committee what ou mean by not being by law an officer of the rison, he being appointed by the justices under he Act of Parliament, who have power to appoint im chaplain of the prison?—I did not know that here was an Act of Parliament so appointing im; doubtless, in such case, he is an officer of he prison.

817. Mr. Guest.] You stated that the chaplain t Tothill Fields, had been over 30 years in the ervice?—Thirty-five years; he will be super-nnuated shortly.

818. Do you think that he has an exceptionally igh salary in consequence of his length of serice?—No, certainly not; he is worthy of every arthing of it.

819. Are you aware whether his salary has een raised since he was first appointed?—Yes, t has; but I cannot tell what he began with.

820. Mr. Synan.] Will you be good enough o state what was your answer to the application or a Scripture reader?—It was as follows: Carlisle-street, Soho, 29 May 1869. Sir,—The isiting justices of the House of Correction at Westminster, having taken into consideration our application for the appointment of a Scripure reader to the Roman Catholic prisoners, I m desired to inform you that those prisoners have the same advantages as the Protestant prisoners, and therefore the visiting justices do not deem it advisable to comply with your request. I am, sir, your obedient servant, Charles P. Allen."

Captain D O'Brien.
31 March 1870.

821. Lord Henley.] You stated, in answer to the honourable Member for West Kent, that you would pay the Roman Catholic chaplain on a lower scale, because his payment would be in the nature of a gratuity, while the payment of the Protestant chaplain was in the nature of a salary; was not that the answer you gave?—I recommended very strongly that he should be a salaried officer; and that he should be in the receipt of a salary commensurate with his services.

822. But you stated, in answer to the honourable Member for West Kent that you looked upon his payment as a sort of gratuity?—I think not.

823. Mr. Downing.] Does not the Roman Catholic clergyman, who is appointed under the Act of Parliament, an officer, become at once an officer of the prison, and does not he hold the same status as a clergyman of the Established Church, except in point of salary?—I consider that appointment makes him an officer of the prison.

824. Mr. Talbot.] Do you consider that there is any power under that Act, to appoint a chaplain of any other religious denomination than the Church of England as an officer of the prison?
—I do not know the Act sufficiently to answer that question.

Mr. Miles O'Reilly, a Member of the Committee; Examined.

825. Chairman.] I believe you have drawn p an analysis of the Parliamentary Returns elative to county and borough prisons, as reards the number of Roman Catholic prisoners in each, and any salaries that are paid?—I have.

826. Will you hand it in?—I will. (The same was handed in, vide Appendix.)

Mr. Miles O'Reilly, M.P.

Mrs. Susanna Maria Billiter called in, and Examined.

827. Mr. Dimsdale.] You have been matron r keeper, I think, of Westminster Prison for ome years, have you not?—I have for 12 ears.

828. Do you remember the 12th of April,
868?—Yes, I do.

829. That was the occasion on which the Roan Catholic service was first celebrated in the hapel of the prison?—It was.

830. Did you make an address to the prisoners t that time?—I did; because previously to that ate all prisoners of all denominations had at-ended the Protestant chapel if they liked to do o; none of them were obliged to do so. The Roman atholic prisoners had consequently attended with ie others, and the Protestant chapel not being fficiently large to acommodate all the prisoers, I always kept out a portion of each ection, morning and afternoon reversing them, that those who stayed away from the morning ervice went in the afternoon. After the Roman atholic service on Easter Sunday I went into ie yard and spoke, as far as my memory serves e, as follows: "Women, you have all heard ass in your own chapel this morning, for the ture you will always have an opportunity of oing so every Sunday morning; you never have een obliged to attend our chapel, and you need never step in it again unless you like. At the same time if there are any who do wish to attend it" (for I knew there were many who had frequently come in as Protestants as well as Catholics) "just hold up your finger that I may make an arrangement to admit you, but you are none of you obliged to attend;" that is to say, none of them were obliged to attend the Protestant chapel unless they wished to do so; I specified that three times.

Mrs. S. M. Billiter.

831. Did you use the expression "your chapel"?—I could not say exactly; I might have said, "You have had mass in a chapel of your persuasion."

832. You did not identify yourself with the Protestant chapel?—No, not that I remember; those were the words I used.

833. Was any indignation expressed by the Roman Catholics at the time?—On the contrary, some of them curtsied and said, "God bless you matron; thank you."

834. Was Mr. White present upon this occasion?—No, not that I am aware; I believe that he was in his room, but I did not see him.

835. Was any remonstrance made to you by any of the county justices respecting the speech?
—There was a Catholic gentleman not connected with the prison, came down in the course of the week,

Mrs. S. M. Billiter.

31 March 1870.

week, and asked me if it was possible I could have addressed the prisoners in that way; I told him I had done so, and I told him my motive; he said I had done very wrong, and requested that I would not allow the Roman Catholic prisoners to enter our chapel again. I said (of course I did not intend to repeat the conversation I had had with them) that they would not attend again, and they never have since.

836. How many Roman Catholic prisoners are there at this time?—I believe there are about 145.

837. What is the average number?—About 200; we generally consider about 200 the average number.

838. And how many Protestants are there?—Six hundred; there would be nearly 800 prisoners altogether; at this time we have 749 in the prison, but we sometimes have had 799.

839. What is the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners attending service in the chapel?—In their own chapel, about 170; there is room for that number, and if there are more than that number, some of them stay out from chapel in the morning, and go in the afternoon; that is on the Sunday.

840. What is the number of Protestants attending in their chapel, on the average?—The Protestant chapel will accommodate 600, and we go there to that number; if there are more than that number, I am obliged to keep them out in the same manner as I do the Roman Catholics.

841. What would be the general number of Protestants absent from the chapel?—I can hardly say; I should think about 30 or 40 possibly. Generally, only those are absent who are medically unfit.

842. And with Roman Catholics?—It is the same with the Roman Catholics; if there is room for them in the chapel, all are supposed to attend unless excused by the surgeon, or if they object to do so.

843. Are there more than 20 generally absent?—No; I should say on the average about 20.

844. What are the regulations with reference to the instruction in the school?—All prisoners under 16 years of age of either denomination, always attend the school; over that age they apply to me for permission to go, having perhaps previously asked the Roman Catholic minister or the chaplain that they may do so; if I find that they cannot read or write, I let them go.

845. What is the character of the instruction, secular or religious?—Secular entirely.

846. There is no religious instruction given by the schoolmistress?—No; nothing but secular instruction is given in the school; they are only taught to read and write according to the books used in the Protestant or the Roman Catholic school.

847. Religious instruction is given by the Protestant chaplain to the Protestants, and by the Roman Catholic chaplain to the Roman Catholics?—Yes, that is so.

848. Now, I come to the question of the laundry; what regulations are made with respect to the laundry?—When I first went there, some twelve years ago, and for many years afterwards, all suitable persons who could do hard work irrespective of any religion, were employed in the laundry. After the passing of the Prison Ministers Act the Roman Catholic prisoners were frequently sent for by their priests for confession and instruction, and that delayed the work so much, that I found it caused frequent wrangling amongst the prisoners, and consequent punishment. After considering the matter well, I thought it would be better to make a division. There are only four parts of the prison where prisoners work in association: the laundry, the oakum store, the kitchen, and the garden. The garden is considered the greatest boon of all, although there are only a few prisoners employed there; therefore I thought that, to avoid frequent punishment and reporting, it would be better to keep the Protestants in the laundry, and to employ the Roman Catholics in the oakum store and the garden, and both sects in the kitchen, where only a few are employed, and I acted upon that opinion until last July, when, in consequence of a communication from the priest to the visiting justices about a prisoner, I employed the Roman Catholics again in the laundry.

849. What is the date when Roman Catholics were first excluded from the laundry?—I cannot speak decidedly upon that point. I believe it is about two years since when I first made the arrangement in my own mind that they should not go into the laundry; but I did not take those out who were then employed there, because the prisoners, if they are well behaved, are retained in the laundry for six months, and I did not wish to remove them. Consequently, it was some little time before the arrangement was completed.

850. Did you make this distinction of excluding the Roman Catholics from the laundry with any object of throwing difficulties in the way of the Roman Catholic priest?—It certainly was not done for that purpose; quite the reverse. It was done in order that he might have greater facility in instructing them, and in order to prevent the punishments which had been so frequent before.

851. The committee have been told that the prisoners prefer the laundry work very much to any other sort of work?—Some of them do; it is the hardest work in the prison, but they equally like the work in the kitchen, and prefer the garden work to either.

852. Which should you say they prefer, the garden or the laundry?—The garden, decidedly, because there they are more at liberty: they are out hoeing and rolling the grass, and that sort of thing, and have the benefit of the fresh air.

853. And from the garden the Roman Catholics have never been excluded?—Never; they are exclusively employed there; there are no Protestants employed in the garden unless the surgeon has ordered the prisoners to be employed there so as to have more air, for the Roman Catholics are generally the strongest and most suitable in the garden.

854 Do you remember two prisoners named Mary Morgan and Margaret Parker?—Perfectly.

855. Of what religion did they state they were at the time of their admission?—Mary Morgan had never been in the prison before, and she came in and stated herself to be a Protestant, and was accordingly passed into the Protestant section of the prison. She came in on the 9th of December 1868 for nine calendar months, and was discharged on the 6th of September 1869, after she had been in the infirmary some months. She had a bad leg, and was removed by order of the doctor to the infirmary on the 19th of August, 1869. After she had been in the infirmary a few days and the chaplain had been reading, ng, as is usual, on visiting this prisoner she old him that she was a Roman Catholic, and ot a Protestant. He asked her why she had aid that she was a Protestant, and she said be- ause she had had penal servitude before, and aving been sent again to prison, she expected hat she would have penal servitude again. At hat time the Roman Catholics were sent to the he Parkhurst Prison, in the Isle of Wight; she lid not wish to be sent away so far from all her elatives in London, having been at Brixton be- ore, and therefore she said she was a Protestant, o that she might be passed to Brixton, if she got enal servitude. The chaplain reported the cir- umstances to me, and said that as the woman vas ill, and had wished to see the priest, he oped that I would allow her to do so; I said I would do so immediately; I went across to the Roman Catholic section. Mr. White was then earing confession from a prisoner, and of course I did not interrupt him, but the warder attending im was present, and I desired her to ask him o visit this woman; I ascertained afterwards hat he did so; that is all I know about it. I eard that she had told him that she said she was a Protestant because she was excluded from the aundry, but she had not been in prison before, nd could not know the prison arrangements.

856. How long had she been in the prison before she stated that she was a Catholic?—She ame into the prison on the 9th of December 1868, and she confessed she was a Catholic about he 20th of August 1869, and was discharged on the 6th September 1869.

857. Do you remember the case of Margaret Parker?—Yes, I do.

858. When did she come in?—She was committed on the 9th of December 1868.

859. She stated that she was a Protestant?—She did.

860. She was sentenced to seven years' penal ervitude?—She was.

861. How long afterwards was it that she tated she was a Roman Catholic?—She never tated that she was a Roman Catholic; she had been twice before in our prison. She was committed on the 24th of April 1867, for six months, when she stated she was a Protestant, and on the th of August 1868 she was again sentenced to hree months, and then she entered herself as a Protestant; and then it was again on the 9th of December following that she was sentenced to even years' penal servitude.

862. Have you had any differences with Mr. White during the course of his ministrations?—Not that I am aware of.

863. Has any complaint been made to you hat the female warder attending upon him has been constantly changed?—Mr. White never complained to me. The magistrate who came down and spoke about my addressing the prisoners in the yard, asked me to allow the officer who had been with Mr. White to remain. I told him that it was not for me to decide whether an officer was to remain or not; that I must be guided by the visiting justices. It is the rule in that prison that the officers change their duty about once a month, and I have appointed three to take the duty for the Roman Catholic priest in rotation; they were then Protestant officers; I selected three of the best, that he might be well attended after the chapel was opened, as there were only three Roman Catholic officers in the prison. The magistrates then granted two extra officers that they might attend the service in the Roman Catholic chapel, and also requested that I would appoint one of them to attend the priest, thinking that it would be more convenient for him to have one attendant; therefore one was appointed; and after some time Mr. White complained that his rooms were not dusted properly, and that the books were not given out properly. I changed her on that account, and took another Roman Catholic officer. After she had been there some time she resigned the service. I then took another, who has remained ever since, with the exception of being taken off for night duty when in rotation with the other officers, and I have not heard that she has not given satisfaction. She also instructs the Roman Catholic prisoners in singing, as an order was given that the Roman Catholics should be instructed by their officers in the same way as the Protestant prisoners were instructed by their officers.

864. As I understand you, neither Mr. White nor Mr. Bond made frequent complaints of the frequent changes of their officers?—Not to me.

865. Mr. Hutton.] I wish to ask you about the Dissenting denomination; are they allowed a minister of their own persuasion to attend them?—If they ask to see one.

866. Have you had many cases lately of prisoners asking for that?—Not many. The only cases I have had have been from the Germans for a Lutheran minister, and from the Jewish prisoners for the rabbi.

867. Have you had any applications from the Wesleyans?—No; I do not remember any other minister attending since I have had the charge of the prison.

868. Have you had ministers applying to attend the prisoners?—Never. I never remember one of them attending.

869. Do the prisoners attend the English Church Service?—Yes, unless they object to do so.

870. I asked Mr. White about the accessories of the chapel that he bought and left there; are they now under your care in the Roman Catholic chapel?—They are in the Roman Catholic chapel, I believe; but I have nothing to do with them.

871. If they were lost, I suppose you would be accountable for them?—No; I am responsible for county property, but not for individual property.

872. Mr. Synan.] Before April 1868 all the inmates of the prison attended the Protestant service, did they not?—All that could be accommodated at the time.

873. Without any distinction as to whether they were Protestants or Roman Catholics?—Yes, unless they objected to go. If a Roman Catholic objected to go, of course she remained away; if she followed the rest, she was at liberty to do so.

874. Did you ask the prisoners individually whether they wished to attend; did you know those who were Roman Catholics and those who were Protestants before the Prison Act was passed?—Generally speaking, I know what religion they have given when they enter, for all who enter as Roman Catholics are sent to one section, and the Protestants occupy the other section; therefore, if a prisoner was in the Roman Catholic section, I should know that she was of the Roman Catholic religion.

875. Did you tell the Roman Catholic prisoners that that they were not bound to attend the Protestant service?—On that Sunday I did.

31 March 1870.

876. Not before that?—No.

877. You did not tell them that they were not bound to attend?—No.

878. Did you think it right to allow the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant chapel without telling them that they were not bound by the prison discipline to do so?—I never considered it a portion of my duty to question them individually.

879. Do you think that the Roman Catholic prisoners might have gone to the Protestant chapel under the impression that they were bound to do so by the rules of the prison?—No, I think not.

880. Did you tell them that the rules of the prison did not bind them to attend the service?—The rules are read to them.

881. The prisoners are not able to read the rules of the prison generally, I suppose?—But the rules are read to them always on entering.

882. On the Sunday when the first Roman Catholic service was performed you did address them when they left the Catholic chapel?—Yes, I did.

883. And you have told us what you did say?—I have.

884. You told all those who were disposed, notwithstanding the Catholic chapel being established, and the Catholic service being open for them, to continue to attend the Protestant chapel, to hold up their hands?—I said, if there were any who wished to do so, let them hold up their finger, not their hand; I did not wish for any disturbance or show to be made about it. I understood the Catholic prisoners had said that they were shut in their cold cells when other prisoners were in the chapel, and I did not wish it to be said that they were shut out of the Protestant chapel, if they preferred to be there. They only had the Catholic chapel in the morning, and as they had been accustomed to go to service every afternoon, I thought those who would like to go still, would feel aggrieved if they were shut out without any explanation, and it was merely that they might know my reason for shutting them in, that I spoke to them as I did.

885. Had the Roman Catholic prisoners service both morning and evening?—They have now.

886. When did that commence?—I have not made a note of the date.

887. How soon after the 12th of April 1868, had they that double service?—I should think about two or three months, as near as my memory serves me.

888. On the 12th of April 1868, were you aware that they would not have evening service in the Roman Catholic chapel?—Yes, and that was my reason for speaking to them. I told them that they had been in the morning, but that they would not go in the afternoon, that they were not obliged to go to our chapel if they did not wish to do so, but could remain in their cells; if they wished to come to our chapel they could do so, but I did not wish them to do so, only there was no afternoon service for them at that time.

889. Did Mr. White tell you, on the 12th of April 1868, that there would be no afternoon service?—The visiting justices told me the day before that there would be morning service, but that no provision was made for afternoon service, in the Roman Catholic chapel.

890. Were some of those prisoners whom you addressed at that time, and to whom you said that they might, if they wished, attend the Protestant chapel, engaged in the laundry at that time?—Yes, there must have been some of them, but not on the Sunday.

891. How many of those held up their finger?—Five or six.

892. Was that the number who were in the laundry?—No, I should say not, because those who were in the laundry would be in a different yard; they are divided for exercise into different yards, according to the time they are in prison, and those would have been principally second and third yards; it is principally the long term prisoners who would be in the fourth yard, or the laundry.

893. How many long term prisoners would have been there at that time?—I could not say.

894. Were the laundry prisoners in a separate yard, at that time?—No, they were with a great many others prisoners, Roman Catholics, and others who were sentenced for long terms of years or months.

895. Were not you addressing all that came out of the Roman Catholic chapel after service that day?—Yes.

896. How many would that be?—I suppose about 170; the chapel was full.

897. And were the laundry people amongst that 170?—Yes, they were.

898. When you told them that they could attend the Protestant service after leaving their own service, they replied, "God bless you"?—Yes, when I had finished my address; I am bound to say, that I think the Roman Catholic prisoners were pleased to have a service of their own; I said that they had attended mass that morning in the Roman Catholic chapel, and would always have an opportunity of doing so; I told them that they were not obliged to attend our service again, unless they wished it; and when I had finished my sentence, they said, "God bless you, matron." I presume that that meant thanks for attending their own service, and not ours.

899. You concluded your address by telling them that if they wished to attend the evening service in the Protestant chapel, they could do so?—Yes.

900. Then, of course, everybody could interpret that "God bless you," as they wished; now, you stated that it was considered an advantage by them to leave their cells to attend the Protestant service?—They considered it so.

901. And you thought they considered it so?—It was stated that they did not like to be shut in their cold cells when the other prisoners were in chapel.

902. Of course, it would be an inducement for them, if you told them that they could leave their cold cells and attend the Protestant service?—I did not put it in that way.

903. They might think so?—I do not think they did; I said they could do as they thought proper.

904. Do you recollect on the 12th of April 1868, what was the number of Roman Catholics in the prison?—One hundred and seventy-three.

905. In 1869, there were 220, according to these returns?—I believe there were; our numbers were very high at that time, both of Catholics and Protestants.

906. The chapel accommodation was for 170, and ınd you say the average number absent would ›e 20?—In such a case as that of course, it would ›e more, but I am only speaking of those who were absent from illness. and prevented from ›oming. We always filled the chapels.

907. Then there must have been some absent rom want of accommodation?—There must have ›een.

908. Where would they be?—In their cells; t is a separate prison; they are all in separate ells everywhere, excepting those places where hey do association work.

909. Were they allowed to go from their cells o that Protestant service of yours?—No.

910. There was only one schoolmistress in the rison?—No, only one that is really a school- iistress.

911. Are there assistants?—No.

912. Are there no Scripture readers?—There re no Scripture readers.

913. We have it in the evidence of Mr. O'Brien hat there are?—There is no Scripture reader in he Report; there are two who are marked as choolmistresses, but one of them used to be the choolmistress, and performed the duty of a ›arder; she was promoted to attend to the haplain, and the Return has unfortunately made mistake in putting her down as a schoolmistress; here is only one schoolmistress for the whole of he prisoners.

914. What are the others doing?—There are nly two in the Return; one is exclusively em- loyed in teaching, and the other now attends he chaplain in taking prisoners to the reforma- ›ries, and so on.

915. The education given by the schoolmistress s totally of a secular character?—Totally ecular.

916. The education of the Roman Catholic risoners, is attended to as well as that of the 'rotestant prisoners?—Yes.

917. The Protestant chaplain attends to give eligious instruction?—To his classes; he is not here when the Roman Catholics are in the chool.

918. Who looks after the separation of the oman Catholics and Protestants at the time of struction?—I do; there is a separate class ntirely. The schoolmistress takes the Pro- estants from the C and D sections, and the Ro- an Catholics from the B section.

919. The laundry, I suppose, is an object that he prisoners wish to attain?—Yes, generally, ney like it; particulary those who are very hard orking women; it is the hardest work in the rison, and in consequence of that, as we do a ery large amount of washing, a little extra diet as been given in the laundry, but there are a great any prisoners who cannot perform the work.

920. What privileges are there which makes more acceptable than the other diet?—They ave a little cocoa.

921. And an extra share of beer?—No beer all; that has been excluded since the new ietary came in; no beer is allowed except to he sick prisoners in the infirmary.

922. But it is looked upon by the prisoners as ore agreeable employment than the ordinary nployment?—It is so, I think. I am constantly ked, "May I go to the laundry?" "May I go the oakum store?" or, "May I go to the tchen?" The kitchen is liked better than the undry, as the work is not so heavy.

923. You excluded Roman Catholics, from 1868 up to last July, from the laundry?—Not exactly from 1868, but as their time expired; they were not excluded if they behaved well; if they were reported, and ordered punishment, of course they were taken out before their six months expired. I cannot say exactly the time when they were all out of the laundry.

924. But it was after the Catholic service was established in the prison?—Yes.

925. You cannot say how long after it was established?—No; it might be perhaps the following February, or perhaps a little later, before the last Roman Catholic prisoner would come out of the laundry.

926. It was in consequence of the complaint of Mr. White, that the prison authorities ordered you to readmit them to the laundry?—I believe it was; the prison authorities inquired of me why they were excluded, and I gave them my reasons, and they said that they would rather there should not be any distinction made; that the prisoners should all go there, and therefore they have since done so. I have had occasion since to separate them very frequently, it has caused so much reporting; only a short time since, I had to turn a prisoner out for making use of bad language, and saying she would not work with the Protestants.

927. You stated that your reason for refusing to allow the Catholic prisoners to work in the laundry, was because their religious instruction took them away from the laundry?—Yes, it did.

928. Did the religious instruction take the Protestant prisoners from the laundry?—Yes; a part of the time.

929. What part of the time?—Perhaps a qurter of an hour or 20 minutes.

930. Why does it take them a shorter time than the Roman Catholics?—Because I presume the confessional instruction of the Roman Catholic priest takes longer than that given by the chaplain to the prisoners.

931. And it was on account of their being taken away for a shorter time than the Roman Catholics, that you excluded the Roman Catholics altogether?—It caused so much wrangling, and the water became cold; there was constant confusion in the laundry.

932. But all the Roman Catholic prisoners in the laundry would not go away at one time?—No.

933. Would that be any reason for excluding the whole of them?—No, I really did it to prevent so much punishment; I thought it was better for the general discipline of the prison.

934. And although it was because the Protestants went for a shorter time for instruction than the Roman Catholics, for a portion, you excluded the whole?—Yes, I did.

935. Now, with reference to Mary Morgan, who was never in the prison before, might she have been acquainted by Parker, who was in the prison before, with the prison rules; Parker, you state, was in the prison several times?—Yes, she was.

936. And she was in the prison twice before Morgan was admitted?—Yes, she was.

937. The two seemed to be acquainted with each other, did they not?—I doubt it; they were in distinct prisons.

938. From the statement of the priest, I gathered that they knew each other?—I cannot tell that; I can only say that Margaret Parker has has always been a Protestant, and I know that her children were in the Protestant school, because some ladies came to make some inquiries about her when she was with us, therefore, I know she has always been a Protestant.

939. When you say "always," do you mean that she has been a Protestant from her youth?—Yes, I believe so; she gave her religion three times as a Protestant; she never complained to me, and I never doubted the truth of her statement until she was gone. She had gone to Brixton when Mary Morgan made that statement.

940. You believe that the statement of Mary Morgan was false?—Yes, I believe her to be a very bad character. I know that she was a terror to some of the prisoners in our prison.

941. When did you first find out that she was a bad character?—I could soon find that out from her conduct in the prison.

942. Was she in the laundry?—No; she had not been with us long before she had a bad leg, and I would not put an invalid in the laundry.

943. She stated that she declared herself a Protestant in order that she might be put into the laundry?—I have no doubt that she stated that to Mr. White, but her statement to him was different from that made to the chaplain.

944. She stated that being a Roman Catholic, interfered with her being sent into the laundry?—It might have interfered, but she had not been in the prison long enough to be put into the laundry.

945. Now, with respect to the essentials of the Catholic service, you stated that you considered them private property, and were not responsible for their safe keeping?—Certainly; I have nothing to do with the Roman Catholic chapel.

946. They are not in the custody of any responsible authority?—I have nothing to do with them. I go up to see that the room appointed by the magistrates is in a proper state of cleanliness, and that there are a sufficiency of benches. There is an altar which I know the authorities provided; but beyond that I have nothing to do with the chapel. I do not know anything of the decorations of the chapel, or anything beyond what I have stated.

947. Who is responsible for the fittings up, and the table, and the carpet?—I say that the altar table and the carpet round the altar are in my custody.

948. You are responsible for them?—I am responsible for them.

949. You do not consider yourself responsible for the other things?—Not for any vestments or articles of that sort which may have been there; they have never been given into my charge.

950. Mr. Walpole.] Are those things kept regularly in a box, or what?—I believe they are kept in a press in the room used by the priest; he has the key I believe; it has never been given to me.

951. When prisoners are first admitted into the prison, even before the recent Prisons Act, were they not always thoroughly informed of all the regulations connected with the prison, and the attendance upon religious services?—Yes, the rules were read to them.

952. If they cannot read them themselves, are the rules read so as to be intelligible to them?—Yes, they are.

953. Have you any reason to suppose that the prisoners in the prison are not fully acquainted with the rules relating to their attendance upon the religious service?—I have not a doubt that they fully understand them. I always see them myself before they pass into their cells, and ask them if they have heard the rules read, and whether they understand them, and express a hope that they will keep the rules.

954. Mr. Downing.] If I understand you rightly you told the Committee that there were Dissenters in the prison?—I believe there are.

955. How do you account for it that this prison appears to be the only one in which that fact is not set forth; here there are only "Protestants" and "Roman Catholics"?—The returns are made to me weekly; the different religions are not set out; there are so few Dissenters, and so few Jews and Lutherans, that I suppose it has not been copied in that return; they appear in our own prison return.

956. Has anybody a register of those who are admitted?—This (producing a volume) shows the number in custody, those destined for penal servitude, and those discharged, the number of infirmary patients, and the number of Irish and foreigners.

957. That return does not contain any column which relates to the religion of each prisoner?—It is not in this book.

958. Are they so entered in any book?—I think they are in the statistical return. There is a register kept in the office, of every prisoner's religion and age, and the number of times she has been in prison. All those particulars are taken down, and therefore we can always speak to their religion.

959. Are you aware, since you have been matron, that any Dissenters have been visited by ministers of their own Church?—It has never happened in my time.

960. There are only two clergymen who attend; one is the Protestant clergyman, who is paid, and the other is the Roman Catholic clergyman, who is not paid?—A Jewish rabbi has attended the Jews, and a Doctor Shael from the Savoy has attended the Lutherans.

961. Now, with regard to the 12th of April 1868, did I understand you to state that on that date there were prisoners in the laundry?—No on the Sunday, but they were working on the week day in the laundry.

962. I think the Committee understood that they were working there on the Sunday?—No I merely meant that they were working there on the week day, and were in their cells and attending the service on Sunday. The laundry is closed on the Saturday night.

963. Whatever you did say to the Roman Catholic prisoners after mass, was about 10 in the morning?—About half-past 10.

964. Did you ever previously say to those Catholic prisoners, before a chaplain was ever allowed to attend, "You need go to the service"—No, I do not remember having done so; it has always been the practice for prisoners to follow on to chapel, and I had not departed from the practice.

965. Lord Henley.] Every prisoner sees the Protestant chaplain on her entrance into the prison?—Yes.

966. Do you know what passes between them—The prisoners are asked what religion they are, and after the chaplain has spoken to them if he finds that they are Roman Catholics he advises them to keep the rules, and gives them little tle caution, and then they are taken to the oman Catholic section.

967. He does not give them religious advice, believe?—No, not the slightest.

968. Is there any one by?—Yes, there is always a warder by; it is the invariable rule.

969. Viscount Enfield.] There are some benelent Protestant ladies who visit the prisoners, e there not?—At the present time there are ly two; there were at one time seven admitted, t two have since died, two never come, and e seldom comes. Two continue to attend, one them has been in the habit of attending for years, and is now quite an old lady.

970. Does she attend about every week?—nerally about once a week.

971. What are the regulations with regard to visits of those ladies; are they allowed to go and visit the prisoners at any time when they doing any work?—The ladies go in accomnied by a warder; the warder is always preit, and hears the conversation. The second y is a lady who is a linguist, and she has been material assistance in aiding me with foreign soners, such as Germans and Italians; I could understand them, and it was a great assistce to me for her to come and explain the rules them and ascertain if they had every proper ention.

972. Did you ever hear of an application by he Roman Catholic ladies for permission to it the prisoners under the same restrictions as Protestant ladies did?—I did hear of it.

973. Did the visiting justices mention the subt to you officially, and ask your opinion as to ether those ladies might be allowed to visit the son?—No, my opinion would not be asked in h a matter.

974. But the visiting justices constantly refer you, do they not, upon a matter of opinion, for ir judgment?—They may do so, but not in t way.

975. Did you ever hear a Roman Catholic soner allude to the fact that Protestant priers enj yed the visits of those ladies, and that man Catholics did not?—No complaint was r made to me of that kind.

976. Do you think, that under the same rections, the same beneficial results which are ntioned in the annual report by the chaplain year to the court of quarter sessions, as ing been derived by Protestant prisoners from benevolent services of Protestant ladies, ht be enjoyed by the Roman Catholic priers?—Yes, I think it would do good if there no legal objection, and if the visiting justices roved of it; I should certainly have no objec- to it.

977. Mr. Dalrymple.] I understand you to that on the 12th of April there was only one man Catholic, but two Protestant services held hat day?—That was so.

978. Did you mean to say when you made e remarks, that the Roman Catholic prisoners the option of going to your chapel in the rnoon, or of remaining in their cells?—Yes.

979. You said, that in order that the Roman holic prisoners might not feel less well off than Protestant prisoners who had the chance of g to the afternoon service?—Yes.

980. Am I right in thinking that many of n would think it a pleasure to go to any ice?—I am certain they would, entirely for sake of the change from their cells.

981. And your desire was, that irrespective of the character of the service, they might have the opportunity of going to it, if they chose?—Yes.

982. When was the second Roman Catholic service began?—I think about three or four months after that.

983. I understand you to say, that there is only one schoolmistress employed in the prison?—That is all.

984. Will you inform the Committee what is the number of women that receive instruction from her?—There are about 70 in the course of the day. They go up in different classes, about 20 at a time, for an hour; but our numbers attending the school fluctuate very much.

985. Mr. Talbot.] With reference to the day of the week, you stated, when the Roman Catholic priest came, and when the services were held but I do not know whether it is clear to the Committee how often the Roman Catholic priest comes; does he come every day?—Generally; particularly lately; recently he has been there daily, with very few exceptions.

986. How much time does he spend there, on the average?—About two and a half hours. He generally comes about 10, and leaves a little after 12.

987. There is a daily Roman Catholic Service in the chapel, is there not?—Yes.

988. How much time does the chaplain of the English church spend in the prison?—He is generally there from about nine in the morning till about five in the afternoon.

989. The whole of the day, in fact?—Yes. His whole time is given up to his services in the prison. He has to attend to two-thirds of the prisoners.

990. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] In the address which you made to the prisoners, it did not strike you that it could be interpreted that you were in any way throwing the weight of your authority to influence the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant rather than the Roman Catholic service?—Certainly not. I should be very sorry that that should be thought.

991. If such an interpretation was put upon the address, it was entirely contrary to your intention?—Certainly; and so I told the Roman Catholic gentlemen who came down to speak to me about it; it was merely to protect the flock from punishment that I did that.

992. You see no reason why, as regards the religious instruction, Roman Catholics and Protestants should not be upon the same footing, when they come unhappily under the law?—I see no reason; at present there is no distinction.

993. Chairman.] I think you addressed the prisoners in other yards, as well as the yards to which you have referred?—There are only three yards in which the Roman Catholics do exercise and I spoke to them in each yard the same words; I thought it better to address them collectively, than to go round to their cells; it was done in the presence of the warders.

994. Did you ever suggest to the Protestant prisoners that they might attend the Roman Catholic worship?—No, because there was ample provision for them in the chapel; there were two services, but at the same time there are many prisoners who change their religion; many Protestants come in as Catholics, and Catholics come in as Protestants; they repeatedly change it.

995. But supposing that there was not at present an afternoon service on Sunday, would not that fact act as an inducement to Catholic prisoners to go to the Protestant service on Sunday?—I do not quite understand the question.

31 March 1879.

996. If there were no afternoon service on the Sunday for the Catholic prisoners, and if the Catholic prisoners who did not attend the Protestant worship would be locked up in their cells, do you not think it very probable they would wish to leave their cells and go to the Protestant service?—No doubt, because they are so ignorant that if it was contrary to their religion they might prefer to do so, but I did not intend it as an inducement.

997. But it would be a strong inducement, nevertheless; in your experience they prefer to go anywhere rather than stay in their cells?—Anywhere to get out of their cells.

998. Prisoners of other denominations, with the exception of those you have mentioned, the Jews and the Lutherans, are quite willing to receive the ministrations of the Protestant clergyman?—Yes.

999. They make no objection whatever?—Not the slightest; I never heard of any.

1000. You say that the Protestant chaplain asks the prisoners when they first come into the prison what is their creed?—Yes.

1001. That information is given to him?—The prisoner gives it to him; it is marked down when they first enter, and their religion is recorded against them.

1002. But it is through the Protestant chaplain that that information is derived, and the registry is formed?—They are asked that question when they enter, and their reply is entered against them; then when they go to the chaplain the next morning he again speaks to them, and asks them that question.

1003. Then I gather that the register is formed from information given to some person other than the chaplain?—It is formed from information given to the clerk in the office when he takes the committals; he asks what religion they are.

1004. What necessity is there that that question should be asked again by the chaplain?—The chaplain has been there for 35 years, and it has always been the practice that he should see all prisoners upon their entrance.

1005. But do you see any necessity, after the information has been given upon their entry, that it should be given a second time?—Only for this reason; that sometimes when they come in at night they are hardly accountable for their actions; they may be in a drunken state, and the next morning they may say, I did not mean to say I was a Roman Catholic, or Protestant, but the reverse, and then the chaplain converses with them, and if he finds they were not in a proper state to give their religion at that time, I go down and see the prisoners, and under those circumstances I alter the register, if it is done at once.

1006. Under those circumstances, where it is a matter of doubt, do you not think it would be more prudent, to prevent any possibility of suspicion, that that information should be given next day to any other officer rather than the chaplain?—No doubt it would; I might suggest that to the visiting justices, and perhaps they might accede to it.

1007. Do you not think that you might be enabled with advantage to prevent the possibility of that suspicion?—Yes, I think so.

1008. Sir John Pakington.] I presume, from what you have stated to the Committee, that when a prisoner is first brought in, the statement of her religion is only one of a series of questions put by the officer who receives her?—When a prisoner comes in, she is taken to the office at the gate; she is asked her name and her age, which is recorded, and then her religion; that is recorded against her, and also the number of times she has been in prison.

1009. The next morning, whatever her religion may have been declared to be, she has an interview with the chaplain of the prison?—Yes.

1010. Who is present at that interview?—The officer that has attended him for many years, who has been misnamed in the Return as a schoolmistress.

1011. It is not a private interview?—No, an officer is always present; the chaplain never sees any prisoners in the infirmary or any part of the prison without an officer being present.

1012. Supposing a woman, the next morning, when she has an interview with the chaplain, repeats the statement she made the previous night that she was a Roman Catholic, could you say what conversation ensues upon that?—The chaplain has told me (of course I have not been present), "I do not have any further conversation with her upon religion; I merely say, 'Now keep the rules,' and I give her a little moral advice.

1013. The chaplain does not press them, does he?—No, he does not.

1014. In your opinion, would it be better the next morning, in the case of a woman who has declared herself a Roman Catholic, that her interview should be with a Roman Catholic priest rather than the Protestant chaplain?—She sees the Roman Catholic priest when he comes; it may so happen, as the prisoners are taken in rotation, that there may be a great number of Protestants who go in, and the priest might be waiting for the prisoners, and so would see them first, if there were a great many.

1015. You have mentioned just now in answer to an honourable Member, that a Jewish rabbi had seen some prisoners, and that a Lutheran minister had seen some prisoners?—Yes.

1016. How often has that occurred?—I should think four or five times a year.

1017. It is a matter of constant occasional occurrence, then?—Yes; if any of the prisoners wish to see such a minister, they merely ask the chaplain or myself to be allowed to see him.

1018. Do you find that you generally have Jewesses or Lutherans in the prison?—Very few Jewesses, but we have had very many Lutherans in the prison.

1019. And of course such foreigners enter themselves as Jews or Lutherans on their entry?—They do.

1020. Is the Jewish instruction offered them by the authorities of the prison, or do they apply for it?—They apply for it. They are told by the rules that if there is any prisoner differing from the rules of the Roman Catholic or Protestant persuasion, they can see a minister of their persuasion, and then I invariably write, and a minister attends.

1021. When you so write you find a minister always attends upon your intimation?—Yes.

1022. In those cases I apprehend there is no payment awarded to those ministers?—No, none any.

1023. Mr. Downing.] Did I understand you correctly when you stated this, that a prisoner brought brought in the evening is asked by the officer to what religion he belongs, and that if she enters herself as a Roman Catholic she is seen in the morning by the Protestant minister, who repeats the question?—Yes.

1024. Then if she says in the morning, to the Protestant minister, "I am a Protestant," he communicates that to you, and you, without any inquiry, enter her as a Protestant?—No, not without any inquiry from her; but it is of very rare occurence that it is so changed. If it does so happen, and the chaplain calls my attention to that woman, and says that she has declared herself a Roman Catholic, and did not intend to do so, but is really a Protestant, I go and see her, and if I think she was not in a fit state to answer at the time then I have the register altered, but I do not make those alterations if it is a week or ten days after they come in; it is only supposing they are not responsible for what they say at the time, being under the influence of drink.

1025. Are the Committee to understand that you will not alter the entry of religious denomination without inquiry from the woman herself?—I will not.

1026. Mr. Synan.] You stated to the Committee that the exclusion from the laundry took place in 1868; was that a mistake upon your part?—I think I commenced the alteration in 1868, but I said that I believed it did not terminate till some months after that, and it might have gone on till the early part of 1869.

1027. Did it commence in 1867?—No, not that I am aware of.

1028. Take that letter in your hand (handing a letter to the Witness); did you communicate to the authorities that it commenced in 1867?—No; I said it commenced about two years previous.

1029. What is the date of that?—1869; it is such a large prison, that I cannot remember everything that takes place.

1030. Mr. Hutton.] You stated that a warder is present when the chaplain sees the prisoners; is that the case when the Roman Catholic minister sees the prisoners?—There is a glass panel in the door in the priest's room, and the officer stands outside of that door, so that she is within sight, though not within hearing; the reason of that is, that prisoners will often make very erroneous statements, which might lead to difficulty; the warders see what takes place, but do not hear; I might add, that register of the religion is at the lodge, and can be seen by the Roman Catholic priest, as well as the chaplain, whenever he comes to the prison; he has free access to it.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. Dr. Æmilian Kirner; Examined.

4 April 1870.

1031. Chairman.] WHAT prison do you visit?—Coldbath Fields House of Correction for men.

1032. How often do you visit that prison?—I visit the prison four days in the week, and also on Sundays.

1033. What time do you give to your visits on week days?—I am there from half-past nine up to nearly one.

1034. You visit the prison four days in the week?—Four days in the week.

1035. How long have you been allowed to attend four times in the week?—I was allowed to attend only three days in the week up to last August or September, when I saw it was impossible for a great number of prisoners to attend, and I therefore applied to the visiting justices, and was consequently allowed another day; the Wednesday.

1036. You also attend on Sundays, you state?—I do.

1037. At what time on Sunday do you attend?—From 9 o'clock to 11.

1038. Have you mass on Sundays?— Mass, sermon, and prayers.

1039. Have you an evening service on Sunday?—We are not allowed any evening service on Sundays.

1040. There is a Protestant service on Sunday mornings, is there not?—There is a Protestant service held on Sunday mornings.

1041. And also on Sunday afternoons?—And also on Sunday afternoons.

1042. I believe you are not allowed to have an afternoon service?—We are not.

1043. Did you apply for permission to have it?—We have applied; I think my predecessor applied, but the reason the visiting justices gave was, that the Protestant prisoners went only by moities to their service, half in the morning, and half in the evening; that is to say, strictly speaking, there was only one service for the Protestant prisoners as well as for the Catholics.

1044. Will you inform the Committee what is the number of Protestant and Catholic prisoners?—The average number is 2,000, Catholic and Protestants.

1045. How many Roman Catholic prisoners would there be out of that number?—The average number of Catholic prisoners is 385 or 390; in round numbers, you might say about 400.

1046. You are also obliged to attend the infirmary, are you not?—I am obliged to attend the infirmary.

1047. If you happen to be called at any hour of the night; supposing such a case should arise, you are obliged to attend, are you not?—We are obliged to attend, and we have had to do so.

1048. I believe, according to the rules of your church, a Roman Catholic clergyman has no option, but to attend under such circumstances?—We have no option whatever, under any difficulties, or any inconvenience.

1049. Even if a clergyman is ill, he is bound to go?—If he can walk, he is bound to go.

1050. Are you allowed to assemble the prisoners for the purpose of instruction, every day you attend?—We are only allowed to assemble them on Sundays. In the week days, I am only allowed to assemble 12 at a time, but as the number is so great, and I have to attend to their confessions, it is inconvenient for me to see only 12 at a time; in fact, I have scarcely time to attend to the 400.

1051. Do you consider that that is not only a great labour to you, but very disadvantageous to the prisoners?—It is.

1052. If you were allowed to assemble the prisoners together, you could, of course, teach a larger number in the same time?—Yes, and it would save time to myself.

1053. The instruction given to one, would be instruction given to all?—It would.

1054. When were you first allowed to hold the worship of your church on Sunday?—I think it was in 1867.

1055. There are certain necessaries, such as altar plate, vestments, and other matters, which are essential for the carrying on of the Catholic service?—There are.

1056. Without which there can be no service?—There can be no service without them.

1057. If you have not sufficient altar plate you cannot have mass?—We cannot; it is essential to have all the requisites for the service.

1058. Have the visiting justices provided you with anything?—They have only provided a table; all the other essential things have been provided by the visiting priest.

1059. The authorities have provided you with the fixtures, have they not?—They have only provided a table; there are no fixtures in my chapel.

1060. You have to supply all the necessaries yourself, I believe?—All the other essentials.

1061. Do you receive any payment for your services?—None whatever.

1062. To what congregation are you attached?—I belong to the Hatton-garden congregation.

1063. Is that a very poor district of London?—It is very poor.

1064. Is your congregation especially poor?—It is so, as is generally known.

1065. Of what class is it mostly composed?—Of labourers, costermongers, and a very few small tradespeople; it is composed of working men of all kinds.

1066. I suppose mostly those people are either Irish, or the children of Irish?—They are nearly all so, or Italians; there are a great number of Italians there.

1067. Those people are, as it were, condemned to the very poorest class of labour?—They belong to the very poorest class.

1068. You have stated that you receive nothing for your services to this prison?—I receive nothing.

1069. Is your time very seriously interfered with by such attendance?—It is, as I am there so many days in the week, and the work is very laborious indeed.

1070. Is it especially laborious to you in consequence of the difficulties in your way?—Especially so; and also in consequence of the class of people I meet with there.

1071. They are an ignorant class, of course?—Very ignorant indeed.

1072. Then your difficulties are increased in consequence of that?—They are.

1073. When you return from that prison, say, at one o'clock or after that, are you really in a state to carry on your missionary labours with that vigour which they require?—I am considerably fatigued after coming out from the prison; and although I must attend to my other duties, it is with great injury to my health, because I have, as we may consider, already done a long day's work, having been in the prison for that number of hours during the morning.

1074. At all events, it is a serious inconvenience to your missionary work?—It is.

1075. Are you not therefore, more or less, a further upon those with whom you are associated in your missionary labour?—I am.

1076. Did you, at one time, catch a fever in discharge of your duties there?—It was stated by my medical attendant.

1077. You had a fever, had you not?—I had a typhoid fever.

1078. And it was stated by your medical attendant that that was in consequence of your attendance in the prison?—It was.

1079. Have you found that there has been a tendency, more or less, on the part of the Protestant authorities to interfere with the Catholic prisoners?—Such a case occurred last August or September.

1080. Will you state to the Committee what were the circumstances of that case?—It was officially given out in all the wards that any Catholic who would wish to attend the Protestant service on Sunday afternoons could do so, and that they were to give in their numbers, and then on Sunday afternoons, as there was no service for Catholics, some of the Catholic prisoners, simply to get out of their cells and to get more liberty, attended the Protestant service; I considered it as a direct invitation, because some of the warders opened the prisoners cells and said "For church;" and then if a prisoner said, "I am a Catholic," the answer was "You will be locked up if you do not go;" therefore as I know the Protestant prisoners were only allowed to attend service once a day, as the governor had told me that, I thought it was an interference with the rights of the Catholics, to permit them to attend the Protestant chapel in the afternoon; moreover, I had not permission to hold service on Sunday afternoons, and I remonstrated in consequence to the visiting justices with reference to the order that was given out, and on the following week, by order of the visiting justices, a counter order was issued that no Catholic prisoners should be allowed to attend the Protestant service.

1081. By whom was that order given in the first instance?—By the governor.

1082. How did that circumstance come to your knowledge?—By several of the prisoners telling me that the order had been read out in all the wards in the morning by the command of the governor.

1083. This happened last summer, did it not?—Yes.

1084. Did the governor say anything to you about it?—He admitted it, when he told me the order was rescinded. He told me it had been done by him.

1085. But on your appeal to the visiting justices the interference ceased?—It ceased at once.

1086. When did you appeal to the visiting justices?—Immediately after I was aware of the order being given out.

1087. Within a few days?—Within a week afterwards, I think.

1088. Would it be useful to you to have some one to assist you in teaching your Catholic prisoners?—I think if the Catholics had daily service, as the Protestants have, and I had free access to the prisoners to be there at any time in the day, just the same as the Protestant minister has, I might manage to teach them all myself, of course devoting my whole time to them.

1089. You would have in your congregation most probably, I think, some people who have received teaching from you in the prison?—I have, I know, a great many who have been in prisons before, and who are now attending our church with great edification to all; whereas before they were anything but that.

1090. Without entering into the matter more fully, may I ask whether you are of opinion that if you were allowed free access to the prisoners, and could teach them fully as you desire, the result of that teaching would be beneficial to the prisoners hereafter?—I am quite sure of it, as I know by experience, that that has been the result.

1091. Is there anything which you would wish to state to the Committee, in addition to what you have already stated?—I should like to state that the Protestant minister has also been interfering with the Catholic prisoners, but I have stopped his interference with them.

1092. When

4 April 1870.

1092. When did that occur which you complain of?—It was up to the time when I remonstrated against the order given out by the governor. I remonstrated at the same time that the Catholic prisoners were called up by the Protestant minister, and received reprimands from him, although he knew they were Roman Catholics.

1093. What sort of a reprimand would that be?—A spiritual reprimand. He even asked them to give what they call a confession of what had been their crime.

1094. Have you any reason to complain of what you thought undue interference?—I have one case which occurred on the 17th September 1869, in which case the assistant chaplain sent for No. 340, a prisoner named George Wells, who had before entered as a Protestant, but afterwards, on being recommitted, came in as a Catholic. He was called by the assistant chaplain a "ranter," because he came in the second time as a Catholic.

1095. Is it your opinion that your spiritual authority would be assisted and strengthened by the fact of your being made an officer of the prison?—Decidedly so.

1096. By having the status of an officer?—The status of an officer, the same as the Protestant chaplain has.

1097. You think that it would have the effect of giving weight to your advice and your influence and authority with the prisoners?—It would; because they are under the impression that we are only tolerated; and when they apply to see priests, it sometimes happens that they are even mocked by the officers themselves, who say, "You are going to the priest to tell him all your sins," and so on. If the warders knew that the priest was an officer of the prison, they would not take such liberties.

1098. With reference to the priest being an officer of the prison, would not the priest also be bound to obey every rule of the prison authorities?—Every rule.

1099. Would the priest comply strictly with the discipline of the prison, and endeavour to maintain it in every way?—He would comply with it in every way.

1100. Is there anything you would wish to add to the evidence you have given?—I should state that the Protestant clergyman has now ceased to see Catholic prisoners, I think by order of the visiting justices, since I have made representations to that effect.

1101. Sir John Pakington.] How long have you attended the Roman Catholic prisoners in Coldbath Fields Prison?—Off and on I have attended them since 1864 or 1865; but lately, only now since 1869, near a year regularly. Before that time I attended occasionally, and also for a whole year from 1865 to 1866.

1102. What was the cause of your attendance there being intermittent?—Sometimes another clergyman was appointed in my place to attend there, my services being required in the parish in another direction, which would not allow me time to see the prisoners. In another instance, I had to serve missions in America, and that was an interruption; and on my return, of course, I was again charged with the same duty.

1103. You were not removed on account of any complaint being made of your conduct, or on account of any difference with the authorities of the prison?—Never.

1104. Have you any room in the Coldbath Fields Prison which is set apart as a chapel for the Roman Catholic prisoners?—We have the old Protestant chapel now devoted to the use of the Catholic prisoners.

1105. I presume from that answer, that a new Protestant chapel has been built?—That is so.

1006. How long ago was that?—It is now, I think, nearly two years since.

1107. Where were the Roman Catholic prisoners attended to, before the erection of that new chapel?—They were attended in other rooms, which were not large enough, so that some had to be seen in the morning, and some in the afternoon; but that was not during my time.

1108. Is the old chapel in which you now see your congregation adequate for the purpose?—It is.

1109. Is it large enough to accommodate all the 400 Catholic prisoners?—It is, but sometimes there are more than 400 Catholics, and the chapel is adequate to accommodate 600 or 700.

1110. You have only one service on Sunday, I believe?—We have only one service on Sunday.

1111. As the Roman Catholic prisoners are so well accommodated in point of room, why is it that you have only one service?—I am not allowed to have more.

1112. Have you made a request to the visiting justices?—I think it has been requested by my predecessor, and I think I have requested it myself; but the answer was, that the Protestant prisoners had two services, because there were 1,600 prisoners, and their chapel not being large enough to accommodate them all, part were sent in the morning, and part in the afternoon.

1113. Practically, the argument was, that the Roman Catholic prisoners are in the same position as the Protestants, because for the reasons you have mentioned, the Protestant prisoners could attend only once in the day?—Only once in the day.

1114. With so large a number of Roman Catholics, and, I presume, only one minister, why is it, under those circumstances, that you only go four days in the week?—I was only allowed three days up to last August, and then I applied for another day, immediately after I heard that something had occurred in the prison at Westminster, as I thought it was a good opportunity for applying for another day, and I was allowed another day.

1115. Do you now think it desirable for the spiritual interests of your congregation that you should attend every day?—I think it is necessary that I should attend every day.

1116. Have you applied for leave to attend every day?—I have not, because when I was given the fourth day it was explained to me that this fourth day was only given to me for my purposes, as far as it was necessary, and that if my business could be managed within three days, I should not be allowed to attend the fourth day.

1117. Who undertook to be the judge of that necessity?—I suppose the governor or visiting justices. I sent in my application in writing; but I received an answer by word.

1118. Then do I understand that you sent in an application to the governor for the fourth day?—I sent in my application to the visiting justices for the fourth day, and the fourth day was granted for all occasions when it was necessary.

1119. Was any explanation given of why that permission was so granted?—No explanation was given.

1120. Have you applied in writing for permission to attend the prison every day?—I have not.

1121. Why not?—At first we were only allowed three days, and then when I received the fourth day, under such conditions, I thought it useless to apply for anything further, as I thought it would not be granted.

1122. Did the answer that you received on that occasion come from the governor or from the visiting justices?—From the visiting justices through the governor.

1123. How do you know that it came from the visiting justices?—Because the governor mentioned it.

1124. Was the answer you received a written answer?—No, it was not.

1125. Who provided all the requisites for Divine service, over and above the table?—My predecessors.

1126. No allowance was made for it, I suppose?—No allowance whatever.

1127. You told the Committee that the Protestant chaplain had interfered with the Roman Catholics?—He has.

1128. In that answer, did you refer to the regular chaplain, or to the assistant chaplain?—I think both of them occasionally call the Catholics; but the case I mentioned had reference to the assistant chaplain.

1129. What was the nature of his interference?—I thought it was interfering with them, to call the Roman Catholic prisoners.

1130. I understand by your expression "calling the Roman Catholic prisoners," you mean that the Protestant chaplain occasionally sent for the Catholic prisoners?—The Protestant chaplain sent for the Catholic prisoners.

1131. Have you been directly informed by those prisoners what passed on those occasions?—I have, on some occasions.

1132. What was the nature of what passed?—In one case, I know the prisoner was questioned with reference to the crime he came in for, and he got a reprimand for it in very harsh terms; he said he was not pleased with him at all; it was generally on those subjects.

1133. Was there any attempt in any of those cases, as far as you know, to proselytise prisoners?—No.

1134. You mentioned one particular case, I think, of a man who has been twice in the prison, and the first time he represented himself to be a Protestant, and the second time he came in as a Catholic; I suppose it might be allowed to the Protestant minister in that case to feel some doubt with reference to what that man's religion was?—I should say not.

1135. Why not?—Because if the prisoner comes in the first time as a Catholic, and the second time as a Protestant, I am not allowed to see him.

1136. But in the first case, he came in as a Protestant?—Yes; the first time he came in as a Protestant, and the second as a Catholic, and therefore the Protestant minister questioned him, and asked him why he came in as a Catholic this time?

1137. That was a very natural inquiry under the circumstances, was it not?—I should say so, because the man was at liberty to declare whatever religion he likes, and when once he declares himself a Catholic, I consider the Protestant minister has no right to see him.

4 April 1870.

1138. He would not go back to the former declaration, you think?—On the first committal the prisoner came in as a Protestant.

1139. Do you believe he was a Protestant?—No.

1140. Why did he say so?—Because prisoners thought (although it is not true now) that they would be treated in a better manner as Protestants than as Catholics.

1141. How many instances have you known of either the chaplain, or the assistant chaplain, questioning prisoners in the manner you describe?—I only know of this case; but I know that it had been always the custom to call Catholic prisoners until I remonstrated.

1142. You say you cannot remember any other instance of Catholic prisoners being questioned by the Protestant chaplain?—I am almost of opinion that it was the constant practice, up to that time.

1143. That is rather a vague expression, is it not?—I think it is the fact.

1144. Could you inform the Committee in how many instances that has occurred?—The Protestant chaplain does not call every one, but certainly he must have called a great many; it was an understood thing that the prisoners were to go to him. I have another case here, where No. 1795, in the D Wing, William Flannigan, was asked to go and see the minister, and upon his refusing, the officer replied that he was bound to go. The prisoner, however, persisted in not going, and it was then left off.

1145. When was that?—I got the information from him last August. I have here several more cases; No. 1120, was sent for by the Protestant minister; No. 1185, Ignatius Holly, was sent for by the Protestant minister; No. 889, E Wing, Thomas Conner, was sent for by the Protestant minister, and I could give other instances if the Committee wished it.

1146. You have all those cases, which you can produce, if necessary?—Yes; I took them all down on one day, out of 24 prisoners that I saw one morning.

1147. It appears to have been in consequence of these numerous cases that you made a remonstrance?—It was.

1148. To whom?—To the visiting justices, in writing.

1149. You wrote a letter to the visiting justices, did you?—Yes.

1150. And the result of that was, that the practice was entirely withdrawn?—It was.

1151. When did you make the remonstrance in consequence of which that practice was stopped?—Either in August or September last.

1152. That practice has not been renewed, I believe?—It has not.

1153. And you have had no further cause of complaint on that ground?—I have had no further causes of complaint on that ground.

1154. Although you have the spiritual care of nearly 400 Roman Catholic prisoners, you receive no remuneration whatever?—I receive no salary whatever.

1155. Have you ever applied for any?—It has been applied for, generally in court, for all the Middlesex Houses of Correction.

1156. It was treated as a general question?—As a general question.

4 April 1870.

1157. And decided for all?—And decided for all.

1158. You have, therefore, not remonstrated upon that subject?—I have not.

1159. Mr. O'Reilly.] You consider that in this case of a prisoner having first entered himself as a Protestant, and on the second occasion as a Roman Catholic, the Protestant chaplain had no right to send for him, and ask him the reasons for that change, because you state, distinctly, that you would have no right in the converse case to send for him, and ask him why he had entered himself as a Protestant on the second occasion, seeing that he had entered himself as a Catholic on the first?—Decidedly.

1160. Equally, you are of opinion that the Protestant chaplain has no right to send for Roman Catholic prisoners, in order to hold private conversation with them, as you would certainly not be permitted to see a Protestant prisoner under similar circumstances?—Just so.

1161. Am I also right in assuming, that you can have no personal knowledge of what the Protestant chaplain says to the prisoner on this occasion; but that you put it on the broad ground, that for a chaplain of one religion to send for a prisoner of another religion, and to interrogate him personally, is primâ facie, a case of interference with his religious belief?—That is so 1162. Can you inform the Committee how many Roman Catholic prisoners there are generally in the infirmary?—Sometimes I have had as many as six; the number varies.

1163. You are not allowed to see more than 12 Roman Catholic prisoners at once, I believe?—During the week I am not.

1164. Then if you gave half-an-hour's instruction to each batch during the three hours, that would make about 72 prisoners that you could see; so that if you devoted the whole of your four days to this work, you would not be able to instruct more than 280 prisoners in the week, which would be about three quarters of the whole number of the prisoners under your charge?—That is so.

1165. Mr. Holt.] The honourable Chairman asked you, whether the priest who attended upon the gaol would obey all the rules of the visiting justices?—He would.

1166. Supposing one of those rules were at variance with the instructions given to him by his ecclesiastical superior, how would he act?—I should be glad if you will give me an explanation of the way in which it would vary; if it varied from his creed, then the visiting priest would not submit to it; but in any other way the visiting priest would submit to any regulation that might be made.

1167. You attended the gaol some years ago, did you not?—Yes, I did.

1168. And afterwards another clergyman took your place?—Yes.

1169. Did you resign your office?—I never had an office.

1170. I want to know how the exchange was made?—Simply because I was employed in other matters, and therefore I could not attend there any more, and another clergyman went in my place.

1171. Was there any communication with the visiting justices about the change?—None, whatever; the visiting justices had never complained of me in any way.

1172. You simply used to attend, and another gentleman took your place?—Exactly so.

1173. Mr. Dimsdale.] Did you make any application to the visiting justices for a second service, or for permission to attend the prison daily?—I have never made application for permission to hold a daily service.

1174. You cannot tell, therefore, that it would have been refused?—As I only received permissions gradually, first for one thing and then for another, I thought it would have been very difficult to obtain that.

1175. Did you ever make an application for afternoon service?—An application has been made.

1176. And what was the answer?—That it would not be given, for the reason that the Protestants had only one service for each division; I could not understand if the Protestant prisoners were only allowed to go once a day, why the Roman Catholic prisoners should be invited to go a second time in the afternoon to the service of the Church of England, having already attended one service in the morning.

1177. I think you stated to the Committee that you complained of the interference of the warders at one time, and of the chaplain at another?—I have remonstrated with the governor about a speech they made.

1178. And you never had occasion to complain of it again?—Never afterwards.

1179. And the same with regard to the English chaplain?—Never afterwards.

1180. So that as a matter of fact your complaints, whatever they have been to the visiting justices, have been remedied?—They have.

1181. At the present time you have no further complaint to make except as regards non-recognition and non-payment of salary?—And I should like to have daily service.

1182. That you have not applied for?—I have not applied for daily service.

1183. Did you ever apply for an assistant?—I never did.

1184. Is an assistant supplied to the Protestant chaplain?—There is the chaplain, and the assistant and the reader.

1185. Does any Dissenting minister attend the prison?—No.

1186. Mr. Matthews.] You have been asked about the rules of the prison which you might be tempted to disobey; have you ever known any rule that a priest would decline to obey?—Never; the rules are fixed up in our rooms, and are always obeyed.

1187. You stated to the Committee that the only rule that a priest would disobey would be a rule which conflicted with his creed?—Yes, and which I would consider no rule.

1188. Do you mean that if you were ordered to do something which your church considered would be unconscientious, you would be obliged to decline to do it and to resign your office?—They could not do that, because we have our liberty at present.

1189. Do you think the visiting justices would be likely to make any rule which would conflict with the rules of your creed?—Never; I do not think it is conceivable.

1190. Mr. Synan.] Did the visiting justices give you permission to attend as a Roman Catholic chaplain to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—They did.

1191. Supposing

1191. Supposing after that permission was granted to you, they made a rule in conflict with any doctrine of yours, would not that be a violation of their own permission?—It would.

1192. Do you not attend merely as a permissive Roman Catholic clergyman?—I do.

1193. So that, consequently, any change from one Roman Catholic clergyman to another does not in any respect alter your status?—It does not.

1194. In no respect do you consider the present state of things gives you that position as an officer of the prison which would be of moral service, as far as your teaching is concerned?—No.

1195. You think that if you were an officer of the prison, your teaching would have a greater moral effect upon the prisoners than it has in your present position?—Decidedly so.

1196. You told the Committee that you did not apply for permission to attend to give instruction every day; did you consider the answer which you received to your application to attend the fourth day as a special favour to be a complete and final answer upon that subject?—I considered it as a special favour.

1197. And, therefore, that it was an answer which would prevent any further application upon your part?—I thought so.

1198. It had that effect, at all events?—It had that effect upon me.

1199. You said that this prisoner, number 340, stated to you that the Protestant clergyman called him a ranter?—Yes.

1200. Do you consider that a term of opprobium in this country?—The prisoner considered so.

1201. Was he an Irishman?—He was.

1202. Do you consider a daily service, considering the character of these prisoners and their teaching and instruction, is absolutely necessary in order to produce a moral effect upon them?—No.

1203. Do you consider daily instruction more necessary again?—I do, even more so.

1204. Do you not consider that it would require the whole of your time as a Catholic clergyman and instructor to attend to these 400 prisoners?—It would.

1205. I find from returns of this gaol that the 400 Protestant prisoners have two chaplains?—They have.

1206. And a Scripture reader too?—They have.

1207. Would not the 400 Roman Catholics in the same proportion require, at all events, the continual attendance of one clergyman or instructor?—They would.

1208. You stated that the devotion of your office in this prison has interfered with your brethren, and imposed labour upon them which otherwise they would have been relieved from?—Just so.

1209. Is your support derived from the voluntary subscriptions of your people?—It is.

1210. Does not your attendance in the prison encroach upon the claims of your people, as well as of your fellow clergymen upon you?—It does.

1211. Does not it deprive them of that minister which they expect from you, and for which they pay you?—It does.

1212. Mr. Hutton.] You stated, in answer to the honourable Member, that the priest who took your place for the autumn was approved of by the visiting justices?—He would not have been allowed to go in to the prison without being approved by the visiting justices.

1213. With reference to the essentials to the service in your chapel, you say you paid for them yourself?—My predecessor paid for them.

1214. I suppose they still belong to him at the present time?—They do.

1215. Do they belong to him individually, or to the order generally?—I think he has an individual claim on them.

1216. Did you obtain that information from the prisoner, with reference to the English Church chaplain, under confession?—No, that could never be, because what is stated under confession can never be manifested.

1217. Mr. Downing.] If you had received in confession any information, you would not be at liberty to reveal it?—I could never reveal it.

1218. Not to any tribunal?—Not to any tribunal.

1219. Lord Henley.] You stated to the Committee, that you never received anything in the way of salary from the authorities of the prison?—Never.

1220. Have you thought at all, as to what amount of salary should be given for proper attendance upon 400 Roman Catholic prisoners?—I know that the senior clergyman has 400 l. a year, and the assistant 300 l., and there is besides a Scripture reader, and I think, as the proportion of Roman Catholics is one-fifth of the whole number, and that attendance upon them occupies a great deal of my time, the remuneration should be in proportion.

1221. Have you fixed upon any sum which you think should be allowed as the salary of the Roman Catholic chaplain in the prison?—I have not fixed upon a sum which I should like to suggest.

1222. You think it should be in proportion to the number of prisoners, and the time occupied in attending upon them?—Certainly.

1223. Are you aware, that among those who are entered as Protestants, there are many of various denominations?—I am.

1224. Do you think that the authorities of the prison should have to pay ministers of those various denominations?—None ever attends.

1225. But would not those Baptists and Wesleyans, and so on, have a right to demand a minister of their own way of thinking?—I think they would have the right to send for one.

1226. Do you think that all those ministers should be salaried officers of the prison?—If they attended daily, and were under the prison rules, and had a sufficient number of prisoners to attend to, it would be only fair that they should be.

1227. Have you considered at all the sources from which that remuneration should come?—I think as we are ratepayers the same as other people, it should come from the county.

1228. Do you not consider that it would fall heavily upon the ratepayers, to appoint ministers of all denominations?—I think the labourer would be worthy of his salary.

1229. You think it would be only fair?—I think it would be only fair.

1230. Mr. Dalrymple.] With respect to the invitation to attend the second service, how often did that occur?—It occurred, I think, once or twice in the same week; for one or two Sundays, not longer.

4 April 1870.

1231. Supposing the services were identical, it would be regarded as a privilege by the prisoners to get out of their cells in order to attend?—It would.

1232. If the Protestant prisoners had an opportunity of attending a second service, would not the Roman Catholic prisoners think it a hardship not to have such an offer made to them?—They would.

1233. I can well understand that you do not speak to Protestant prisoners, having so many of your own persuasion to attend, if for no other reasons; but would it be reckoned impossible for the Protestant clergyman to speak to one of your prisoners?—He is not allowed to do so at present, as far as I am aware.

1234. You told the Committee that the chaplain gave a spiritual reprimand to one of your prisoners?—Yes.

1235. What did that consist of?—He asked him first what was the crime he came in for, and one thing and another, which of course the prisoner thought it a liberty on the part of the chaplain to do, as he considered him a stranger to his own creed.

1236. That was what made me ask you if it was reckoned impossible for him to speak to one of your prisoners; did you hear of that interview with the Protestant chaplain from any one, but from the prisoner?—From no one but the prisoners, although I have heard from the officers that the Protestant chaplain was in the habit of calling them; they considered it a rule of the prison.

1237. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] I think the honourable Member for Lancashire asked you whether in the event of a rule of the prison clashing with the instructions you receive from your ecclesiastical superior you would obey that rule; do you receive special instructions from your ecclesiastical superior in taking charge of a prison?—None whatever.

1238. Am I right in assuming that the ordinary instructions given to a Catholic priest by his ecclesiastical superior would never be likely to clash with the performance of his duty as a prison minister?—Never.

1239. The noble lord near me asked you whether the payment of a Roman Catholic chaplain would not add to the burden of the ratepayers; but if giving more efficient instruction to the prisoners tended to the diminution of crime, would not that ultimately be a much larger benefit to the ratepayers than the temporary pecuniary loss which they might undergo?—I think it would be a great saving to them.

1240. And of course, the question of payment or non-payment, and provision or non-provision of religious instruction in prisons, must be a question to be decided according as to whether we are of opinion that religious instruction would diminish crime, or the reverse?—Just so.

1241. With regard to the prisoner who had announced himself as of one religion at one time, and another at another time, do you not think that if doubts were entertained with reference to the religion of a prisoner, it would be better that those doubts should be cleared up by inquiries conducted by some other person than the minister of one of those religions?—I think so; but there was no doubt that he had given his name as a Catholic.

1242. But if he had given his name as a Catholic first, and then as a Protestant, or vice versâ, you consider that it would be better that the inquiry should be conducted, not by the Catholic priest, or the Protestant minister, but by some one independent of either?—It should be inquired into by somebody else.

1243. You stated that you had made no application for salary, because you considered that the general question of salaries had been decided by the Middlesex Court of Quarter Sessions?—Just so.

1244. Chairman.] You stated to me, that there was an official intimation given for Catholics to attend the Protestant afternoon service?—Yes.

1245. And you remonstrated against that, and the result of that remonstrance was, that such applications were never repeated?—That was so.

1246. Can you give me an idea of the size of the Protestant chapel?—I think it does not hold more than about 800.

1247. If there was not room for the Protestants in the chapel, what was the meaning of asking Roman Catholics to attend?—Because there would be sometimes only 1,400 Protestant prisoners in the prison; therefore, if 800 go in morning and in the afternoon, the other 600, they could not fill the chapel, and therefore they would rather fill it up with Catholics than with Protestants.

1248. Your having evening service would not interfere in any way with the discipline of the prison?—By no means.

1249. As far as you know, Dissenters are not unwilling to receive the ministrations of the Protestant chaplain?—They are not unwilling.

1250. But can a Catholic prisoner be present at or receive the ministration of a Protestant chaplain?—He cannot; the cases are quite different.

1251. There are two Protestant chaplains and a Scripture reader, are there not?—Yes, there are.

1252. Would not an assistant teacher or reader be of great service to you?—If I could obtain one it would be of service, unless I had daily instruction, and had proper access to the prisoners so that I could go in at any time in the day, in which case I might myself instruct them all.

1253. But is not 400, considering the time that you must occupy in receiving confession, a very large number to be instructed by one chaplain?—It is a very large number.

1254. And therefore would you not be glad to receive the services of a teacher?—I would be very glad.

1255. You have no objection whatever to receive one?—No objection whatever.

1256. But you did not imagine you would get one?—I did not ask for one, as I did not think the teacher would be paid for, seeing that I myself was not paid.

1257. Mr. Downing.] With reference to the question of the Roman Catholic prisoners considering it a hardship not to be invited to attend the evening service, you did not mean to say that they would have considered it a hardship if they had not been invited out of their cells so as to enable them to attend the Protestant service?—No; they would think it a hardship to be confined in their cells.

1258. Mr. Synan.] I see that the classification of prisoners with respect to the Protestant religion is generally "Church of England, 1,489;" I find no mention of Wesleyans or Dissenters or anything of that kind, but I see "Various Denominations, 20"; they all go under the general head of "Church of England"?—That is so.

4 April 1870.

1259. And all attend the service of the Church of England?—They all attend the Church of England service.

1260. Except the 20?—Yes.

1261. So that it only comes to this, how many Dissenters this 20 is composed of, and how many Chaplains each three or four of them who might belong to the same denomination would require?—Yes.

1262. With respect to the secular teaching, how is that conducted?—There is a school teacher.

1263. For all?—Yes.

1264. Is he a Protestant?—Yes, I believe he is.

1265. But it is purely secular teaching?—Yes, it is purely secular teaching.

1266. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] At all events you have no complaints to make upon grounds connected with the secular teaching?—None whatever.

Mr. FRANCIS HENRY NEWLAND GLOSSOP, called in; and Examined.

Mr. F. H. N. Glossop.

1267. Chairman.] You are one of the visiting Justices, are you not, of Coldbath Fields Prison?—I am chairman of the visiting justices of Coldbath Fields Prison.

1268. How long have you occupied that position?—On and off, for two or three years, but I have been a visiting justice much longer than that.

1269. We may take it that you have been chairman of the visiting justices of Coldbath Fields Prison for two years?—About two years.

1270. Have you heard the evidence of the last witness?—Yes, I have.

1271. You know him to be the visiting priest of that prison?—Yes, I do.

1272. Do you wish to state anything to the Committee in reference to his evidence?—I think Mr. Kirner omitted to mention to the Committee that the Roman Catholic prisoners from the associated yards are assembled in a work-room during Sunday afternoon chapel, when books approved of by the priest are read aloud to them.

1273. By whom are they read?—I am not prepared to say that, but I believe by a warder; the books read are approved of by the Roman Catholic priest; I mention that as it has been made a subject of grievance that during former years the Roman Catholic prisoners were locked up in their cells.

1274. You say that now they are not locked up in their cells?—Not necessarily.

1275. Do you know that they are all assembled in that room?—I do not know that they all are.

1276. How many of them are assembled?—That I am not prepared to say.

1277. Could you give the Committee anything like the number?—No; this is a point which I have learnt from the governor of the prison, and did not ask a question with reference to the number.

1278. You do not know whether there would be 400 or 20 assembled in that room?—No; but I infer that any who might wish would be allowed to attend.

1279. Is there any rule published in the prison with reference to that permission?—I think not.

1280. Assuming this assembling of the prisoners together in the work-room to be a fact, as of course it must be from your statement, when was that arrangement made, and how long has it been practised?—That I am not prepared to say.

1281. Is the governor of the prison here?—The governor is not here.

1282. You say you do not know when this arrangement was made, or how many prisoners attend at a time, or whether any official intimation is given to the prisoners of that permission?—No, I do not know these details; they hardly come within my province.

1283. Will you state the reason why there is not an afternoon service allowed to the Catholic prisoners, as well as to the Protestants?—Simply because I am not aware that it has ever been asked for.

1284. If it had been asked for, would it have been granted?—Of course in so very large a prison, it is sometimes very difficult to make these arrangements; for instance, I regret that our own Protestant prisoners have not the opportunity of attending a second service; but difficulties have been suggested with regard to removing such large bodies of men, and collecting them from different parts of the prison. Speaking, however, as an individual member of the visiting justices, if an application was made I should certainly give it my best attention, and, if possible, I should advocate it.

1285. You spoke of the difficulties of moving large bodies of prisoners about; the gross number of Roman Catholics would be somewhat under 400, would it not?—Rather less than 400.

1286. What practical difficulty would there be in assembling those 400 in their own church, more than in assembling an equal, or a larger number of Protestants in their own church?—That is done already; it is done in the morning.

1287. Do a larger number of Protestants attend in the morning than in the afternoon?—I think the chapel is nearly filled each time.

1288. If there be no difficulty in the morning, why should there be any difficulty in doing exactly the same thing in the afternoon?—My answer to the first question was that I am not aware that any such application has ever been made.

1289. But you wish to impress upon the Committee the difficulty in moving a large body of people; does not that difficulty exist in the morning, and is it not practically overcome?—It is.

1290. Is there, therefore, any greater difficulty in doing the same thing in the afternoon?—Of course it might be done; I am not the governor of the prison, and therefore many of those details are rather in his province than in mine. Moreover, many of the officers are allowed leave on Sunday afternoons, therefore I merely throw it out that there might be difficulties in the way; but individually I should do my best if an application was made to overcome those difficulties.

1291. Assuming it to be the fact that all the Roman Catholic prisoners are allowed to be assembled in the work-room, and that a warder reads reads to them from a religious book, do you as a visiting justice think that that would be as useful to the prisoners as instruction by their own clergymen in their own chapel at that time?—No, I do not think so.

4 April 1870.

1292. I presume, of course, that you do not imagine that a Protestant warder reading a book in a school-room to a number of Protestant prisoners would be likely to have so good an influence as the teaching of the Protestant chaplain in the church?—No, I do not think it would.

1293. Then you are of opinion that it would be advantageous to the Catholics to have this second service?—I am sorry to say (although I am very desirous to give both Protestants and Roman Catholics every religious facility) that I am not of opinion that any very great amount of good is done by those services, knowing as I do the class of prisoners who attend those services, and the very little attention they pay to them.

1294. We will not go further into that question, but let me ask you this: assuming that any good results are derived from religious teaching, it would be more effective or more beneficial, would it not, coming from an educated and authorised minister than from a warder?—The priest selects the books which are read.

1295. The Committee know that perfectly well, but do you take my view of the point?—If the same book is read, the effect would be as good if a warder reads it as if the priest reads it.

1296. The Roman Catholic priest has told us that he attends the prison four days in the week?—I was under the impression that he attended only three days, but if he says he attends four, of course that is so.

1297. He attends on Sunday, does he not?—He attends on Sunday.

1298. Could you give the Committee any reason why the Roman Catholic minister is not allowed a salary?—The payment of the priest is not within the province of the visiting justices; it is within the province of the court of quarter sessions, and they have refused to agree to it.

1299. Would not a recommendation from the visiting justices have a considerable amount of influence upon the court?—The visiting justices had very great difficulty in persuading the court to allow mass to be celebrated in the prison at all. I was one of those who took a very active part in obtaining that permission from the court.

1300. The visiting justices, seeing the almost impossibility of obtaining a salary for the Roman Catholic chaplain, do not ask for it?—It has been asked for over and over again, and the majorities have been rather increasing against it. In January 1869, when Mr. Bagshaw brought forward his motion, I think the majority was 64 to 32, that is just two to one.

1301. Is there any particular reason why that majority should be swelled; are not the priests generally giving more of their time and more of their labour than they were doing before, and if they are allowed to give their labour and time, why should they not be paid for their service?—The majority of the magistrates appeared to be of opinion that there was a great distinction between toleration and endowment.

1302. Will you read the rules relating to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners that the priest may see at one time?—This is the rule limiting the number of prisoners whom the Catholic priest may assemble at any one time, "He shall be allowed to see any one prisoner of his own persuasion (who shall not object to see him) alone, or more than one and up to a number not exceeding 25, in the presence of a warder or subwarder, whose duty it shall be to see that no communications take place between one prisoner and another, and to put a stop to any such communications, if made or attempted, and, if necessary, to remove the prisoner offending." That is the rule now in existence.

1303. Did you not hear Dr. Kirner complain of not being able to collect the prisoners together and speak to them at the same time?—I can only say that that is the rule, and therefore if he does not assemble the prisoners together, up to the number of 25, it is his own fault, and not ours.

1304. The Roman Catholic priest has 380 prisoners to attend to, and having that large number of prisoners under his charge, if he imagines that it would be better for him to see them altogether at the same time, would it not be a wise thing on the part of the visiting justices to allow him to do so?—I never heard that he expressed any such wish; I am not aware that he even avails himself of the privilege of assembling 25, I believe he does not. I may also mention that he has full access to the Roman Catholic register, so that he has an opportunity of calling for any prisoner whom he wishes to see, but I believe that practically he very seldom sees prisoners who do not express a wish to see him, and that, again, is his fault.

1305. Can you speak to that of your own knowledge?—I am dependent upon information given me by others.

1306. You have raised an important point, and therefore I must ask you whether you are speaking from your own knowledge, when you say that the priest confines his ministrations to those prisoners who specially ask for him?—I could not know it, except from information given me by others; so that I do not know it of my own knowledge.

1307. All those prisoners are Queen's subjects are they not?—A very large majority of them are; we have some foreigners amongst them.

1308. Are not they on perfect equality in the eyes of the law, whether Protestants, Catholics and Dissenters; are not they all Her Majesty's subjects, and bound to obey the laws?—Their presence in the prison proves that they have not obeyed the laws.

1309. Why should there be any difference between one and the other; there are Protestants in the prison as well as Roman Catholics?—Yes.

1310. Are not there offenders amongst all religions?—The number of Roman Catholic prisoners is very much larger in proportion to the Roman Catholic population, than that of the Protestants; one-fifth of the prisoners in Coldbath Fields prison are Roman Catholics.

1311. Are not the Roman Catholics, as a rule the very poorest of the population?—They are from the poorer classes, certainly.

1312. Are they not from the very poorest the population in London?—I am not aware that the Roman Catholics are of a poorer class than the Protestants, generally.

1313. They are of a poor class, as a rule, are they not?—Yes, doubtless.

1314. Very few of the Roman Catholics London are of the better class; they are ge ra rally found amongst the working portion of the population, are they not?—I suppose so.

1315. Do you not think so?—Not universally so; I happen to know a great many Roman Catholics who are in my own position.

1316. The great body of them are poor, are they not; you have heard the evidence of the clergyman, that they are amongst the poorest of the population?—His congregation were so.

1317. His congregation was composed of costermongers and labourers, and a very few small shopkeepers?—So he tells us.

1318. Is not that the very class who are most liable to temptation as a rule?—Yes.

1319. Therefore, in fact, ought not every possible means to be taken with that class to try and reform them?—Yes.

1320. Does it ever strike you that if you do not take sufficient means to reform them, you have no right to accuse them of a greater tendency to crime than others?—Much misconception prevails with reference to our prisoners in Coldbath Fields.

1321. Will you kindly answer my question?—A large proportion of our prisoners are there for very short terms; one-fourth of our prisoners in Coldbath Fields are there for a less time than 14 days.

1322. Can you give the Committee an idea of what is the general character of the crimes for which those Catholic prisoners are sentenced?—A great many of them are not in for any crime at all, they are there for assaults on one another, and on their wives, and for drunkenness.

1323. Sir John Pakington.] You spoke of the Catholic prisoners being assembled in a room on Sunday afternoon to have books read to them, which are approved of by the priest?—Yes.

1324. You say all the Roman Catholic prisoners do not come?—I believe not; the governor tells me that those in associated yards attend.

1325. Under what regulation is it that they do come?—I am sorry the governor is not here, as that is one of the details that I could not give any answer to of my own personal knowledge.

1326. Is it or is it not optional with the individual Roman Catholic prisoners whether they attend these readings or not?—I expect it is, but I am not prepared to say of my own knowledge.

1327. But this is an important matter in relation to the direction of a prison; are you not, as chairman of the visiting justices, able to give a distinct answer to that question?—They are not compelled to attend any service.

1328. I asked you whether the attendance upon those evening readings was dependent upon the individual wishes of the Roman Catholic prisoners?—I feel certain the Roman Catholic prisoners would not be compelled to attend the readings if they did not wish to do so; indeed, I am not quite certain whether there is room for all the prisoners who might wish to attend.

1329. Where are those readings held; are they held in the Roman Catholic chapel, that is to say, in the old Protestant chapel, or are they held in a room set apart for the purpose?—In a room specially assigned for the purpose, a work room.

1330. If the number wishing to attend was too great to be accommodated in the room, would those readings be permitted to be held in the chapel?—Although I am chairman of the visiting justices, I am not paramount, but I can only say that individually I should be happy to entertain any reasonable request of that kind, but I cannot say what the decision of the majority might be.

Mr. F.H.N. Glossop. 4 April 1870.

1331. Do not the visiting justices meet collectively every week?—Yes, they do.

1332. Is not this case worthy of your consideration; is it right that this question should be left loose and unsettled by the authorities of the prison?—I am not aware that any application has ever been made to the visiting justices to allow the priest to hold a second service.

1333. Are you aware how and when this practice of afternoon readings on Sunday commenced?—No, I am not.

1334. You do not know how long it has been going on?—No; I was absent some months last year on the Continent, and I think it was about that time; that was about the time Dr. Kirner says he made complaints.

1335. Have the visiting justices ever communicated with the Roman Catholic chaplain upon the subject of these afternoon readings?—I am not aware that they have.

1336. The visiting justices have never consulted the Roman Catholic chaplain as to whether he would prefer these afternoon readings or a regular afternoon service in the chapel?—I was absent, as I stated, for some months last summer, and something of this kind may have taken place then, but I have been a very regular attendant for the last three years or for a longer time than that, and during that time I never recollect any application from the Rev. Dr. Kirner upon any subject whatever.

1337. Who is the reader?—One of the warders, I believe.

1338. Is he a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?—That I do not know of my own knowledge.

1339. You stated to the Committee that the details of this prison are in the governor's power and not in yours; is not the body of visiting justices a paramount authority which the governor is bound to obey, subject to the law?—Quite so.

1340. I apprehend you feel that the visiting justices and yourself, as one of them, must be responsible for every detail of the management of that prison?—Quite so.

1341. You stated to the Committee that the visiting justices had a difficulty in persuading the Court of Quarter Sessions to allow mass to be celebrated in the prison?—Yes.

1342. Was that the subject of a distinct motion and division in the court?—It was.

1343. Are you a magistrate?—I am.

1344. And the question of allowing mass was the subject of a division?—It was.

1345. How long ago is that?—I think it was the subject of more than one division; the first was in the May session of 1867, when the visiting justices, I being chairman at the time, reported to the court that it was our intention, believing that we had the power to do so, to allow the Roman Catholic prisoners to be assembled together for their service. Upon that an amendment was moved, that in the opinion of the court it was not expedient that the visiting justices should be allowed to do anything of the kind. Then we, the visiting justices, feeling very strongly upon the matter, considering that it was strictly within our province, and that if it was within our province it was our duty to grant such a permission, obtained the opinion of eminent counsel upon the point, which was to the effect effect that it was not contrary to the law that a service for Roman Catholic prisoners should be held, and we again moved the court in the July session of 1867, when the motion was carried by a considerable majority.

1346. You have not told the Committee how the first motion was decided; I presume the first question was postponed in order that the opinion of counsel might be taken, was that so?—No.

1347. How was it decided the first time?—Mr. Serjeant Payne moved, by way of amendment, "That with regard to so much of the report of the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields (presented to the court on the last county day), as proposes to allow the celebration of mass by a Roman Catholic priest within the prison, the court is decidedly of opinion that there is no authority for such a proceeding, and that it cannot be allowed;" that amendment was duly seconded and put to the vote, and on a division carried. The same amendment was then put to the vote as an original motion, and, on a division, carried.

1348. Then, on your first motion being carried in the negative, you took counsel's opinion and renewed the subject, and then the motion was carried?—Yes, that was so.

1349. Are you, individually, of opinion that a Roman Catholic priest, having the spiritual care of nearly 400 prisoners, ought to receive a salary for his services?—I am one of those who make a very great distinction between toleration and endowment.

1350. Will you give me a direct answer to my question?—Then I say, no.

1351. What is your individual opinion upon the subject?—I am afraid that my answer would not be satisfactory, because the question is, whether it is to be paid by the ratepayers; I take very great interest in this subject; a Roman Catholic magistrate called upon me, and I had a great deal of correspondence and communication with him, and in consequence of that, I brought this motion forward; but the gentleman who so called upon me, and prevailed upon me to bring this matter forward, expressed himself strongly to the effect that he did not ask for anything more than mere toleration; that he did not ask for endowment, for provision, for vestments, or payment, or anything of that kind.

1352. Excuse my saying that your answer does not apply to the question I asked you; I wish to have your individual opinion, unless you decline to give it me, whether you do or do not think that the Roman Catholic priest, having the spiritual care of nearly 400 prisoners, ought to receive a salary for his services, from the same funds as those by which the other expenses of the prison are borne?—I do not, as long as the Church of England is the established church of this country.

1353. The question of remuneration for the services of Roman Catholic priests in the Middlesex prisons, has, I believe, been brought before the court of quarter sessions?—It has.

1354. More than once?—Yes.

1355. And decided in the negative?—Yes.

1356. I presume you, as a member of the court, voted in the majority?—I did so.

1357. Are you aware what is the opinion of your brother magistrates upon the visiting committee, do they agree with you or do you think that the majority are in favour of a salary?—The opinions are divided, and I am not able at this moment to say which way the majority would go.

1358. How can you account for the discrepancy between you and the Roman Catholic priest who has given evidence before this Committee this morning with regard to the number of prisoners that he may see at one time; he told the Committee distinctly that he could not see more than 12, and you told the Committee equally distinctly that he is allowed to see 25?—I think it is possible that he may have an old copy of the rules; the permission at first was given for 10, and subsequently it was increased to 25, but I have every reason to suppose that he has had access to the present rules as they would be put up in his room.

1359. Where does he see those prisoners on week days, in a room or in the chapel?—In a room contiguous to the chapel.

1360. Am I right in supposing that the reason why the limit of 25 has been imposed is to prevent improper communication between one prisoner and another, which might occur if the number were larger?—I think that is one reason.

1361. Is there any other reason?—There, again, I must answer in rather a roundabout way; I am not aware that any application has ever been made for a daily service.

1362. If an application came to you as chairman of the visiting justices, either for an afternoon service for the Roman Catholics, or for permission to the Roman Catholic priest to attend six week days instead of four, should you assent to either or both of those proposals?—Individually I should give him every reasonable facility.

1363. Would you consider those reasonable facilities?—Unless some very special objection was urged owing to the number of the prisoners, but I should not anticipate that there would be.

1364. So far as you can now judge, you would assent?—Certainly.

1365. You told us that the Roman Catholic priest only sees those prisoners who ask to see him?—So I have been told.

1366. This, I think, you told us you could not state of your own knowledge, but that you had been told so; who told you so?—The governor.

1367. When?—I called at the prison the other day, anticipating that I might be called before the Committee, to satisfy myself upon certain points in order that I might not mislead the Committee. The governor has since written me certain particulars, of which that is one. He says that the priests have not assembled prisoners except for Divine Service, and that the priests visit prisoners in the infirmary, but have never been allowed to visit prisoners in the cells.

1368. You have that statement in writing from the governor?—Yes; if you will allow me to look at it again I will just read the sentence. It requires a slight modification. It is this: "They are allowed to see the Roman Catholic Register when they please, but seldom." It does not say never "see any prisoners, except those who make special applications to see them."

1369. That is the statement made to you by the governor; beyond that you have no knowledge yourself?—None whatever.

1370. Mr. O'Reilly.] You told the Committee that you did not know when this regulation with reference to assembling Roman Catholic prisoners for Sunday afternoon reading was made, but that you thought it must have been made during last summe mmer whilst you were absent, because about at time certain complaints had been made by e Roman Catholic priest; would you be kind ough to explain to the Committee what those mplaints were which you infer were the cause this regulation with reference to the Sunday ternoon reading?—I never heard of these com-ints by the Roman Catholic priests until to-y, and I had intended to say so. Dr. Kirner s said to-day that he made complaints about at date, but I had been under the impression at he had never made any complaints.

1371. Am I right in understanding that no mmunication upon the subject of these readings s made to the Roman Catholic priest?—Ex-pting that it may have happened during the ne that I was absent; but not to my know-lge.

1372. You stated to the Committee, "I am t aware that any application was ever made a Roman Catholic afternoon service;" now, e last witness has mentioned that that applica-n was made by his predecessor, have you any ans of knowing or ascertaining whether it s or was not made; I want to know what is exact force of your "not being aware" of it, ether the Committee would be justified in cluding that the application was not made, or ether merely that you, as an individual, were aware of the fact?—Of course, it would be y to cause a search to be made through our utes; but even now, I am not aware that . Kirner says he made any direct application the Committee; he may have had a conversa-n with the governor.

1373. He told the Committee that his prede-sor made such an application?—I am not are of any such application having been de.

1374. Are you aware whether an application made by Dr. Kirner, to be allowed to visit prisoners on a fourth day in the week?—I not aware of that; he says that he did, but, aking of my own knowledge, I am not aware t.

1375. You are not aware of what answer given to that application?—I am not aware t.

1376. Still it is consistent with you as chair-n of the visiting justices, not knowing any-ng of it, that such an application should have n made in writing, and that an answer should e been given to the chaplain?—If it occurred ing the three months that I was absent, that uld be so.

1377. With regard to the number of Roman holic prisoners who would be permitted to nd the afternoon service, you stated that you rred that any Roman Catholic who might n it would be allowed to attend; will you lain to the Committee what is exactly the e of your inferring it; have you sufficient wledge to enable us to take it as a statement they would be allowed to attend?—I know the feeling of my own Committee, and of the ing justices, is to grant every reasonable lity to the Roman Catholic priest.

1378. You have no knowledge which enables to say, as a matter of fact, that, under the s of the prison, the prisoners would be wed to attend the afternoon reading; you only speak to your knowledge of the general ing of the visiting justices?—Quite so.

1379. The Committee are not to assume that the prisoners are allowed, as a matter of fact, to attend that afternoon reading?—The Committee are to infer that considerable numbers do attend, but what number I cannot say.

1380. You suggest that there might be a difficulty with regard to the afternoon services, or the week day services, owing to the difficulty of moving large numbers of prisoners; would not that difficulty apply in exactly the same degree to moving all the Roman Catholic prisoners, in order to attend the afternoon reading by a warder, as to removing the same number of prisoners to attend an afternoon service given by the clergyman?—There would be no greater difficulty in moving prisoners to one church than to another, if they were all willing to attend.

1381. It has been stated that one objection made to granting an afternoon service to the Roman Catholic prisoners would be, that as the Protestant prisoners were only enabled to attend one service in the day, it might be considered an especial gratification to the Roman Catholic prisoners, because prisoners always look upon assembling together for whatever purpose as to some degree a greater relaxation than being locked up in their cells; does not that objection apply quite as much to assembling them for the purpose of an afternoon reading as for an afternoon service?—Yes, assuming that all the Roman Catholic prisoners were assembled together for that reading.

1382. Do you think that prisoners would not consider it a relaxation compared to their being locked up in their cells, even if they were not all assembled; is it not as great a pleasure to be assembled to the number of 50 as to the number of 200?—Yes, only it makes a greater difficulty in making the arrangement. I believe prisoners will accept almost anything by way of change. I believe those Roman Catholic prisoners would be quite as willing to attend the Protestant services or anything else for a change; anything to avoid the monotony of the cell.

1383. Can you give the Committee any proof of the statement you have just made, that the Roman Catholic prisoners would be as willing to attend the Protestant service in order to get out of their cells as the Roman Catholic service?—It is the fact that they did at one time, although it was not compulsory.

1384. That is the only proof you have got to advance that they would as willingly attend the Protestant afternoon service as the Roman Catholic service?—I necessarily hear and see a good deal of the class of persons in prisons, and I am sorry to see how indifferent they are to these matters. I will mention a case which occurred during the last few days. The Protestant chaplain mentioned the case of a prisoner who had come in a great many times as a Roman Catholic, and who came in eventually as a Protestant. I should mention that he came in originally seven times as a Protestant, and then 34 times as a Roman Catholic, and had the advantage of the Roman Catholic ministrations on all those occasions, and now he is in prison as a Protestant. The Protestant chaplain saw this man and remonstrated with him, and said: "How can you call yourself a Protestant; what reason have you for calling yourself a Protestant?" And the man said, "I have read all the Roman Catholic books and I wish now to have a turn at yours." I mention that to show how very indifferent these people are.

1385. I presume

4 April 1870.

1385. I presume you would not take a man who had been in prison 42 times as a typical instance of the ordinary run of prisoners?—No, of course not.

1386. Will you explain to the Committee the mode of registering the original prisoners when they enter the prison; when is their religion first registered, and by whom?—When they first come into the prison one of the warders is present and takes down certain particulars; the man's age, from what police-court he comes, and also what religion he professes.

1387. Is that entry ever changed subsequently?—Very rarely.

1388. When it is changed, on whose application, and in what mode is it changed?—It is only allowed to be changed on distinct application to the visiting justices, and in cases when we have had reason to suppose that there has been some mistake either that the man was intoxicated when he came in, or there was an actual mistake. I only recollect one or two instances of any change either way.

1389. It is changed, then, by order of the visiting justices?—Yes.

1390. On an application made by whom?—By the party who may be aggrieved; by the prisoner himself, probably. I do not think that above one or two such cases have occurred for several years past.

1391. When a prisoner, on entry, is registered as a Roman Catholic, is he visited by the chaplain of the Established Church?—Certainly not.

1392. He is never visited by the chaplain of the Established Church?—Never.

1393. How long has that been the rule?—I think ever since we have had a Roman Catholic priest visiting at all.

1394. How long have you had a Roman Catholic priest visiting?—Dr. Kirner said that he visited the prison in 1864.

1395. Are you, as chairman of the visiting justices and a member of the visiting justices' committee since 1864, prepared to contradict the evidence that has been given to the Committee, that, in at least 20 cases, the chaplain or assistant chaplain of the Established Church has sent for and seen prisoners who were registered as Roman Catholics?—I was very much surprised to hear such a statement. If any such statement had been made to the visiting justices, they would certainly have found fault with the chaplain.

1396. Do you think it right, then, to correct your first answer which you gave to my question, which was that, since 1864, when a prisoner, on entering the prison, had been registered as a Roman Catholic, he was never visited by the chaplain or assistant chaplain of the Established Church?—That is my answer, so far as my knowledge goes. I should say that no such occurrence had ever taken place. I should be sorry to contradict Dr. Kirner; but anything of this kind, if it occurred, must have happened during my unfortunate three months' holiday.

1397. Then does your own knowledge enable you to say that such an occurrence never could have taken place since 1864, excepting during the time you were absent from attendance upon the visiting justices?—Such an occurrence might have taken place; if it had taken place, it would, in all probability, have been brought to the knowledge of the visiting justices; but I distinctly say that no such circumstance was ever brought to the knowledge of the visiting justices, when I was present; if it had been, I should certainly have formed a very strong opinion upon it.

1399. The visiting justices have some reason which induces them to consider that 25 is the most suitable number under present circumstances?—Yes.

1400. You told the Committee that you did not know of your own knowledge that the priest had not availed himself of the full number of 25; do you know officially that the priest has not availed himself of the permission under that rule to see 25?—Officially, my information is that the priest sees the prisoners singly on the three days in the week (or the four, as he says) up to the number of 20 or 25, not the 20 collectively, but one after the other.

1401. Does the rule provide that he may see them collectively?—He may see them collectively, but as far as my information goes, he does not avail himself of that permission on week days.

1402. Questions were put to you by the honourable Chairman respecting the class from which the Roman Catholic prisoners were derived; from what class are the Protestant prisoners derived?—I may say from the lowest class.

1403. In fact, they are all very much the same class?—They are all very much the same class.

1404. Are there any special regulations in your gaol affecting the Roman Catholic prisoners which do not affect the Protestant prisoners?—I am not aware that there are any such regulations.

1405. You spoke just now of one prisoner who wanted free access to the library; what are the regulations respecting Roman Catholics receiving books from the library?—The Roman Catholics have a library of books of their own which are under the control, and have been approved of by the Roman Catholic priest; that was just the man's case; he had read all the books in the Roman Catholic library, and wished to read the Protestant books.

1406. Does the Roman Catholic prisoner select his own books, or are they selected for him?—I think they are given him by the priest.

1407. Do the Protestant prisoners select their own books?—They are given them by the chaplains. If a prisoner asked for any particular book, and it happened to be in the library, in all probability the chaplain or the priest would give it him.

1408. Were you one of the visiting justices in 1864 and 1865?—Yes, I was.

1409. At the time when Dr. Kirner resigned?—Yes.

1410. Do you remember the circumstance of Dr. Kirner ceasing to attend the prison?—No, I do not. We have generally received an intimation, I think, from Archbishop Manning, that such a gentleman would discontinue his visits a nd if the visiting justices would grant permission o some one else to attend, a change would take lace. In the case of Dr. Kirner there was no npleasant discussion; he simply left the prison.

1411. But the matter came before the visiting ustices, and permission was given to some other entleman to take his place?—Yes, that was so. Mr. Crescitelli, I think it was, who succeeded im.

1412. Mr. Matthews.] From whom did you earn that there was this Sunday afternoon read- ng?—From the governor.

1413. By a letter?—Yes.

1414. When was that letter written?—On the 0th of March.

1415. Four days ago?—Yes.

1416. Was that the first intimation you ever ad of a Sunday afternoon reading?—It was.

1417. Have you any reason for saying that the unday afternoon reading has ever been held?—I ave never been present at any Sunday after- oon reading, so that I cannot speak to it from ıy personal knowledge.

1418. Does the governor's letter inform you ince when the Sunday afternoon readings have een held?—No, it does not.

1419. Will you just read to the Committee hat he says about it?—"The whole of the oman Catholic prisoners (except those sick or therwise prevented) now attend the service in he old prison chapel, and the Roman Catholic risoners from associated yards are assembled in work-room during our afternoon chapel, when ooks, approved by the priest, are read aloud."

1420. He speaks in the present tense?—Yes.

1421. The change which introduced the pre- ent afternoon Sunday assembly was made in the rison without consulting the visiting justices?— must refer again to my absence for three months s an excuse for my want of knowledge on the oint.

1422. When did your absence terminate?—My absence terminated early in September last.

1423. Have you ever since your absence, until ou received that letter of the 30th of March, eard it suggested that there were Sunday after- ıoon readings in the prison for the Roman Catholic risoners?—No, I really never heard it.

1424. Have you any reason for supposing that here has been a Sunday afternoon reading?—I ave the greatest confidence in the governor; I now his handwriting, and if he states anything o be a fact, I believe it to be so.

1425. I do not understand that the governor ver states that that has taken place?—He says nat they "are assembled."

1426. What is the date of the rule allowing 5 prisoners to be examined?—I think it is 866; the copy I have here is a corrected copy, nd I am not quite certain when that correction vas put in. On the 23rd of March 1866, the umber was limited to 10, and subsequently in- reased to 25.

1427. I want to know when that alteration vas made; I see the correction is in manuscript, hen was that alteration made?—I think in the ame year, to the best of my belief, shortly after he rule was issued.

1428. Can you say what was the reason for ncreasing the number from 10 to 25?—I think more convenient room was found.

1429. Had not the priest requested that he ight be allowed to see more prisoners collec- ively?—Yes; as I say, the number at first was limited to 10, and when a more convenient room was found, the number was increased to 25.

1430. Was not that increased number in consequence of the request of the priest that he might be allowed to instruct more at a time?—I do not recollect that it was.

1431. Was there any reason for that alteration, except the desire of the priest to instruct as many prisoners as he could?—The priest does not avail himself even of that limited number.

1432. My question is, was there any other reason for it, beyond the wish of the priest to instruct this number?—If the governor had told us at one of our meetings, "The priest has hitherto had this room, and I think we can give him a larger room," I have no doubt we should have given him a larger room; but I am not aware that the larger number has ever been made use of, or application made for it.

1433. Mr. Synan.] Is the selection of those prisoners who attend these readings on Sunday afternoons, a selection by natural process or in what way is it made; do the prisoners them- selves volunteer to go, or are they solicited to go?—I am not in a position to give any further infor- mation, beyond that contained in the letter from the governor, about the afternoon reading.

1434. Is the reader a Protestant or a Roman Catholic?—I can only give the same answer to that question.

1435. Suppose the reader was a Protestant, it never has been brought to your knowledge that he is——?—I suppose a Roman Catholic book, read by a Protestant, would be equally efficacious as if read by a Roman Catholic.

1436. Then you think that a Protestant is as capable of reading, and giving instruction on a Sunday to the Roman Catholics in your prison, as a Roman Catholic would be?—No; I do not think anything of the kind.

1437. Supposing there had been an application made by the Roman Catholic chaplain to attend those readings, and to give the instruction him- self, and that was refused; what would you think of it?—I do not understand the question.

1438. Was an application made by the Roman Catholic chaplain to attend those readings?—I am not aware that any such application was ever made.

1439. Do you know who the predecessor of the present Roman Catholic chaplain in your pri- son was?—The Reverend Dr. Faa di Bruno.

1440. Will you take that letter from your clerk (handing a letter to the Witness); what is the date of it?—The 2nd of January 1869.

1441. Will you read it?—"Reverend Sir, I beg to apologise to you for the omission to for- ward sooner the reply of the visiting justices to your letter addressed to them on the 18th ultimo, which was from my having supposed that the governor had done so. In reply to your request for more religious books for the Roman Catholic prisoners, I beg to inform you that the visiting justices have ordered the supply of six dozen more books of a kind similar to those already in the prison, and with reference to your request to be allowed to deliver a catechetical instruction to the Roman Catholic prisoners every Sunday afternoon, the visiting justices desired you should be informed that they regret that the arrange- ments of the prison prevent them from acceding thereto."

1442. Were you then chairman of the visiting justices?—I think not; one of our rules is, that every member of the committee retires periodically for three months; therefore you are a member of the committee for 12 months, and then you retire for three months, during which time you are not a visiting justice, and many things may take place during that interval, of which you may or may not be cognisant.

4 April 1870.

1443. You stated to the Committee that you were personally aware of everything that occurred, except what occurred during your vacation?—I was a member of the committee in January 1869.

1444. You stated, I believe, that there was a table supplied for the Catholic service; was any application made to you while you were either a member of the committee or chairman for a more suitable altar, or for more suitable appliances for the Roman Catholic service?—I think there was an application made for a super-altar, or something of that kind.

1445. Is that the reply of the magistrates (handing a letter to the Witness)?—"Coldbath Fields, 15th March 1869. Reverend Sir, I am directed by the visiting justices to inform you, in reply to your letter addressed to them, dated the 12th instant, that as they have, within so recent a period, supplied everything which was considered necessary for the performance of the Divine Service for the Roman Catholic prisoners, they cannot accede to your request for the provision of an altar in substitution for the one now used for that purpose." I have no doubt that was their reply.

1446. That letter was sent to the chaplain, Dr. Faa di Bruno?—I think that probably would be the answer; it is not stated by whom it is signed.

1447. Have you not a copy of that letter in your minutes?—I may not have a copy of that letter. I have a copy of any letters that are sent by our clerk.

1448. Have you a copy of the answer sent by your clerk?—Yes.

1449. If that is not the answer you can refer to your minutes, and give the Committee the answer which was sent?—I have not the minutes here, but I can state that that was the purport of the answer that was made to the application.

1450. How many of the Roman Catholic prisoners do you know (or have you any knowledge upon the subject) attend the afternoon service in the Protestant Church on Sundays?—From my own knowledge I cannot say, because I do not attend the service. My official information is that none of them attend; but I am not present, and therefore have no personal knowledge.

1451. Mr. Hutton.] Is Mr. Colville the governor, absent now on leave by permission of the visiting justices?—I think he is, but he was unwell lately, and he was given leave to go to Ireland to fetch his wife home, and I trust he is well enough to do so.

1452. He has not applied to you for leave during the last week, knowing this inquiry was coming on?—It would not be on that ground. He obtained leave, as I said, to go to Ireland.

1453. Who is Mr. Harwood who signs this return?—He is a magistrate.

1454. Why should he have been chosen to sign this return of the number of prisoners on the 20th of July last?—That is during my unfortunate holiday again. Mr. Harwood was chairman of the visiting justices during that period. Dr. Kirner very fairly mentioned to me while we were in the lobby that I was incorrect in supposing that a Protestant warder reads to these Roman Catholic prisoners; a Roman Catholic prisoner is selected to do that.

1455. Mr. Fowler.] You referred to the library during the course of your examination, to whom does the library belong; does it belong to the county, or is it the property of the Roman Catholic clergyman?—The letter I read says that the visiting justices ordered six dozen books, therefore they would belong to the county.

1456. But those six dozen books would be ordered under the approval of the Roman Catholic chaplain?—The chaplain presents a list of the books, and if the visiting justices are of opinion that they are not in excess of the number that may be allowed, they purchase them.

1457. They were purchased by the county; in fact, for the Roman Catholic chaplain?—Yes.

1458. Mr. Dalrymple.] Do you know whether any Protestant prisoners attend two services on the Sunday?—I think very few. The Protestant chapel will only accommodate 800, and our numbers have been so very large, nearly 2,000, that even deducting 400 Roman Catholic prisoners, there would not be room for many of them to attend twice.

1459. As a rule, Protestant prisoners only attend one service on the Sunday?—Yes.

1460. Dr. Kirner mentioned some complaint which he had made, and which had been satisfactorily attended to; do you mean to tell the Committee that you never heard of any complaints that he made?—In this letter the governor mentioned that during the attendance of Dr. Kirner, Dr. Crescitelli, and Dr. Faa di Bruno, he never heard of any. I never heard of any complaints made by Dr. Kirner.

1461. During the period of your holidays, if you had been here, would you, as chairman of the justices, have heard of such complaints?—Certainly.

1462. You say that the justices meet weekly?—Yes, they do.

—1463. Do the justices only take up matters which are brought before them?—Necessarily so.

1464. Are the subjects submitted to them?—Yes, but we necessarily only take up such matters as are submitted to us.

1465. Are you generally present at the meetings?—I am very regular in my attendance.

1466. Chairman.] I wish to clear up one matter in reference to those prisoners who attend the readings on Sunday afternoons; you say they are taken from associated wards; will you explain to the Committee what is the meaning of the term "Associated Wards?"—The wards in which prisoners are in association. The prison in Coldbath Fields has been in the course of reconstruction; a considerable portion of it is entirely new, and there the separate system is carried out in its entirety. In some of the older parts of the prison it is impossible to carry out the separate system entirely, and therefore the prisoners are more or less associated.

1467. Will you inform the Committee what is the proportion of prisoners under the associated system, and the proportion of prisoners under the old system?—The larger proportion of the prisoners are now in separate cells, as almost all the alterations are complete.

1468. Then it is only the prisoners who are in association who are allowed to attend these readings on the Sunday?—Yes.

1469. The larger number are in the cells, and none of those are taken from their cells to attend these readings?—I have already said that the governor does not say that they are.

1470. The assumption is, that they are not taken from their cells, as the governor's letter says they are taken from the associated wards?—It does so.

1471. You said you were quite willing to give every reasonable facility you could to the Catholic priest?—Yes.

1472. The more facilities you gave, the more work he would have to do?—The more work he might do.

1473. The greater opportunity you would give him for work?—When I say we grant facilities to him, we do not impose any work upon him.

1474. But you would give him a longer time to attend and perform his duties?—Yes.

1475. But you would not pay him?—No.

1476. Mr. O'Reilly.] Can you tell the Committee whether it is correct to state that the Protestant prisoners have daily service at half-past nine a.m., and whether all the prisoners attend, except the men on the wheel, who attend on Wednesdays?—I believe that to be correct. I was not aware about the exceptions on Wednesdays.

1477. Mr. Downing.] Is your prison within the jurisdiction of the Middlesex bench of magistrates and the quarter sessions?—Yes.

1478. The same as the Westminster Prison?—Yes, the same as the Westminster Prison.

1479. You know Captain O'Brien, I suppose?—Yes, I do.

1480. You do not agree with him when he said, in answer to a question by an honourable Member, "Public opinion is growing so fast in the matter that I have no doubt before long it will be acceded to;" that is, the appointment of Catholic chaplains at a salary; do you agree with him in that?—I think I do.

1481. But if you agree that public opinion has been growing so fast, what do you mean when you say that the majority against paying Catholic priests has been larger each time the question has been proposed?—The Middlesex bench of magistrates does not necessarily represent public opinion generally.

1482. You tell the Committee that you consider that public opinion is growing in favour of paying Roman Catholic clergymen, but you say, at the same time, that you do not think that the majority of the Middlesex magistrates represents public opinion?—The majority of the Middlesex magistrates was very decidedly against the payment.

1483. And you say now that you do not think they represent public opinion in that respect?—Possibly not.

1484. Then how is it you are against the payment of a Catholic clergyman?—I do not agree with public opinion; I am opposed to the payment of Roman Catholic priests.

1485. You agree with Captain O'Brien, when he says that he despairs of paying the Catholic priest, unless legislation follows upon public opinion?—I agree with Captain O'Brien in that.

1486. And you differ with him when he says that he considers the Catholic priest ought to be paid according to the labour he has to undergo?—If he said that the Roman Catholic priest ought to be paid by the ratepayers, I differ from him.

1487. Out of the same funds as those from those which the Protestant clergyman is paid?—When the application was first made, it was distinctly intimated to us that the Roman Catholic body were willing to pay their own priest.

1488. You will allow the priest to attend in the gaol, and spend three or four hours a day attending to the prisoners, but you would not pay him out of any public fund?—No; just in the same way I might mention that the Jewish rabbi sent in, the other day, a quantity of Passover bread. We are quite willing to admit it, and give it to the Jewish prisoners, but we would not pay for it if we were asked to do so.

1489. You are in favour of toleration, and not endowment, are you not?—Yes, I am.

1490. You are aware that there is no Established Church in Ireland now?—Yes.

1491. And you are aware that the great majority of the people there are Catholics?—Yes.

1492. Are you aware that in all the poor law unions there, a Protestant chaplain is appointed and paid, although there may not be three Protestants in the union?—I am not aware that that is the case.

1493. Supposing that that is the case will you not reconsider your answer, when you say that you would tolerate, but not pay a man for the services that he rendered?—I really would not adopt a course which may be pursued in Ireland as an example of what should be pursued elsewhere.

1494. You pay there the Protestant chaplain for attending upon three or four Protestants, and you would not adopt that course in England as regards the Roman Catholics?—No, I would not.

1495. Mr. Fowler.] You would consider, as we often hear in the House of Commons, that Ireland is to be legislated for upon an entirely different principle from England?—No doubt.

1496. Mr. Downing.] You are aware, of course, from your position as a visiting justice, that no minister can be appointed to a gaol in England where there is no clergyman of the Established Church appointed?—I think that is so.

1497. Therefore it so far shows that the Established Church is acknowledged by the law and the State, that no other minister can be appointed to a gaol unless there is a clergyman of the Established Church previously appointed?—I think it does.

1498. And you are also aware, I believe, that if a clergyman of another persuasion, say a Catholic priest, does not visit the gaol for 14 days, then the clergyman of the Church of England may visit the prisoners of that denomination?—I am not aware of that.

1499. It is in the 5th section of the Act by which the Act of George the Fourth was repealed?—I was not aware of that section.

1500. Sir John Pakington.] Do you know enough of this gaol to know whether the Roman Catholic prisoners are kept separate from the Protestant prisoners?—They are not kept separate.

1501. Then in these associated wards to which you referred, the Catholic and Protestant prisoners are intermixed?—Yes, they are intermixed.

1502. Are you speaking of what you know, or not, when you say that no Roman Catholics are brought from the cells to the Sunday afternoon readings?—I do not know that.

Mr. F. H. N. Glossop, 4 April 1870.

1503. Sir John Trelawny.] What would be the effect, in your opinion, of prison confinement as punishment, if clergymen of all denominations could come at all times they pleased each day and visit the prisoners?—It would interfere very much with the discipline of the prison.

1504. You fix, therefore, certain periods of the day at which alone certain clergymen should be allowed to visit?—Certainly.

1505. That is equally the case with all denominations?—Certainly.

The Rev. Dr. Æmilian Kirner, further Examined.

Rev. Dr. Æ. Kirner.

1506. Chairman.] Do you know anything about these readings on Sunday?—I do.

1507. Will you state to the Committee what you know of them?—I know that for the last six months the Roman Catholic prisoners who are confined in the old prison, are assembled together in one ward, and one of the prisoners reads to them, but the Roman Catholic prisoners who are confined in the cells (and who are the majority now), are not taken out of their cells to the reading.

1508. Were you consulted with reference to these readings?—I was not; I think they were already established, when I came in again after the Rev. Dr. Faa di Bruno.

1509. It must be eighteen months since that practice was resorted to?—Very likely.

1510. At any rate, you state that the minority of the Catholic prisoners are in the association wards, and that the majority are in that portion of the prison where they are separately confined?—It is so now.

1511. I wish to ask you upon one other matter with reference to yourself; do you confine your ministrations on week days to those prisoners who specially send for you?—The number of prisoners who send for me is generally so great, that in consideration of the three days (now four) which I am allowed, the time is scarcely sufficient for me to see them singly, one after the other; that is the reason why I never collect them, as I have to hear their confessions; I have sometimes thirty applications in one day, but whenever I have time, after I have heard those who have applied for me, I send for those who are going out, or those whom I have not seen, so that I do not restrict myself to those who apply for me.

1512. What is the number you are allowed to see collectively?—I think I must have made a mistake in saying 12; I think the rule is changed now, and it is 25.

1513. Mr. Holt.] You say that it is a prisoner who reads?—I think it is a prisoner who reads, and not a warder.

1514. Chairman.] Is there any doubt that an application was made to have catechetical instruction upon the Sunday?—An application was made to have service on Sunday afternoon.

1515. Mr. Synan.] When you use the word "singly," in respect of seeing these prisoners, you mean to refer to hearing their confessions?—Yes, to hearing their confessions.

The Rev. Dominic Crescitelli, called in; and Examined.

Rev. D. Crescitelli.

1516. Chairman.] You visit the House of Correction at Clerkenwell, do you not?—I do.

1517. How long have you been there?—I was appointed officially about a year ago, but I used to attend in Dr. Faa's absence; altogether about 18 months.

1518. What was the daily average of Catholic prisoners?—The daily average would be about 10 new ones, but altogether there would be 50.

1519. What is the gross number in a day in the prison?—About 50 or 60.

1520. Have you seen the return for last July?—No. (The same was handed to the Witness.) 1521. You see the date of that is the 20th of July 1869?—Yes.

1522. What is the number of Catholic prisoners there?—Sixty.

1523. That is about the average?—Yes.

1524. Have you service now on Sunday?—About four months ago I obtained permission to officiate on Sunday.

1525. Had there been an application made before then?—No application was made that I know of.

1526. But was that permission given voluntarily, or in consequence of an application?—I made the application myself.

1527. It was in consequence of that application that permission was granted?—It was.

1528. Do you visit the prison on week days?—Every day in the week; for in Clerkenwell there are both males and females confined.

1529. You visit the prison every day in the week?—Yes.

1530. What attendance do you give?—From twelve till two; two hours.

1531. And on Sunday?—On Sunday, I attend from half-past seven till nine o'clock.

1532. Have you a second service on Sunday?—Only one in the morning.

1533. Do you wish for a second service?—I would like to have it.

1534. Did you ask for it?—No, I did not; for lately I asked for this morning service, and I thought it was too much to ask for all at once.

1535. The necessaries for the Catholic service have been supplied by you, have they not?—I had to provide them all myself.

1536. You got no assistance from the authorities?—None, whatever.

1537. I must ask you this: do you receive any salary?—None.

1538. Do you think that there is duty enough in that prison to occupy the attention of a Catholic clergyman?—Two hours are scarcely enough. I cannot see the prisoners myself. There is an officer who calls upon them, and very often there are some prisoners who, he says, have refused; but I cannot ascertain at the time whether they have refused or not; and I ask the prisoners next day, "Did you refuse?" and they say, "No."

1539. Have

1539. Have you free access to the prisoners?—No.

1540. Do you think that it would be of advantage to you, and to them, if you had free access to them?—It would.

1541. Have you any statement to make to the Committee of any kind?—Only that I would like to have a daily service, and better accommodation for my duty.

1542. Is there a daily Protestant service?—Yes, every day.

1543. And you would wish to have a daily service at which you could instruct prisoners generally?—To instruct the prisoners, and at the same time to remove the temptation for them to attend the Protestant service instead of being locked up all day long, as there is no work done at the prison; and unless they attend the Protestant service, they would remain in their confinement.

1544. Is there a temptation for them therefore to attend the Protestant service?—There is great temptation.

1545. As a matter of fact, do any of them attend the Protestant service?—As a matter of fact, I have lately remonstrated, as some of them used to attend, and it has been stopped.

1546. Who has stopped it?—The visiting justices.

1547. Up to the time you remonstrated were the Catholic prisoners in the habit of attending Protestant worship?—There were one or two cases, but those were more mistakes on the part of the warder than on the part of the justices.

1548. The temptation existed, however?—It was a great temptation.

1549. The visiting justices thought it wrong to have a difference made, that while one body were attending their own worship, the other body should be locked up in their cells?—I think it is unjust.

1550. Have you any other statement that you wish to make to the Committee?—Nothing in particular.

1551. Mr. O'Reilly.] You were told by some of the warders, with regard to certain individual prisoners, that they had refused to see you, and subsequently, those prisoners told you that they had not refused?—They had not refused.

1552. How did you see those prisoners?—The next day I used to send for them to find out whether it was true, or not.

1553. Would it be the same warder the next day?—The same.

1554. Then they did not refuse?—They did not refuse.

1555. Chairman.] Do you attend the female as well as the male prisoners?—Yes.

1556. So that your duties are increased by that?—Yes; I must see one side on one day and one on the other.

1557. Mr. O'Reilly.] Do you see more than one prisoner at a time?—Only one at a time.

1558. Mr. Holt.] In what way have you not had free access to the prisoners?—I have a room set apart for myself, and I have before me the names of all prisoners that I can send for, and I give the warder a list of a certain number of prisoners, who are free to come or not.

1559. You can see any prisoner who wishes to come?—Any prisoner who wishes to come.

1560. In what way, then, have you not free access; what do you complain of?—That if word be brought back that the prisoner has refused to come to me, I cannot ascertain whether that prisoner has really refused or not.

1561. How would you remedy that?—By having personal access to the cells.

1562. You wish to be able to see each prisoner in his own cell?—Not always; only when they are said to have refused, I should like to be able to ascertain whether they refuse or not, because it is very often done by the warder to avoid perhaps a little work, or something of that sort.

1563. You would wish for permission to see each prisoner who is reported to have refused to see you, in his own cell?—In his own cell.

1564. Mr. Matthews.] How is that managed by the Protestant chaplain?—The Protestant clergyman goes from cell to cell.

1565. Mr. Synan.] What you mean to say is, that you have not the same free access to your denomination as the Protestant chaplain has to his denomination?—No.

1566. How did you find out this contradiction between this statement of the prisoner and the statement of the warder; was it when the prisoners were collectively together?—I asked the warder before the prisoner. The warder says: "Oh! the prisoner does not remember, or makes a mistake."

1567. You give a certain number of names to the warder, and tell him to bring them to you, and he comes back bringing some and excusing others?—Yes; he says they have refused.

1568. Were those prisoners collectively assembled at any time afterwards?—Yes, in the chapel.

1569. Was it then when they were together, and you compared one statement with the other, that you ascertained the difference between the warder's and the prisoner's statements?—Yes; when I ascertained the refusal, I took down the number of the prisoner, and said: "After two or three days I will send for the prisoner again," and two or three days afterwards the prisoner came; and I asked if he refused, and he said, "No."

1570. Would the prisoners be together then?—No; they would be in their cells.

1571. And not in their chapel?—No; only once a week they are in the chapel.

1572. Are you under the impression that the rules of the prison prevent you seeing them together?—No, not exactly that. I have permission to see them once more in the week together.

1573. Do you do so?—Yes, every Friday.

1574. And when you saw them together every Friday they then denied that they had sent you this message through the warder?—I could not ask them personally, as I had only an hour for instruction, and I had no personal interview with them.

1575. Do you think that instruction for an hour once a week, to 60 prisoners, is sufficient?—It is not sufficient.

1576. Are the 60 prisoners composed of male and female prisoners?—Yes.

1577. So that each sex would only get instruction once a fortnight; is that so?—No; the chapel is divided by a partition, and they are instructed together every Friday.

1578. Sir John Trelawney.] You told the Committee that you would like to have free access to the prisoners?—Yes.

1579. What limit would you put for that?—If

4 April 1870.

I received any refusal, I would wish to go and see myself, and ascertain the truth of it.

1580. Do you not think that there might be a difficulty about the punishments, if you could go and see the prisoners at all times in the day?—I never interfere with the discipline or the punishment of the prisoners.

1581. You would wish to have the same privilege as the Church of England clergyman?—Yes.

1582. Is it not the case that Roman Catholic ministers have as much or more necessity for personal communication with their flock than the Protestant ministers?—Quite as much; the Protestant minister can see every one of them whenever he wishes, and I cannot; he goes to their cells.

1583. You require a rather expensive fitting up for your chapel, do you not?—Something more decent than we have at present.

1584. You would require a larger expenditure, would you not, than the Protestant clergyman would require?—I do not know what he would require.

1585. You would be content to have the same accommodation as that which is given to the Protestant minister?—What is necessary to carry out my services.

1586. Of that you would be the judge?—The prison authorities could ask anybody else, if they did not like to rely upon me.

1587. How much time would you take each day in order to do full justice to the 60 prisoners, and in order not to interfere with the punishment?—Three hours and a half.

1588. Mr. Hutton.] With reference to those accessories to the service of your church, did you buy them yourself?—No; I made an application to have an altar, and perhaps the authorities did not understand what an altar meant, and then it was refused, upon which I asked for the accommodation of a cupboard, and I obtained that, and accommodated my altar in this cupboaed.

1589. With regard to vestments, who provides them?—I have to provide them myself.

1590. Are they your own property, or the property of the Order?—The property of the Order.

1591. Mr. Downing.] To what parish are you attached?—To Hatton Garden; I belong to the Italian Church.

1592. How far is that from the prison?—Five minutes' walk.

1593. You stated to the Committee that you would wish for a daily service in the gaol?—Yes.

1594. I take it for granted, that if you had to perform the service of your church daily in the goal, it would occupy a very large portion of your time?—It would occupy about three quarters of an hour additional.

1595. And that would take you away from your other parish duties?—Yes; it always interferes with my work in the parish.

1596. Are you dependent upon voluntary offerings for your maintenance?—Entirely.

1597. With regard to the essentials necessary for the celebration of mass, I take it for granted that they are the same with all clergymen in every country, so far as the vestments, and the chalice, and the plate are concerned?—Yes.

1598. These are things which cannot be dispensed with?—They are quite indispensable.

1599. In fact, you could not celebrate mass without them; it would be contrary to the canons of the Church?—You could not do it without them.

1600. Mr. Fowler.] Who appointed you Roman Catholic chaplain to the House of Detention?—The visiting justices.

1601. Did they specially appoint you?—They specially appointed me, after an application which I made.

1602. You are appointed by them, and not simply have permission to attend?—I have a special appointment. I had an answer from them.

1603. Have you the answer with you?—Yes, it is as follows: "21st September 1869. Rev. Sir,—I am directed by the visiting justices of the House of Detention to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, addressed to them, and to inform you that they feel inclined to accede to you request to be allowed to officiate on Sunday mornings, for the benefit of the Roman Catholic prisoners." That is as regards the Sunday service. The other letter is with reference to daily visits, and is dated 19th March 1869: "Rev. Sir,—I am directed by the visiting justices to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, in which you request to be allowed to visit the Roman Catholic prisoners in this prison, instead of the Rev. Dr. Faa di Bruno, and to request that you will be so good as to attend their meeting, at the prison, on Monday next, at one o'clock, with such references, or credentials, as you may have in your possession."

1604. Then I take it that you applied under the direction of the Archbishop of Westminster for permission to visit the House of Detention, and that that permission was given by the visiting justices?—Yes, as Dr. Faa belonged to the same community, and was leaving for Rome, it was thought desirable that I should take his place, the prison being under our charge; it is in our parish.

1605. What is the Catholic population of your parish?—The parish is very small, regarding the population; it contains about 2,000 Catholics.

1606. And how many clergymen have charge of it?—We have four clergymen.

1607. So that you are one of four clergymen who have charge of 2,000 souls?—Yes.

1608. Do you consider that from two to three hours of your time daily is taken up by your attendance at the House of Detention?—It is quite taken up.

1609. I suppose that numbers of the prisoners you see there are only there, as a rule, for short periods; they are prisoners waiting for trial, are they not?—Generally; but some are sent for bail for five or six months.

1610. A large proportion are there but a short time?—Yes, for a fortnight or three weeks.

1611. I suppose the chapel you have there accommodates the prisoners you generally have attending the service?—The present chapel is a very uncomfortable one; it is a dormitory turned into a chapel.

1612. But it is large enough to accommodate all the prisoners?—It is large enough to accommodate the present number.

1613. Mr. Dalrymple.] The honourable Member for Longford asked you about an apparent contradiction with respect to the prisoners refusing to attend you; did you ask the warder respecting the accuracy of the statement?—I asked the warder, and he said, "You ought not to believe a prisoner, because he very often tells lies;"

did not take much interest in it after that, as was the case of a man who was in for a short eriod.

1614. Have you ever applied for leave to see he prisoners together oftener than on Sundays nd Fridays?—No; I had two days in the week or instruction; but, in order to have the privilege f a Sunday service, I told the visiting justices hat I would give up one instruction in the week n order to have the Sunday service; so they ceded to my request, by allowing the Sunday rvices, and removing one week day's instruc- on.

1615. What is the largest number of prisoners t a time that you have had to minister to?— ifty or 55, or 60 at most.

1616. Chairman.] Is not Dr. Kirner a member your community?—Yes.

1617. Are you not obliged to have an ad- tional number of clergymen in consequence of ose prison duties?—Yes, it leaves only two iests for 2,000 people.

1618. Sir John Trelawny.] The accommoda- on in the chapel is not very good, as regards e size of the room, I believe?—No; and there e also beds and other sleeping accommodation the room.

1619. But supposing one chapel existed for l denominations, should you think there would any difficulty in using the same building?— do not think that my superior would allow at.

1620. Is it the rule that Catholics or Pro- stants attend the same churches on the Con- nent in some places?—I think it might be done exceptional cases.

1621. Do you know what has been done in witzerland?—I have heard of it.

1622. Should you see any objection in prin- ple to its being done here?—Not in principle, t in practice.

1623. Would there be any difficulty in that, if e hours were so arranged for the Protestants to end at one time, and the Catholics to attend at other; that would give you very much greater nvenience than you enjoy at present?—It is ry inconvenient to have different services in the ne place; it would take half an hour to put up altar, and everything connected with the vice.

1624. Still, if such a thing has been done, it uld affect your opinion?—It is impossible to it conveniently.

1625. Mr. Synan.] Did you apply for permis- n to instruct prisoners collectively two days in week?—Yes.

1626. Was that permission granted?—Yes, it s granted.

1627. I understood you to say that it was only Friday that you gave instruction?—When I l two days in the week, I had no Sunday vices.

1628. What you mean to say is, that you have week day and one Sunday; I understand to say that you made your first application visiting this prison on the 19th or 20th of rch?—Yes, on the 19th of March.

1629. I understand the permission to perform service, was only given on the 20th of September afterwards?—Yes, that was so.

1630. Are the Committee to understand, that the Roman Catholic prisoners were left without service from the 19th of March till the 20th of September?—Yes, and that was why I made the application, because they were locked up in their cells.

1631. They had no sort of service before the 20th of September last?—No.

1632. You complain of this altar that you call a cupboard?—Yes.

1633. Did you make any complaint about it?—I did not dare to make any complaint yet, but I intend to make it in time.

1634. Is it suitable for your purposes?—It is not exactly so.

1635. Is it a cupboard or table?—It is a sort of chest of drawers in a cupboard, and on this chest of drawers I fit up my altar.

1636. You do it on the top of a chest of drawers?—Yes.

1637. Mr. Hutton.] Do you know what would be the cost of the accessories for the altar?—It depends upon the material and the work.

1638. What would be a fair price for the necessaries; 50 l.?—Not so much as that.

1639. I think Mr. White, the chaplain for Westminster, said that he spent 150 l. over the accessories of the altar, and that it could not be done for less?—That would be the fitting up of the altar.

1640. Do you think that that is an excessive sum of money to spend over the fitting up of an altar, considering the vestments, and so on?—No, nothing at all.

1641. £. 150, you think, would be a proper sum?—Yes.

1642. Mr. Dalrymple.] An honourable Member asked you a question with reference to the Roman Catholic service; do you mean to tell the Committee that the Roman Catholics had no service before September last?—There was no service.

1643. There was no service before September last?—No.

1644. There was a service on Friday then, and there is one on Sunday now?—On Friday there is instruction, and there is mass and sermon on Sundays.

1645. Mr. Downing.] Do I understand you to say that you gave up instruction on the second week day for the purpose of getting liberty to celebrate mass on Sundays?—Yes.

1646. Did that occur in a personal interview between yourself and the visiting justices?—It was after my application. I stated in my application that in order to have this privilege of officiating on the Sunday I would give up one week day service.

1647. You made the proposal?—Yes.

1648. And you got permission to perform mass on Sunday?—Yes.

1649. Chairman.] Are there any remarks that you would wish to offer to the Committee upon any subject that occurs to you which has not been dealt with?—No, I do not think that there is anything further that I would wish to represent.

Mr. Henry Pownall, called in; and Examined.

4 April 1870.

1650. Chairman.] You have been for a long time chairman of the justices of Middlesex, have you not?—For nearly 40 years a magistrate, and chairman of the quarter sessions for 27 years, and in virtue of that office I am ex officio a visiting justice of all the three prisons, Clerkenwell, Westminster, and the House of Detention, and of the school at Feltham.

1651. Do you wish to make any statement to the Committee with reference to the subject which engages its attention?—I have heard the evidence which has been given this morning, and, with regard to the House of Detention, I would say that I believe all the applications that have been made by the Roman Catholic priest have been acceded to. The proposal to give up one week-day's instruction, in order to have a Sunday service, was entirely a voluntary act of the priest; he proposed it in his communication to us, and we supposed that he did so because he was otherwise engaged, especially during the period of Lent. The prison, at present, is exceedingly crowded, and not equal to the wants that are required of it; and we were only able to fit up a small place, which was formerly a dormitory, as a Roman Catholic chapel, and which will hold, I think, perhaps 50 persons. We understood, certainly, from the governor with whom the priest who was just examined placed himself in communication, that he was perfectly satisfied with with the accommodation that was afforded. The chest of drawers, now called a cupboard, was made under his own directions, and the governor assured us (for I asked the question three or four times) that he had said he was perfectly satisfied with it; the drawers underneath hold his vestments. The cupboard (which is more like a wardrobe) opens, and, when opened, forms an altar, and I am surprised, now, that the Catholic priest objects to it. I should not be surprised at his objecting to the place as a chapel, because it is not adequate; but we have no other room that we could appropriate him at present.

1652. Is there any intention on the part of the justices to render that a more fitting place for divine worship?—I do not think it is possible for them to do so, but if they carry out their intention of enlarging the House of Detention, then, I think, his requirements would be attended to.

1653. You have heard the evidence to-day of Dr. Kirner; have you anything you would wish to state in reference to that evidence, as regards Coldbath Fields Prison?—With regard to the Sunday readings, it came upon me quite new and fresh, as it did to the chairman of the visiting justices, but I must say that I am exceedingly glad of it; it is one of those internal regulations which rest entirely with the governor, and I apprehend he has had recourse to that simply because many unpleasant observations were made with regard to locking up Roman Catholic prisoners while the Protestant prisoners were in chapel, which is absolutely unavoidable.

1654. You have heard that letter from the governor read by Mr. Glossop, in which it was stated that the prisoners were taken from the associated wards, does that satisfy your mind that they were not taken from the cells?—No, it would not; I scarcely understand what is meant by that phrase.

1655. You know the prison, I believe?—Perfectly well. I can understand what is meant by the prisoners being associated when they are on the treadmill, and when they are picking oakum, because in that part of the prison there are 700 or 800 all occupied together, but in other parts of the prison, in the new part especially, they are all in separate cells. In a part of the old prison the tailors are also engaged in association, and I apprehend that it means that those who attend the readings are selected from those who work in the associated rooms, because that is a privilege that is conferred, more or less, upon the prisoners who have been in the prison, we will say, upwards of three months, and have obtained a star, or who have not been reported. It is a bonus, in fact, to those prisoners.

1656. Will you allow me just to ask this question for information; in the new portion of the prison is not the separate system carried out?—Entirely.

1657. On the Sundays when the prisoners are not attending divine service in either church, are they not in their cells in this new part of the prison?—They are.

1658. Then if they are taken from the old part of the prison where they are necessarily in association, the majority who are in their cells have not the advantage of this reading upon the Sunday?—If that be so, certainly they would not, but as I said before, this comes upon me as something quite fresh, and therefore I am not able to enter into details respecting it; but whether the prisoners come out of their cells in the new prison, or from association in the old prison, I think it is in any case more as a matter of reward or encouragement than anything else. The cells in the old prison are not certified.

1659. Would you have any objection to an application on the part of the Roman Catholic priest for a second service upon the Sunday?—Certainly not; nor do I believe the visiting justices would have, if it had been applied for.

1660. Did you hear that even the applications for catechetical instruction which every church believes to be important, were refused?—I did not catch the dates of those applications, and much must depend upon the dates. The views of the visiting justices have, of course, been very much changed since the Roman Catholic Prisoners Chaplains Act was passed.

1661. This letter is dated the 19th of January 1869; have the feelings of the visiting justices undergone a change since then?—I only know that if it had come before us when I was on the Committee, I certainly should have supported it.

1662. The words are these, "With reference to your request to be allowed to deliver a catechetical instruction to the Roman Catholic prisoners every Sunday afternoon, the visiting justices desired that you should be informed that they regret that the arrangements of the prison prevent them from acceding thereto." Now do you think from your great experience that that is really a sufficient answer to the application?—To a certain point it would be, because the warders have part of the Sunday for their recreation, but I do not think that that would be such an objection as could not be overcome.

1663. There would be no more inconvenience, I suppose, to the prison officers, arising from the catechetical instruction, than from the reading which hich you have now heard for the first time?—I annot conceive that there would.

1664. Do you imagine that there would be ore practical difficulty in assembling the pri-oners of each denomination on Sunday afternoon an on a Sunday morning when they go to their espective places of worship?—Yes, there would, ecause the warders would, many of them, be bsent from the prison, and I would just add that at is one reason why half the Protestant pri-ners are locked up in the afternoon; if we had e same appliances on Sunday as we have every y in the week, then at least 400 of the Protes-nt prisoners certainly might be assembled ther in one of the galleries, or somewhere else, d have an afternoon service.

1665. But you have two Protestant chaplains, believe?—We have.

1666. And could not any arrangement for the iritual instruction of Protestants in the after-on be adopted?—As far as chaplains are con-rned, with perfect ease; but we should require arders to unlock the men out of their different lls and to superintend them while they are in e chapel, and to guard against their communi-ting with each other, or any violent insubordi-tion.

1667. But that would not be an insuperable stacle?—It would be unless we kept all the rders in the prison.

1668. Is not the same inconvenience caused those readings if all the prisoners attend?—s I said before, it is quite a new thing to me, t I cannot imagine that the whole of the 360 tholic prisoners are admitted to those readings, I do not know of any room that would hold em. Those who are under punishment, and se in the infirmary, and several others, could t attend, so that I do not think it is possible the whole of them to be assembled on Sunday ernoons.

1669. With reference to the payment of the man Catholic priest, is there any practical son why a clergyman, of whatever persua-n, if he gives his time to the prisoners should be fairly paid for his services?—I am of nion that there could be no practical reason y he should not be paid; but there is this son: that it is not the law; Parliament has sen to leave it to the discretion of the magis-tes, and the magistrates have not chosen to rcise that discretion, I think, as far as I w, the sentiment of the bench; there are a at number of the magistrates, and I am free confess that I am one, who would not object pay the Roman Catholic priest for his ser-es, but who would object strongly to his ing an official appointment as chaplain.

1670. Now, first, with regard to the law, was the spirit of the Act of Parliament to give fullest possible power to the justices to do untarily that which the law compels others to compulsorily?—And which they decline to do ntarily; they do not wish to exercise the er which Parliament has given to them.

1671. But was not the spirit of the legislation favour of giving, as far as could be, equality ll?—I think it was.

1672. You state that the justices now are more ined to carry out this permissive power than were before?—Yes, certainly they are. ore the passing of the Act they only acted n the old statute which said that the chaplain d only see the prisoners one by one in trate cells.

1673. Do you not think that the prison authorities would have more power over the officiating Roman Catholic priest, if he were made a salaried officer, than they have at the present moment, when he has permission to go out and in as he pleases?—I do not think from the nature of our two positions, looking at the visiting justices on the one hand, and the Roman Catholic priests on the other, that the magistrates care or wish to have any power whatever over them; they have no choice in the selection of the priest, as no priest will offer himself to the visiting justices for the appointment, unless he has first the authority of his superior to do so.

1674. What distinction does that make?—With our Protestant clergy, when we are about to elect a chaplain, we advertise, and we have perhaps a dozen applications, we select the individual who will be most calculated for the service; with regard to the Roman Catholic priest, we profess ourselves incapable of deciding.

1675. How could you bring a Roman Catholic priest from any portion of the country by advertisement, if you do not pay him?—I have no objection to paying him for his services in the prison.

1676. Do you not think that the religious superior of the priest would be likely to select the person whom he thought would be the most fit for the duty?—I do not believe that Archbishop Manning knows so much about prison discipline as I do myself.

1677. But would he not know whether the clergyman was a zealous, devoted, and discreet man or not?—No doubt he might know that.

1678. Therefore he would select a fit man for the duty?—It is not the storing of the head that at all influences the feelings of the heart or gives a knowledge of character. You must have a man who is conversant with the habits of the poor and knows their circumstances, and not necessarily an intelligent, intellectual, and learned man. If the Archbishop was to send such a man to a prison he would be inadequate to perform his duties.

1679. But do not you, as a gentleman who has mixed amongst the poor and knows their wants and temptations, think that the missionary clergyman whom his ecclesiastical superior sends there and asks the appointment for, would be a very right and proper person to be appointed to the post?—We have no power of judging of that, for hitherto we have only had the Roman Catholic priest who has had permission to apply for the situation, and we have not felt ourselves either authorised, or at liberty, to say "No" to him; he is generally a foreigner.

1680. You heard the evidence of the three clergymen who had been examined here; is there any reason why they are not fit persons to discharge prison duty?—I believe the three clergymen now officiating in our prisons are competent to do their duty, and I believe unless imaginary grievances are made, as I certainly think they were this morning and on the first day, the gentlemen who now officiate at the three prisons would work harmoniously with the magistrates. If they have any complaint to make, they have only to ask to see the visiting justices, which they might do any day when the visiting justices meet, or if they would put their application in writing, as the minister of the House of Detention has done, it would be attended to.

1681. I would only ask you, if those clergymen are suited to their position and are willing to work in harmony with the justices, what practical objection could there be to the mode of selection which is given you of those clergymen?—We have nothing to do with the selection or the way in which they conduct their service.

4 April 1870.

1682. But the result is not injurious to the prisoners?—We have no power of ascertaining that, we do not know the circumstances, or the way in which the priest acts in his own locality, whether he is acceptable to the poor, or has been accustomed to attend them, or anything about it.

1683. Are not the four clergymen, if you believe their statements, that they are all missionary clergymen and accustomed to poor people, the most suitable persons for prison chaplains?—I say that the three that are appointed now work harmoniously, and seem, as far as we can judge, to perform their duty very satisfactorily.

1684. I will ask you one thing, from your knowledge of the world and general experience, if anything has arisen of an unpleasant nature, might it not be pardoned, on the score that up to the present time the Catholic clergymen have had to obtain every concession after frequent application and refusal, and that the same kindly feelings did not exist towards them formerly, as do now?—It is a geat pity, I think, that former times are not entirely forgotten on both sides, and that we do not start afresh from the passing of the Roman Catholic Prisoners Bill.

1685. Whose fault is it that that has not been done; do you not think it would be a good plan for the future, in order to conciliate this good will on all sides, to start by commencing to pay the Roman Catholic clergyman for his services, just as you would pay any other man for his duties?—It is almost a pity to put so sacred a subject upon the ground of mere pounds, shillings, and pence; the Protestant dissenters, it is quite true, do not attend the prisoners; because, though we differ upon minor points, we agree in the main, and, therefore, they do not think it necessary to come, and are not paid any more than the Catholic priests; but I have already said I would pay for his services in the prison.

1686. You stated that it was a pity to make so sacred a subject a mere question of pounds shillings, and pence; what would the Protestant chaplain say if he were not paid for the discharge of his important duties; he is paid, is he not?—Yes.

1687. You have two Protestant clergymen?—Yes, we have at Coldbath Fields; one at Westminster, and one at the House of Detention.

1688. They are well paid, are they not?—I will not say they are well paid, but they are paid. At the House of Correction we have 1,600 Protestant prisoners; the assistant chaplain receives a salary of 300 l. a year. At the House of Detention, where upon the average we have 260 of a fluctuating character, he receives 250 l.; and at Westminster, although the present chaplain has 400 l. a year, it is after nearly 35 years' service, and the next one will be appointed at 300 l. a year.

1689. But do you not think it would be a very great wrong to ask a Protestant clergyman to give any portion of his time to a prison, without paying him?—Certainly; I have not the least objection to paying the Roman Catholic priest for his services, but I have an objection to giving him an official status.

1690. You state that inasmuch as Dissenters and Protestants agree in the main, there is no necessity for a Dissenting chaplain?—Certainly.

1691. But do you not know, on the other hand that there is a wall of separation, so far as doctrine is regarded, between the Catholic and the Protestant; that a Catholic cannot receive the ministrations of a Protestant clergyman, or go to a Protestant place of worship?—I know that.

1692. Therefore the case of the Catholic clergyman and the Catholic prisoner is not analogous to the case of the Presbyterian or the Baptist prisoner and minister?—But unfortunately the Roman Catholic priests do not make the same allowance to us as we are required to make to them.

1693. What impression do you wish to convey to the Committee by that?—In small things such as this, for instance, that a man makes a statement when he comes to the prison that he is a Protestant, but afterwards turns out to be a Roman Catholic, it is made a grievance that we do not allow him to change his religion; if we did that you may imagine, with 2,000 prisoners, how very soon we should get into a state of the utmost confusion. We have, therefore, laid it down that what the prisoner states when he enters the prison is put upon the record, and the record open to the Roman Catholic priest whenever he comes; but unless the prisoners are exceedingly ill, and require to see the Roman Catholic priest they will not be permitted to change their recorded religion.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. Dr. ÆMILIAN KIRNER, re-called; and further Examined.

7 April 1870.

1694. Chairman.] AT the last sitting you were sked this question: "What is the number you e allowed to see collectively?" and your answer as, "I think I must have made a mistake in ying 12; I think the rule is changed now, and is 25," do you wish to say anything in refer- ace to that answer?—I wish to say this, that ie printed rules which are hung up in my room ated that the number allowed to be seen col- ctively was 10 up to last Saturday, and when came back last Tuesday I looked at the rule to erify whether it was 10 or 25, and I saw then ritten in ink "25."

1695. Had you seen the rules a few days before?—I had, but I only saw 10 in the print, and I am informed now that the change had been made from 10 to 25 before; but that the printed rules in my room had never been altered until the day I was examined.

1696. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Had you no means of knowing of the change except from seeing that alteration in the printed rules?—I am expected to go by the rules in my room.

1697. You were not informed of the change in the rules?—No, I was not.

The Rev. Mr. BOND, re-called; and further Examined.

Rev. Mr. Bond.

1698. Mr. Synan.] I WAS under the impres- on that I asked you on the last day, whether nsidering the intellectual and moral training of e 300 prisoners that you were in attendance on, it would be as difficult to attend to them iritually and morally, as it would be to attend 500 Protestants?—Yes, I think I said it ould be.

1699. Do you think that those 300 prisoners at you are in attendance upon would require e whole of your services?—Yes, I think that 0 prisoners would require the whole of my rvices.

1700. If they were properly attended to?— es.

1701. Lord Henley.] Do you mean the Com- ittee to infer that it would not be possible for a ngle Roman Catholic clergyman to attend to 0; that that would be a greater number than u could possibly attend to?—It would depend on the facilities that were given to him; at e same time I do think that 300 prisoners ould give full work to a Roman Catholic priest ring the day, if time were given him to vote to them.

1702. Surely you must be aware that in a great many parishes in England a clergyman has to look after a far larger number of people than that, who are scattered over a considerable area, whereas your prisoners are all under one roof?—Yes; but we must draw a distinction between the state in which we find these poor Catholic prisoners, and the state of persons who are not in prison; the conditions of the two are so very different; the poor Catholic prisoners are very ignorant. We do not find out of the prison, as a rule, that ignorance which we find in the prison.

1703. Therefore you think a clergyman could attend to a very much larger number of ordinary persons than he could to those undergoing correction?—Certainly.

1704. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Is it not the case, so far as you know the doctrines of the Established Church of England, that your Church exercises a great deal more individual supervision over the members of your flock than is the case with the Protestant Church?—That is the case.

Mr. HENRY POWNALL, called in; and further Examined.

Mr. H. Pownall.

1705. Mr. O'Reilly.] YOU stated to the Com- ttee on the last sitting, that "we were only le to fit up a small place, which was formerly dormitory, as a Roman Catholic chapel;" am correct in saying that it not only formerly was, but is a dormitory now, and is used as such?—I presume you allude to the House of Detention. I believe it is; I ought to have stated that at the time, but it is not as a dormitory that it is used as a chapel, because some weeks ago I visited it, and

Mr. H. Pownall.

7 April 1870.

and had one or two alterations made, and all the bedding and dormitory furniture removed into an adjoining large closet, so that the bedding should not be in the room when it was used as a chapel.

1706. But it was not only formerly used, but it is used as a dormitory now?—It is now, at night, used as a dormitory from necessity.

1707. You stated to the Committee that the assembling of all the Roman Catholic prisoners together, or of a considerable number of them, for religious readings on the Sunday afternoons, was a matter of internal regulation, which would rest entirely with the governor of the prison; I confess I was rather surprised at that statement, and I would like to know whether you consider that the assembling of all the prisoners together is a matter which rests entirely with the governor of the prison?—You now allude to Coldbath Fields Prison. No; I should qualify that answer, and at the same time state that not more than about 70 to 80 of the Roman Catholic prisoners are assembled in this room on Sunday afternoon; I know that the number does not exceed 80 or 82.

1708. What is the total number of Roman Catholic prisoners?—The total number of Roman Catholic prisoners is about 380, but not all of those would attend the service; last Sunday, for instance, only 302 attended the Roman Catholic chapel.

1709. Would you consider, then, that the question of assembling together from 70 to 80 prisoners, is a matter resting entirely in the discretion of the governor of the prison?—I think so far as the present arrangements of the prison go, it was a very wise alteration, the cells in which these 70 or 80 are confined not having been certified.

1710. I am not asking with reference to its goodness at all, but whether it is a matter which rests in the discretion of the governor of the prison?—I think it does, owing to the construction of the prison; but the governor of the prison is here, and will give you information with reference to that point.

1711. You stated, in answer to a question put by an honourable Member, on the last sitting of the Committee, that you would have no objection to a second service on the Sunday for the Roman Catholics in the prison, nor did you believe that the visiting justices would have, if it had been applied for; to what prison did that answer apply, or did it apply to all prisons under the jurisdiction of the Middlesex magistrates?—It would apply more immediately to the House of Correction at Clerkenwell, of which we were then talking; but I see by the evidence that it was applied for, and a reason given against it; I was not aware of that circumstance, not having attended the Committee at the time. I see no reason why it should not be granted at Westminster and the House of Detention.

1712. And so far you would qualify your answer with reference to your belief that the visiting justices would have granted permission if he had been applied for, knowing now that it was applied for, and that they did not grant it?—I do not know if I had been there how it might have been. I do not know what the majority against it was; it might have been so slight that one or two votes would have turned the scale the other way.

1713. But you would not retain the answer that the justices would have granted it, if it had been applied for, knowing that it was applied for, and that they refused the application?—Certainly not, as far as relates to Coldbath Fields.

1714. Referring to the House of Correction for men at Coldbath Fields, you stated as a reason why the Roman Catholics should not be allowed an afternoon service upon the Sunday, that you could understand that there would be a difficulty owing to so many of the warders being absent upon the Sunday afternoon; and you went on to say that "that is one reason why half the Protestant prisoners are locked up in the afternoon; if he had the same appliances on the Sunday as we have every day in the week then at least 400 of the Protestant prisoners certainly might be assembled" to have an afternoon service; is it not the fact that there is an afternoon service for the Protestant prisoners, and that all the prisoners who have not attended the morning service do attend the afternoon service; and the reason given for the chapel not being filled is that it might be considered as an additional indulgence to some which could not be granted to all if some of the Protestant prisoners attended two services in the day and the others only one?—Allow me to say that that is not so. The chapel will only hold about 800, and there are upwards of 1,600 Protestant prisoners, consequently half go in the morning and half in the afternoon. I should wish to qualify what I said respecting the inconvenience arising from the want of officers in the prison for I have gone more minutely into that case since I gave my first evidence, and I do not think that that is an insuperable difficulty.

1715. I am sorry to have to repeat my question to some extent; you stated to the Committee that the want of warders was one reason why one half of the Protestant prisoners were locked up in the afternoon; is that the reason?—It is to a certain extent, but, as I just now stated, I think that difficulty might be overcome for a part of the number, the remainder would be in their cells, because there was no room for them in the chapel.

1716. You tell the Committee that there are 1,600 Protestant prisoners in the prison; that the Protestant chapel will only hold 800, and that 800 fill the chapel for the morning service, and 800 for the afternoon, and yet you say that the absence of warders is a reason why some of the prisoners are locked up on the Sunday afternoon would you be kind enough to explain that to the Committee?—I do not think that that reason is a good one. I thought, when I was examined the other day, that more warders were absent on Sunday, than I now find to be the case. There are not more than 30 warders absent on Sunday out of nearly 140, and, therefore, I think that arrangements might be made for both the Roman Catholics to have service of an afternoon, and that a portion of the 800 Protestant prisoners who attended the chapel in the morning, might go to service in another part of the prison in the afternoon, inasmuch as we have two chaplains, and they could be each holding a service at the same time.

1717. Then I understand that your answer now is, not that the absence of the warders has anything to do with the absence of the Protestants in the present chapel; but that the absence of the warders applies to another thing which you did not explain on the previous day—namely, that in addition to the present afternoon service for Protestan rotestants in the existing chapel, which is at-nded by as many as it will hold, there might, your opinion, be two different Protestant rvices in two different places on Sunday after-oon for the Protestant prisoners?—That is my eaning.

1718. You stated, in answer to a question on e last sitting of the Committee, "I believe the ree clergymen now officiating in our prisons e competent to do their duty, and I believe, nless imaginary grievances are made, as I rtainly think they were this morning, and on e first day, the gentlemen who now officiate the three prisons would work harmoniously th the magistrates;" and then, in answer to other question, you give, as an example of an naginary grievance, this: "For instance, a man akes a statement, when he comes to the prison, at he is a Protestant, but afterwards turns out be a Roman Catholic; it is made a grievance at we do not allow him to change his religion;"
d then you go on to explain how you cannot so; I wish to know whether you can tell us s that was not made a grievance before this ommittee) whether it was in any form alleged a grievance before the visiting justices?—I am t quite certain that it was in writing, but I rtainly heard it in several directions; in one se from a Roman Catholic magistrate upon our nch, who has expressly told me that he thought was a very great grievance that a prisoner ght not change his religion, and it is made a ievance that the chaplain sees all the prisoners e morning after the record is made at Westnster.

1719. But you will not be disposed to dissent m what I have said, that it was not stated be-re this Committee as a grievance, and that, as as you were aware, it has not been brought ward before the visiting justices by any autho-y as a grievance?—I am not aware that it has en brought before the visiting justices.

1720. You are quite aware of the practice in ferent prisons, as to the registry of prisoners regard to their religion?—I am.

1721. It has been stated to the Committee at the practice, especially in the Westminster ison, is this: that a prisoner, on coming in, is gistered by an officer of the prison, I believe a rder of some rank; that registration is made th regard to several items; for instance, the soner's age, the crime for which he is comtted, and also his religion; and that, on the llowing morning, he is seen by the chaplain of e prison; and if it appears, or there is reason think, that the answer which the prisoner gave the previous evening on his entry to the pri-n is inaccurate, it is changed; have you reason believe that that statement is correct?—I am t aware that it is. Speaking of the House of rrection at Clerkenwell, the chaplain has ased to see any of the prisoners who have de-ared themselves to be Roman Catholics, for uprds of the last six months. Formerly, he ed to see them, but he does not see them now.
Westminster it is the case that the Protestant rgyman did see them, but held no religious nmunication whatever with them. A prisoner required, on his entrance to the prison, to dere of what religion he is, and that is entered the book, according to the schedule in the Act Parliament, at each of the prisons; and, as I d the other day, unless a prisoner who has de-ared himself a Protestant is taken exceedingly ill, and then wishes to see a priest, declaring himself to be a Roman Catholic, he is not allowed to change.

1722. Then do I understand you, with your very perfect knowledge of the discipline of our prisons, to state that the original registry, with reference to religion, which is made on a prisoner entering the prison, is not changed, except either in the infirmary, when a prisoner is very ill, or by order of the visiting justices?—Yes, that is so.

1723. You would be rather surprised if I pointed out to you evidence to the opposite effect, would you not?—Certainly, I should.

1724. You mentioned, I think, on your last examination, that all applications which had been made by the Roman Catholic priest, with regard to the House of Detention, had been acceded to; would you extend that to include all applications which have been made on behalf of the Roman Catholics in the prison since the passing of the Prison Ministers Act?—No, certainly not.

1725. Would you kindly explain that to the Committee?—As far as I am aware, all the applications which I have heard of for the last six or eight months have been complied with. There was an application about three weeks or a month since from the Roman Catholic priest for another priest to officiate in his stead for a certain time, and the answer to that was, "Give us the name and address of the priest who will be required to attend, and then we will give an answer." The reason for that was, that if we had not known the address of the priest who was to be the substitute, and any Roman Catholic was taken seriously ill, we should not know where to send to him, which would, in all probability, cause some observations to be made.

1726. Taking your answer on the last meeting of the Committee to be qualified to the extent that all applications made within the last six or eight months have been complied with, would you be kind enough to tell the Committee, as far as you know, what applications have been made with regard to Roman Catholics in that prison since the passing of the Prison Ministers Act in 1863, and the extent to which they were complied with, or refused, at different times?—I am not able to reply to that accurately, because, for nearly two years, I was so unwell that I ceased to attend the prisons, and took as little of the duty as I could help; but, as far as I know, the applications have been for the priest to visit, which, of course, the Act gives him power to do. He saw the register; he has had the control of the Roman Catholic library, and we have given what books were applied for by the Roman Catholic priest. With reference to his application to have Sunday service, I think he pointed out that any large room would answer the purpose. Then this, which is now used as a dormitory, was fitted up as I stated, and, as far as I understood, quite to the priest's satisfaction.

1727. Will you excuse my pointing out that my question applied exclusively to the period antecedent to the last six or eight months to which your former answer had reference, and that a great part of the answer you have just given me manifestly applies to facts posterior to that date; I will just ask you this question, When were these two years during which you were not cognisant of the affairs relating to the prisons?

prisons?—I think from about 1866 to nearly the close of 1868.

1728. It has been mentioned that the first time mass was celebrated in the prison was in September last; could you tell the Committee whether any application to have religious service for the prisoners in that prison was made to your knowledge since the passing of the Prison Ministers Act in 1863, previously to the application immediately before last September, which led to its being adopted?—I am not aware that there was any; if there was, it must have been when I was not upon the committee, and did not hear of it.

1729. Allow me to ask you rather a larger question; was an application ever made to celebrate mass generally in the prisons under the administration of the Middlesex magistrates, not long after the passing of the Prison Ministers Act, and refused?—I cannot speak from being present at the time with reference to any particular application for mass, but I apprehend that when an application was made for a Catholic service to be performed, it included mass.

1730. Was any such application made and refused to your knowledge since 1863?—Not to my knowledge, nor was one, I think, for the celebration of mass.

1731. Was not an application made, soon after the passing of the Prison Ministers Act, to allow the priests to see more than one prisoner at a time, and was not that, in the first instance, refused by the visiting justices?—It was, under an opinion which we obtained, I think, from the Attorney General and some other counsel, just before the passing of the Prison Ministers Act; after that we took another opinion, which was contrary to the first, and upon that the magistrates conceded that the Roman Catholic priest might see more than one prisoner at once.

1732. Would you kindly inform the Committee of the date of that second opinion, and when the magistrates acceded to the Roman Catholic priests seeing more than one prisoner at a time?—I really cannot charge my memory with the date, but the minute books are here.

1733. You have had very extensive experience of this matter; will you tell the Committee how soon it was before that, in any prison under the Middlesex magistrates, permission was given to assemble the Roman Catholic prisoners together for purposes of common instruction?—I think some few months, but I really cannot speak with reference to the exact time.

1734. Can you tell the Committee how soon after the passing of the Act it was that any permission to hold religious services on Sunday was given by the Middlesex magistrates?—I cannot, but the minute books of the House of Detention, and the clerk to the House of Correction, are both here, and the clerk will be able to answer that question.

1735. But you will not be disposed to doubt the accuracy of what I say, that it was a very considerable time after the Act had passed before permission was given to hold such services?—I think it was.

1736. You stated in your last examination that you would have no objection to paying a Roman Catholic priest for his services, but you would object strongly to his having an official appointment as chaplain?—I am of that opinion.

1737. Could you tell the Committee how many discussions there have been upon this subject before the bench of magistrates, of which you are the chairman?—Either three or four, but I am not quite sure which.

1738. And the first discussion would be about what date?—The first, I think, was in 1864 or 1865.

1739. And when was the last?—The last was, I think, 1869.

1740. Were you present at all those discussions?—Yes.

1741. And you took a part in them, I think?—No, I am chairman, therefore I do not take a part in them.

1742. Did you not speak at any of those discussions?—I think not.

1743. Did you take any mode of letting this opinion of yours, in favour of paying the Roman Catholic priest, be known to your brother magistrates, of whom you were chairman?—Not officially; but in conversation I have often expresed myself to that effect.

1744. But you voted, I think, against any payment being made?—I have never voted upon that question in the court.

1745. But you did not in any public way express your opinion, or bring forward any proposition to pay the priests without giving them a special appointment?—No, I did not.

1746. Did any one of your brother magistrate do so?—I think not.

1747. Then no one of your brother magistrates sufficiently coincided in the opinion which you say you expressed in private as to bring it forward so as to let your opinion be publicly known as well as privately?—No; the discussions in our court have always been to appoint a Roman Catholic chaplain with a salary.

1748. Although you had a discussion upon that point, you did not suggest the question which was in your own mind, that he had better be paid, but not appointed chaplain?—No.

1749. You said you had no objection to paying the Roman Catholic minister for his services, but that you had an objection to giving him an official status. Would you kindly explain to the Committee exactly what you mean by giving him an official status?—There are several grounds upon which I should object.

1750. I do not mean the grounds of your objection, but what would you object to?—I should object to a Roman Catholic priest being appointed a chaplain to the gaol, because the magistrate have no power of selection, and because I think that, as we have an established religion, we ought not to have two established sets of ministers in the country.

1751. Will you kindly explain to the Committee the way in which you would propose to see your view of having the priest paid, but no appointed chaplain, carried out; because you will see that it is very important (this being the first time that anyone, except your private friends have had an opportunity of knowing your opinion), that we should have an opportunity of understanding it as clearly as possible?—I coincide a good deal with what Captain O'Brien said the other day, which was to the effect that if so much per head, according to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners who were in the prison, were paid to the Roman Catholic priest and he be merely permitted to attend, it might be satisfactory.

1752. That is as to the amount of payment, but what the Committee chiefly want to know is wh what you would propose with reference to appointing him so as to avoid this objection of yours to giving him an official status?—That the court of quarter sessions should agree that a remuneration be paid, and that the mode in which it should be done should be left to the visiting justices of each prison.

1753. Then you would propose that the court of quarter sessions should decide the question of payment in the abstract, but that the amount should be left entirely to the visiting justices?—Entirely; it is a part of the prison arrangements, and those are all committed to them by the court. It is only for the court to decide upon the principle, and to let the visiting justices carry it out.

1754. Do the visiting justices then decide upon the salaries of all the other persons employed in the prison?—They do in the first instance, by reporting to the court, and if the court approves of their recommendation, then that would be the salary given.

1755. But in this instance you propose that the visiting justices should decide the question absolutely with regard to the remuneration?—I think that it should be done in that way rather than there should be a second report to the court, in order to avoid an unpleasant discussion which might ensue upon it.

1756. Would not a much more probable result be, knowing the opinions which have been expressed by the visiting justices, that they would never trouble the court by recommending any payment at all?—Quite the contrary; I think the visiting justices have refrained from taking any steps in this matter in consequence of the decided opinion expressed by the court by whom they themselves are appointed.

1757. You are a visiting justice yourself, I believe?—I am, ex officio, as chairman.

1758. Can you give any reason for thinking that the majority of the visiting justices in any one prison are in favour of paying anything to the Roman Catholic priest?—Several individuals, I believe, are in favour of it, but, speaking of the visiting justices generally, I do not believe they are.

1759. I asked the question with reference to the majority?—The majority, I think, are against it.

1760. My question has no reference to the amount of payment; I want to know into what position you would propose to put the Roman Catholic priests whom you propose to pay, so as to avoid your objection to giving him any official status?—My suggestion is, that the visiting justices should approve, as they do at present, of the Roman Catholic priest visiting the prison, and that he should conform to the rules and regulations of the prison. Those rules would, of course, be communicated to him, and I hope he would attend to them.

1761. Then I must take the matter a little further; what would be the position of the visiting justices with regard to the priest if your proposition was carried out; am I right in saying that they would have the duty of paying him, the power of dismissing him, and the power of compelling him to observe such rules with reference to the discharge of his duty in the prison as they might think it necessary to make?—They would have all the power over the Roman Catholic priest that they have with the Protestant minister, without interfering with his religious duties.

1762. And what rights do you propose that the priest should have as regards them; would you propose that he should have the same rights as regards them as the Protestant chaplain has?—I am not aware what rights the Protestant chaplain has, except that he reports having done such and such duties; I can see no objection to the Roman Catholic priest keeping a journal, and that that journal should be laid before the visiting justices at their weekly meetings, just the same as the journal of the Protestant clergyman is.

1763. You say that the visiting justices should have all the rights with regard to the Roman Catholic priest who is appointed and paid, that they have with regard to the Protestant chaplain; my question is, whether on the other hand, as they are to be in the same position with regard to the Roman Catholic priest that they are with regard to the Protestant chaplain, the Roman Catholic priest should be in the same position with regard to the visiting justices, as the Protestant chaplain is with regrrd to them; and, if not, why not?—I see no difference in the performance of the duties; but I do see a difference between the visiting justices stating that the priest is appointed as chaplain to the prison in the same way that the Protestant clergyman is appointed, seeing that the law of our country is different with regard to the appointment of the Roman Catholic priest, with which the visiting justices have nothing whatever to do, in their several localities, while they have everything to do with the clergyman.

1764. Your objection then is to his being appointed a chaplain?—It is.

1765. And only to the word "chaplain"?—I object to his being considered as a public officer; a regularly constituted chaplain with an endowed salary, if I may use the phrase. I would say that we have the power of dismissing the chaplain when he violates the prison rules without any communication with the bishop of the diocese.

1766. And you would have the same power of dismissing the Roman Catholic priest, would you not?—Yes, certainly.

1767. Have you the power of dismissing the chaplain of the prison without any cause?—We should, of course, not do so, neither would the court sanction it; we must report the circumstance to the court, and if we had no cause for recommending the dismissal, the court would only laugh at the visiting justices for attempting it.

1768. Do you not wish to have any more power over the Roman Catholic priest than you have over the Protestant chaplain as regards dismissal?—No.

1769. Your objection is to the word "chaplain"?—No, my objection is to making him an officer of the State, which he would be, more or less, if he were the appointed chaplain of the county gaol.

1770. Would he not be, more or less, an officer of the State if he were appointed chaplain to the county gaol, if he performs certain duties, for the performance of which he will be responsible to the governor of the prison?—Yes, but he would be permitted to do so in the one case, and officially apppointed and officially recognised in the other.

1771. Mr. Matthews.] You wish him to do all the work?—We should not interfere with his work.

1772. If you paid the Roman Catholic priest,

Mr. H. Pownall.

7 April 1870.

you would wish him to perform the duties of a chaplain?—We should expect him to come to the prison and see the prisoners.

1773. And you would expect him to perform towards those prisoners all the duties of the chaplain? — I do not know, and none of the justices profess to know what the duties of the Roman Catholic priest would be.

1774. Prayer, spiritual counsel, and instruction; would not all those duties be within his province?—Yes, but what more there might be I could not tell.

1775. You would expect him to do all this?—Yes; but how are we to judge whether he does or not. We can neither go to the chapel, nor ask the priest questions upon the subject.

1776. Now, let me ask you a few questions with reference to the conduct of the court over which you preside; the Prison Ministers Act was passed in July 1853?—Yes.

1777. I see you were at the November Session in the year 1863?—I was.

1778. Do you remember this motion being made by Mr. Swift, "That the number of prisoners professing the Roman Catholic religion, in the House of Correction, Coldbath Fields, and the House of Correction, at Westminster, and the House of Detention, Clerkenwell, respectively, is so great, as in the opinion of the court, to require the ministration of a minister of their own church; and such motion having been seconded by Mr. Serjeant Bellasis, Thomas Turner, Esq., moved, by way of amendment, 'That the questions raised by the motion of Mr. Swift, be referred to a committee, composed of the visiting justices of the three county prisons to consider, and report thereon; and that the further discussion of such questions be adjourned to the next county day, when such report is to be received;' which amendment having been seconded by W. H. Wyatt, Esq., was put to the vote, and on a division, lost; the original motion was then put to the vote, and on a division, was also lost"?—That is correct; I remember it.

1779. The next step was a refusal on the part of the court of quarter sessions, immediately after the passing of the Prison Ministers Act, to carry out the powers which were given to them under it?—Yes, as to paying the Roman Catholic priest.

1780. The next motion was in April 1864, when Mr. Laurie moved: "First, that it appearing from the returns presented by the visiting justices of the three county prisons to the court on the 18th February 1864, that at the date of such returns the number of Roman Catholic prisoners in the House of Correction was 391, in the Westminster Bridewell 223, and in the House of Detention 35, making an aggregate number of 639, this court is of opinion that it is expedient to provide for the regular ministration of a minister or ministers of the Roman Catholic Church or persuasion, for the prisoners of that church or persuasion, who shall receive a reasonable sum as recompense for his or their services under the provisions of the Prison Ministers Act, 1863. Secondly, that it be referred to the respective committees of visiting justices of the three county prisons to confer and report, either jointly or separately, as to the nature and extent of the duties to be performed by, and the nature and extent of the accommodation requisite for, the due performance of the ministrations of such minister or ministers referred to above in such prisons respectively, and whether such ministrations can be duly performed by one or two minister or ministers, and what sum or sums would be a reasonable recompense for the services of such minister or ministers;" and the same having been duly seconded, E. W. Cox, Esquire, moved, pursuant to notice, the following amendments, viz.: "That the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields and Westminster be requested to carry into effect so much of the 3rd section of the 26 & 27 Vict. cap. 79, as relates to permitting a minister of the church or persuasion to which prisoners belong, to visit such prisoners at proper and reasonable times, under such regulations as they may deem to be necessary to the preservation of the discipline of the respective prisons. That the visiting justices of the House of Correction, Coldbath Fields, be authorised to pay the Roman Catholic minister, who may be allowed to attend the Roman Catholic prisoners, a sum not exceeding 150 l. in any one year: that the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Westminster be authorised to pay the Roman Catholic minister, who may be allowed to attend the Roman Catholic prisoners, a sum not exceeding 100 l. in any one year;" and such amendments having been duly seconded, the same were put to the vote, and on a division lost. Mr. Serjeant Payne then moved, pursuant to notice, as a further amendment to Mr. Laurie's motion: "That it appears to this court that, by laws now in force, all prisoners who belong to churches or persuasions differing from the Church of England, in addition to the instruction they may be willing to receive from the chaplain of the prison, are entitled, at their own request, to be visited by a minister of the religious persuasion to which they belong; but no prisoners are compellable to receive such visits against their will: that, comparatively few prisoners of the various religious denominations have made such requests, and those who have, have been duly visited. This court is, therefore, of opinion that the present arrangements for the moral and religious instruction of the prisoners are sufficient, and that any appointments by this court, or permission by the visiting justices, for Roman Catholic priests to attend at the prisons on all occasions, whether their ministrations are required, or not, would be unnecessary and improper;" and the last amendment having been seconded by H. Harwood Harwood, Esq., the same was put to the vote, and on a division, carried. It was then put to the Court as a substantive motion, and carried? — Yes, all this is correct.

1781. Do you approve or disapprove of that interpretation of the Prison Ministers Act, that "All prisoners who belong to churches or persuasions, differing from the Church of England in addition to the instruction they may be willing to receive from the chaplain of the prison, are entitled, at their own request, to be visited by a minister of the religious persuasion to which they belong"?—I think the Roman Catholic clergyman might see all the Roman Catholic prisoners, whether they request it or not, and so with all others.

1782. But I am drawing attention to this; do you not know that the Prison Ministers Act says that the visiting justices may, if they think fit, without the request of any prisoner, allow the priest to visit him?—Yes; the visiting justices do allow it.

1783. But

1783. But this motion, which your court adopted, assumed that the request of the prisoner is still necessary?—I did not draw up the resolution, and I cannot be responsible for it.

1784. That is the view of the Prison Ministers Act, which your court adopted by that resolution; now I will just take you to the next date, July 1864; do you recollect this letter of your secretary, Mr. Skaife, to Mr. Baring, who must have been, I think, at that time, Under Secretary of State for the Home Department?—Yes.

1785. It is dated the 26th of July 1864; there is a good deal of preliminary matter, and the letter ends by stating, "The visiting justices then resumed the consideration of your letter of the 23rd of May last, and have passed the following resolution: 'That the governor do give directions that each Roman Catholic prisoner on his entry into the prison shall be asked whether it is his wish to receive the visits of a priest or not, and that a stated time on such day or days as may not interfere with the prison arrangements be appointed for those answering in the affirmative, to receive such visit, and that inquiry to this effect be at once made of all Roman Catholic prisoners now in the prison.'" Do you recollect that letter?—I do not recollect that letter, but I recollect a correspondence upon the same subject.

1786. May I take it that that resolution had your sanction as a visiting justice?—I would not pledge myself to agree with all the resolutions that are passed.

1787. I only want to know whether you are cognisant of that?—Yes, I agree with that, because I think that was the interpretation of the Act of Parliament, that no prisoner was bound to receive the visit of any minister if he did not approve of it.

1788. Was that resolution acted upon after that in the prison?—It was.

1789. So that you did, in effect, require each prisoner expressly to state his wish to receive the visit of the priest upon his entry?—Yes.

1790. Now we will take the next date, October 1864; this is an extract from the Minutes: "So much of the report of the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields, laid before the court on the last county day, as related to the proceedings of the visiting justices with reference to the Prison Ministers Act, was considered, and Mr. Serjeant Payne, having moved pursuant to notice, 'That this court has learnt with satisfaction, from the report of the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields, that they have so far carried out the intention of the Prison Ministers Act, and the resolution of this court, as to prevent the unnecessary attendances of a Roman Catholic priest at the prison, by limiting his visits to those Roman Catholic prisoners, who, in answer to inquiry, shall have expressed a wish to receive them, the Statute declaring that no prisoner shall be so visited against his will; at the same time this court desires to draw the attention of the visiting justices to the further provisions of the Act (which do not appear by the report to have been considered), by which it is required, that such visits shall be under such restrictions imposed by them, as may guard against the introduction of improper persons, and prevent improper communications; this court considering that without those restrictions, the safeguards intended by the legislature will not have been carried into effect;' and Mr. Serjeant Payne having moved, by way of addition to the preceding motion the words, 'and that the visiting justices be therefore requested to report to this court, such restrictions as are imposed by them;' which addition having been duly allowed, the motion, as amended, was put to the vote, and, on a division, carried?"—Yes, that was so.

1791. So that not content with the regulations I have read in Mr. Skaife's letter, your court desired the visiting justices to impose further restrictions, to prevent the unnecessary attendance of the Roman Catholic priest?—I think it was necessary, because upon one or two occasions there had been communications with the prisoners' friends outside. These observations will apply equally to the Protestant clergyman as to the Roman Catholic priest.

1792. What restrictions have you in force to prevent the introduction of improper persons, and to prevent improper communications by the Roman Catholic chaplain?—The chaplains have no power whatever of bringing any person into the prison.

1793. But surely this resolution does not mean simply that the Roman Catholic priest is to be subject to the same rule as the Protestant chaplain?—I think it does, so far as seeing the Roman Catholic prisoners whom he has a right to see goes; he would see the Roman Catholic prisoners, and have any religious communication with them that he pleased; but he must not enter into familiar conversation with them as to things outside the prison, nor introduce things when he comes into the prison; he must, in fact, conform to prison rules, just the same as the Protestant chaplain does.

1794. Can you tell me what regulations were made by the visiting justices, in pursuance of that recommendation of the court?—As far as my recollection goes, I do not think that there were any regulations made beyond the ordinary rules and regulations appertaining entirely to the regulation and discipline of the prison.

1795. You spoke of an opinion in consequence of which you allowed the priest to see more than one prisoner at a time; was that the opinion of Sir John Karslake, Sir Roundell Palmer, and Mr. Poland?—It was the last opinion that was taken.

1796. The date of it is the 10th June 1867; it is as follows: "1. We are of opinion that the visiting justices of the House of Correction have power to allow of the assemblage of a number of Roman Catholic prisoners for religious instruction at the visits of the Roman Catholic minister attending, pursuant to the 47th Regulation of Schedule 1 of the Prison Act, 1865. 2. We are of opinion that the visiting justices have power, on the occasion of such assemblages of Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison, to allow of the celebration of Divine service according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. 3. We are further of opinion that the Prison Act, 1865, does not render it incumbent on the visiting justices to allow of such assemblages of prisoners for the purpose of religious instruction, or for the celebration of Divine service; but we think that, in permitting such assemblages for the purposes mentioned, the visiting justices will be acting not only according to law, but according to the spirit of the Prison Act, care being of course taken to prevent improper communications, and to maintain the discipline of the gaol. To compel the Roman Catholic priest to visit each prisoner separately in his cell, would be to defeat the object of the Act in cases like the present, where the number of Roman Catholic prisoners is so large." Is that the opinion you referred to as being the opinion upon which you allowed the priest to see more than one prisoner at a time?—Yes, it was. I always thought it an unnecessary trouble to the Roman Catholic priest to visit each prisoner separately.

Mr. H. Pownall. — — 7 April 1870.

1797. Therefore you were in error in saying that a few months after the passing of the Prison Ministers Act you had that opinion?—No; I individually entertained that opinion before the first opinion was taken, but do not recollect the date.

1798. What was that other opinion?—There were two separate opinions.

1799. Can you furnish the Committee with it; I have assumed that this, which I have read, was the opinion upon which you allowed the priest to see more than one prisoner at a time?—Yes, I think that is the opinion upon which the visiting justices acted.

1800. That, as I have stated, was in 1867; then let us see the action of the court; in July 1867, at the next quarter sessions, Mr. Glossop brought forward this motion: "That whereas the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields have been advised by eminent counsel that they have power, under the Prison Act, 1865, to allow of the celebration of Divine Service according to the rite of the Roman Catholic Church, to assemblages of Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison, the resolution of the court passed on the last county day, 'That with regard to so much of the report of the visiting justices of the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields presented to the court on the last county day, as proposes to allow the celebration of mass by a Roman Catholic priest within the prison, the court is decidedly of opinion that there is no authority for such a proceeding, and that it cannot be allowed,' be rescinded; the same was duly seconded, whereupon Mr. Serjeant Payne moved, by way of amendment, 'That this court having considered the opinions of counsel set out in the report of the visiting justices (though taken without the authority of the court), is still of opinion that the celebration of the mass ought not to be permitted within the county prisons;' and which amendment was duly seconded and put to the vote, and, on a division, was declared by the chairman to be lost; the names of the justices voting were then ordered, in pursuance of the Standing Orders, to be taken down in writing, when it appeared that there were 51 votes for the amendment, and 60 against it." Then follow the division lists. "The orginal motion was then put to the vote, and on a division, carried;" that, I presume, is a correct report of what took place in July 1867?—Yes.

1801. Even after that resolution, as I understand, mass was not celebrated in prisons under your care?—That I am not able to say; if the Roman Catholic service was performed, I apprehend that mass was also performed as a portion of it.

1802. I thought that mass was not begun to be celebrated till 1869?—It was not begun until some time after July 1867.

1803. Notwithstanding this resolution of the court of quarter sessions, the visiting justices still declined to allow the celebration of Divine service according to the Roman Catholic rites in the prison?—I do not think they did.

1804. How did it come about, that two years elapsed after the giving of that opinion before mass was celebrated?—I think that the visiting justices did grant permission soon after that resolution was passed, but the governor is here, and the minute books, and it would be better to refer to them than to trust to my memory; but I should be suprised to hear it, knowing as I do, that the mass forms a part of the Roman Catholic service, and therefore when once permission was given to perform the service, I thought that that would be included as a matter of course, as well as any other part of the service.

1805. I thought there was no permission granted for service until some time after this resolution was agreed to?—Some time did elapse.

1806. But you do not remember how long?—I do not, but I apprehend it would arise partly from the necessity of a suitable place being appropriated for it, and fitted up.

1807. Do you remember the discussion upon that occasion in July 1867?—Yes, perfectly; I remember the discussion, but I could not say on what dates they took place.

1808. At those meetings of the magistrates to which I have drawn your attention, to put it in popular language, there is a very severe whip, is there not?—I do not know by whom; but I believe that there has been on one or two occasions, a good deal of communication with reference to the coming meeting.

1809. There is a much larger attendance of magistrates on the occasion when these class of resolutions are put than commonly?—Certainly, on all occasions of this kind.

1810. At this last division there were 51 for the amendment and 60 against it?—No, at the last division I think the majority was more than that.

1811. In October 1868, I find Mr. Laurie moving, "That in consideration of the large number of Roman Catholic prisoners usually confined in the Middlesex House of Correction and Westminster Bridewell whose religious instruction, according to their own persuasion, is dependent at present on the gratuitous and voluntary services of Roman Catholic ministers, it be referred to the respective committees of visiting justices of those prisons to consider and report their opinions as to the amount and mode of appropriation of a reasonable remuneration to be paid, under the provision of the Prison Ministers Act, 1863, to Roman Catholic ministers officiating in those prisons;" which motion having been seconded, and put to the vote, was on a division lost; in that case there were 30 for the motion and 44 against it. Then in January 1869, I find Mr. Bagshaw moving almost in the same terms, "That the number of prisoners confined in the three prisons for the county of Middlesex, at Westminster, Coldbath Fields, and the House of Detention respectively, who belong to the Roman Catholic Church or religious persuasion is so great, as in the opinion of the justices of the said county to require the ministration of ministers of their own church or persuasion, which differs from the Church of England;" that motion was seconded by Sir William Bodkin, whereupon Mr. Serjeant Payne moved, by way of amendment, "That it is unnecessary and inexpedient for the magistrates to consider whether the numbers of Roman Catholic prisoners is so great as o require the ministration of ministers of their wn church, inasmuch as they are now visited nd instructed by such ministers, who have been ppointed by their own community, and conse- uently have no lack of Roman Catholic teach- ng, and that the magistrates in session not hav- ng appointed such ministers, would not be jus- ified in charging their maintenance upon the atepayers of the county." That amendment as seconded and put to the vote, and on a divi- on carried, 64 voted for the amendment, and 2 voted against it?—Yes, that was the last dis- ussion upon the question.

1812. I think that 50 is the outside number hat have ever voted in favour of any Roman atholic concession?—I do not know whether here would be so many as that.

1813. Are there not about 500 magistrates in Middlesex?—No; there about 360 to 380, but ot more than one-third of them ever attend the essions; many of them are official persons, and on.

1814. But those who are in favour of any tion under the Prison Ministers Act are, I may ke it in a continual and hopeless minority?—I ink so at present.

1815. Were you cognisant of an order having en given to take the Roman Catholic prisoners mass without any warders attending?—No, I is not.

1816. Mr. Synan.] You acted upon the opinion 1865, did you not?—We did.

1817. In the House of Correction at West- nster you did not act upon that opinion until ster Monday 1867; that was the first day that atholic Divine service is proved in the evidence have been held?—I cannot recollect the dates; may be as you state.

1818. At the House of Detention, Clerken- ll, upon the evidence of Father Crescitelli, it stated that the authorities did not act upon that inion until September 1869?—I think not; it s not asked for.

1819. You spoke of another opinion previous the opinion of Sir Roundell Palmer in 1865; u you supply the Committee with that opinion? I have not it with me, but it is printed in our cuments, I think, and laid before the court.

1820. In reply to my honourable friend next with respect to your regulations laid down Roman Catholic prisoners, you used the ex- ssion, "should not introduce conversations;" at did you mean by the word "conversa- ns"?—I mean by that, that the priest should enter in familiar conversation with a prisoner o how the prison is conducted, or as to where relatives are, or receive from him, or make to n, any communication which had not reference religious instruction.

1821. There would be nobody present, I ap- hend, at the interview between the Roman tholic priest and the Roman Catholic prisoner? should think not; but from circumstances ch came from the priest himself at Westmin- r, it appeared to me that it was almost impos- e that these circumstances could be known to without familiar conversation with the pri- ers; for instance, there was the complaint of women that they did not go into the laundry, other circumstances, which had nothing what- to do with religious instruction.

1822. Suppose the chaplain, as has been proved us in evidence, found, from communication with his Roman Catholic prisoners, that the privilege of going into the laundry was withdrawn, for the purpose of influencing their creed, would not it come within his duty as a Catholic chaplain to listen to the prisoners upon the subject?—If the prisoner volunteered and told him of it, then it might be; but still I think it was the duty of the Roman Catholic priest not to be talking about such a subject with the prisoners, but to communicate it immediately to the magistrates.

1823. Was there anything wrong in the Catholic priest, having found out from the prisoners that these inducements were held out for the purpose of influencing their creed, communicating the circumstance to the visiting justices?—I think there was, because he did not communicate it at the time, but some weeks after the communication had been made to him.

1824. Your only objection is, that he did not communicate it soon enough?—It is a decided objection; I should object to the Protestant chaplain, if he happened to have a knowledge of anything which was considered harsh treatment of a prisoner, if he did not at once communicate it to the visiting justices, in order that it might be investigated.

1825. The objection was, that the Roman Catholic chaplain violated his duty as chaplain, in not communicating the circumstance soon enough, and therefore you laid down this rule with reference to his conservations; is that so?—They objected to the conversation itself, and they objected also to his not at once communicating with the visiting magistrates upon the subject instead of making a variety of observations, and entering into the correspondence in the "Pall Mall Gazette," which was alluded to upon a former occasion.

1826. I am not talking about the correspondence in the "Pall Mall Gazette," because the communication was made to the justices; that was the proper way, was not it?—It should have been so made.

1827. And it was so, was not it?—Yes, but not for some time afterwards.

1828. But supposing the Catholic chaplain had made it the next day, or the next week, there would have been then no necessity for the rule?—There would have been a necessity for the rule, but there would be no objection to his hearing it, and communicating it to the visiting justices.

1829. Do you not state to the Committee, that the cause of this invidious rule, as regards the Roman Catholic chaplain, that he should hold no improper conversations with the Roman Catholic prisoners as to external things, was the fact of his having held certain conversations with those prisoners?—That cannot be considered an invidious rule, because it applies to the Protestant clergyman just as much as to the Roman Catholic priest.

1830. I have been requested to ask you, whether the application about the laundry, was not made immediately after the conversation; have you a clear recollection upon the subject?—I think it was three or four weeks afterwards.

1831. Now, with respect to the register, is the register conclusive?—I think that the register is quite conclusive; the exception to it would be brought before the visiting justices for them to determine upon; but if the prisoner was taken ill, the governor would act.

1832. The register is taken immediately upon the entrance of the prisoner, is it not?—Yes, it is.

7 April 1870.

1833. Suppose we have it in the evidence of a witness that that register was altered the day afterwards, upon the second interview of the chaplain of the prison with the prisoner, be he Roman Catholic or Protestant, without any communication with the justices, would you call that a regular and proper course of procedure?—It would depend much upon circumstances. If the man came in drunk to the prison and said he was a Protestant, and then the next morning when he was sober, said he was a Roman Catholic, I think the governor would alter the entry.

1834. Do you think that the entry should be altered without any reference to the magistrates, upon an interview with the Protestant chaplain of the prison?—I think it should not be altered upon an interview with the Protestant chaplain, and I do not believe it would. I think such a case would be brought before the governor, and he might, under the circumstances, alter it; but if it did not arise in the way which I have stated, then it would be a special case to be brought before the visiting justices.

1835. Supposing a prisoner entered in a state of intoxication, do you think that upon the first interview with the Protestant chaplain, the Protestant chaplain and the clerk would make such an entry of creed from the statement of a drunken man?—The chaplain is not present when the entry is made; the entry is made by the officer at the lodge, and in the morning, as I said before, it used to be the custom for the Protestant clergyman to see all the prisoners without asking them any questions of a religious nature; but at the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields, for the last six months the clergyman has not seen any of those who have put their names down as Roman Catholics.

1836. Even on their entrance?—Even on their entrance.

1837. That remark applies only to Coldbath Fields?—Yes; I have not inquired with reference to the other prisons.

1838. We have it in evidence from the matron of the House of Correction at Westminster that the Protestant chaplain sees all the prisoners immediately on their entrance; she is asked, at Question 1000, "You say that the Protestant chaplain asks the prisoners, when they first came into the prison, what is their creed?" and the answer is, "Yes;" and the answer to Question 1002 is: "They are asked that question when they enter, and their reply is entered against them; then, when they go to the chapel the next morning, he again speaks to them and asks them that question." If that does not mean that the question is repeated twice, I do not understand the English language?—That answer would imply that they all went to chapel in the morning; it is not correct that all the prisoners go to the chapel, and are then seen by the chaplain.

1839. With respect to the status of the Roman Catholic chaplain, you have no objection that he should have everything except what you call the status of an officer; do I understand that to be your evidence?—It is.

1840. He is to have a salary?—Yes.

1841. And he is to obey the rules?—Yes.

1842. He is to be dismissed for disobedience to the rules?—Certainly.

1843. Then what remains; what is it you refuse him?—I refuse him to be acknowledged as an officer of the State, which I consider the clergyman appointed as a chaplain to a prison to be.

1844. You do not refuse to allow him to be an officer of the prison; you only object to his being an officer of the State?—He should be permitted to visit the prison and see the prisoners, and bound to obey the rules; that is all I would concede to him.

1845. Will you tell the Committee what you would refuse?—I would refuse that he should be an appointed and accredited officer of a public establishment.

1846. Do you not appoint him?—We permit him; we cannot be said to appoint the Roman Catholic priest, inasmuch as only that gentleman can perform the duties, who is permitted to do so by another person who has no connection whatever with the magistracy.

1847. Then I understand your objection to be that you have no power of selection?—That is one objection.

1848. What is the other?—What I have stated, namely, that I object to giving him the status of a public and paid officer.

1849. But supposing you had the power of selection, would that objection be obviated?—Then I would not appoint him as a public officer.

1850. Supposing you had arranged that a salary should be given, and that an advertisement was published, and that six gentlemen were placed before you, from whom to select, would you then retain your objection?—I should object to making him a public officer.

1851. Supposing 50 came, from whom you could select, would you object still?—I should object, under any circumstances, to a Roman Catholic priest being appointed a public officer.

1852. You were yourself in favour of a salary were you not?—I am in favour of the Roman Catholic priest being paid for his services.

1853. That is a salary?—You may put it as a salary, I should not quarrel with the term; you may take it as a salary.

1854. Supposing a person did not give any services, would you pay him; you appear to make a difference between salary and payment for services?—No, certainly I should not pay a man for doing nothing.

1855. What difference is there between paying a man for his services and giving him a salary?—There is a great difference between paying him for his services and paying him a salary as an accredited officer of the State, of a different religion from that which is the established religion of the country.

1856. Your objection is, that you do not wish to recognise him as a member of the Established Church of the country?—Certainly not.

1857. He does not require that?—If he did I should not concede it to him.

1858. There was a copy of a letter put into the hands of Mr. Glossop, the chairman of the committee of the Coldbath Fields Prison, and he had some doubts as to whether that copy was the real answer to the application made for giving catechetical instruction upon Sunday evenings; would you look at that letter (handing in a letter to the Witness), and say whether that is the official signature of the clerk?—It is.

1859. Will you read it?—"Middlesex House of Detention, Clerkenwell, 15th October, 186[illegible]. Reverend Sir,—I am directed by the visiting justices of this prison to inform you, in reply to your letters to those of the 8th instant, that they regret that they cannot comply with your reque[illegible] to be supplied with an altar, but that they will provide a chest for your use, in which an altar and vestments may be kept. In reference to your remark that a prisoner having once entered his or her name as a Roman Catholic should be left unmolested, and not invited to attend the Protestant services, I am directed to inform you that when a prisoner on admission has stated his or her religious persuasion to be Roman Catholic, such prisoner is never called to the chapel services.—I am, Rev. Sir, your obedient servant, J. S. Skaife, Clerk. The Rev. Dominic Crescitelli, S. Peter's Italian Church, Hatton Garden, E.C."

1860. Mr. Hutton.] With reference to the familiar conversation about the laundry, I suppose you objected to it on the ground that it was liable to interfere with the discipline of the prison?—Unquestionably.

1861. I think the matron said that at the Westminster prison to prevent these familiar conversations a warder was always present when the Church of England chaplain visited the prisoners?—Certainly.

1862. This is not the case with a Roman Catholic priest, I believe?—It is under very different circumstances. If a Roman Catholic prisoner wished to confess, of course the warder would not be within hearing.

1863. But I understand that there never was a warder present when the Roman Catholic priest was seeing a prisoner, except outside the door, in which there was a glass pannel?—That is all.

1864. Therefore, there is not the same means taken to prevent improper communications between Catholic prisoners and their clergyman, as there is between Protestant prisoners and their clergyman?—The direction to the warders is, not to be sufficiently near to hear, or attend to, what the prisoner is saying to the Roman Catholic priest.

1865. I suppose the reason for that is, not because you trust the Roman Catholic priest more than the Church of England minister?—No, not more, but we would trust him equally.

1866. Mr. Matthews.] But that is only when confession is going on, as I understand?—Certainly; in the chapel the warders are present.

1867. Mr. Hutton.] But in the cell, as I understood the matron, there is never a warder present when the Roman Catholic priest is with the prisoner?—That would be so.

1868. Before appointing the Protestant chaplain, you select the individual most calculated for the service?—We endeavour to do so.

1869. But it is not so with the Roman Catholic minister?—We have no opportunity of doing so.

1870. You have also said, that you must have a man conversant with the habits of the poor, and one who knows their circumstances?—I think that is one of the essentials; and with all respect to the gentleman who now attends the House of Detention, he is a foreigner, and I really do not see how a foreigner can enter into all the circumstances and wants of the poorest and lowest part of an English or Irish population.

1871. Still you think that the gentlemen, who at present attend, have done their work satisfactorily upon the whole?—As far as we know, they have done so.

1872. Those two gentlemen are foreigners, and you think it is impossible for them to be conversant with the habits of the English poor?—I speak more immediately with reference to the priest who is at the House of Detention; the gentleman who is at the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields, has been sufficiently long in England, to be thoroughly conversant with the habits and wants of the people.

1873. Mr. Dimsdale.] On how many different occasions did you take counsel's opinion with reference to the priest visiting more than one prisoner at a time?—Twice.

1874. What was the date of the first?—I cannot charge my memory with the dates.

1875. Was it the 9th of February 1866?—It may be, but the governor of the House of Correction, or Mr. Skaife, the clerk, will be able to answer that.

1876. What was the general tenor of that opinion?—The first opinion was that we could not allow more than one prisoner to be seen at a time, and the second opinion was to the contrary effect.

1877. What was the date of the second opinion?—That I cannot say; I think it was in 1867, but I am not quite sure.

1878. In consequence of the two opinions conflicting, the decision of the magistrates was changed?—It was.

1879. Do you remember when mass was first celebrated in Coldbath Fields?—I do not remember the date; perhaps I might state that some delay may have taken place in consequence of the confusion in which the prison at that period was; we were half rebuilding the prison, and had not a large room to spare.

1880. The date of the first opinion is the 9th of February 1866, given by Sir Fitzroy Kelly and Sir James Hannen?—Yes.

1881. The date of the first service is the 22nd of September 1867, as I understand?—So I am informed.

1882. In consequence of the change at Coldbath Fields prison, did you communicate with the authorities at Westminster?—I did.

1883. And the result of it was that they decided upon the adoption of a similar course at Westminster?—I had a letter from the Home Office, asking the reason why the practice was different at Westminster from what it was at the House of Correction, which letter I brought before the visiting justices at Westminster, and they passed a resolution, which was as follows: "House of Correction, Westminster. Extract from the Minutes of the proceedings of the visiting justices on the 28th of December 1867. The subject of religious instruction to Roman Catholics in prisons, having lately been mooted in Parliament, and discussed in the court of quarter sessions, it has been deemed advisable by the visiting justices of this prison to take the decision of their previous resolutions on this important subject into reconsideration; and having carefully weighed the reasons by which they were formerly influenced, they now feel that they cannot be insensible to the significance of the assertion made in Parliament by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, that their proceedings in this matter 'are contrary to the intentions of the Legislature,' nor to the general tone of public opinion freely expressed, nor to the fact that the majority of the magistrates of the county are opposed to their views. They, therefore, deem it expedient on the grounds above stated:—1st. To rescind the resolutions of the 10th of February, the 3rd of November, and the 15th of November 1866; and, secondly, to resolve resolve that the regulations now in force at the Coldbath Fields prison, relative to the religious instruction of the Roman Catholic prisoners, be adopted in this house of correction." Upon that resolution, the visiting justices, I think, took measures to provide religious instruction for the Roman Catholic prisoners.

7 April 1870.

1884. Then in refusing permission to the Roman Catholic priest to visit more than one prisoner at a time in 1866, and giving that permission in 1868, the Westminster justices acted in each case in accordance with the legal opinions they took?—Certainly.

1885. Do you know the chapel which has been fitted up at Westminster for the Roman Catholic priest?—Yes, I do.

1886. Do you know whether there have been any complaints by either of the gentlemen who have officiated as Roman Catholic priests, with reference to its being too small?—No, not to my knowledge; and if there were, I think that in a room of the dimensions a small gallery might be erected at the further end of it, and other means taken to increase the accommodation to a great deal more than the number of prisoners in the gaol would require at present.

1887. You are under the impression that the visiting justices would not have objected to place a gallery in the chapel, if it should be required?—No; I think if there had been a representation made to them that there was not sufficient space, they would not have objected to afford more accommodation to the prisoners.

1888. Their object was not to contract the room for the prisoners, but to afford them a reasonable space?—Certainly; the room has been fitted up with all the comforts and appliances which would be necessary for a Protestant place of worship; we have certainly not provided many things that are considered necessary in a Roman Catholic chapel.

1889. I will only ask you one question with regard to the familiar conversation between the Roman Catholic priest and the prisoner; you would have taken equal precautions, I presume, if familiar conversations had taken place with the chaplain of the Established Church, and have dealt equally with either of the chaplains?—Yes; a violation of the prison rules would have been visited alike upon both.

1890. You stated on the last day of your examination, that you had no objection to the payment of the priest, but that you objected to his recognition as an officer of the prison?—Yes.

1891. And to-day you have stated that you would be willing to make that payment to him in the proportion of so much per head?—Certainly.

1892. Whatever the number was?—Yes.

1893. Supposing there were only 8, or 10, or 15, as is the case in some of our prisons, how would you deal with him in that case?—I think it would be an unreasonable demand upon the ratepayers to have a gentleman appointed with a salary sufficient to maintain his position, in a prison such as for instance the House of Detention, where the numbers are so fluctuating, and where very few remain more than 10 days, as our sessions are every fortnight; I must say, I think it would be very unreasonable to have a permanent appointment at a considerable salary for such a place as that.

1894. Would you pay the Roman Catholic chaplain in the proportion of so much per head, or would you fix a minimum number below which you would not appoint a priest?—I would pay him per head, be the numbers small or great.

1895. Would you concede the same to any minister belonging to one of the numerous bodies of Dissenters?—If it was required, I think I should.

1896. In fact you would pay them all?—I would, but I would rather pay a Protestant Dissenter than I would pay a Roman Catholic priest.

1897. But, of course, upon the principle of toleration, they ought to be both placed upon the same footing?—I should not object to his being paid as I have suggested.

1898. Lord Enfield.] How many Roman Catholic magistrates are there in Middlesex?—I cannot say accurately; four or five I believe.

1899. I think there are four; Lord Arundel, of Wardour, Mr. Serjeant Bellasis, Mr. Swift, and Mr. Bagshawe?—Lord Petre is also one.

1900. Have either of those gentlemen served upon either of your three committees?—No, I do not think so.

1901. Have they ever been proposed?—No, nor do I think they have expressed a desire to be.

1902. Do you think that if another motion were to be made this year for the payment of Roman Catholic priests, it would be likely that the court would come to an agreement to pay them, according to their services, a fair remuneration?—I should not be surprised if the court agreed to it, but I could not say whether they would or not. Of course, I do not know the opinion of the 100 gentlemen who would come to the court upon such an occasion.

1903. Do you think that, in all probability, if the motion was renewed for the payment of these gentlemen, that motion would be rejected?—I think there would be a better chance of its being carried if it was simply a naked motion for the payment of these gentlemen for the duties they performed.

1904. I think all the motions have been to the end that the services of the Roman Catholic priest should be paid; there was no mention of a chaplain being appointed, was there?—It was always understood by the magistrates, when they were discussing it, that they were discussing the question of the appointment of a chaplain.

1905. The word "chaplain" was not used, but the word "minister"?—No, but the word "chaplain" was such a general phrase with us that it was understood to refer to his appointment.

1906. But the word "minister" would obviate your objection to the appointment of a chaplain, as he would not be a State officer receiving a salary for State services?—It would not remove my objection to the appointment of a Roman Catholic minister, whether they called him a chaplain or a minister. My objection is to a Roman Catholic being appointed as a public officer under any name.

1907. But I think you take particular exception to the word "chaplain;" you do not object to his being paid as a minister of the Roman Catholic persuasion, but as chaplain and a State officer of the prison?—I use that term, because that is the cognomen under which the ecclesiastical officer of the prison is appointed.

1908. Lord Henley.] You have been a long time chairman of the quarter sessions of Middlesex, have you not?—I have.

1909. Have

1909. Have you had much experience of the quarter sessions of other counties?—None at all.

1910. As far as your experience of quarter sessions goes, you have generally found a strong political bias in them, have you not?—Not in Middlesex; I would venture to say that there is no political bias there, and if I were asked what was the the political opinion of the majority of the Bench, I should be unable to give it.

1911. You do not think that there is a strong bias in the Middlesex quarter sessions in favour of Conservative politics and the Established Church?—I do not know of a strong political bias, but there is in favour of the Established Church.

1912. And you have not seen much bias in other quarter sessions?—I have had no experience in other quarter sessions.

1913. There appears to be that bias, however, in the Middlesex quarter sessions?—There is no bias that I have witnessed in the Middlesex quarter sessions of a political character.

1914. Are you of opinion that Parliament in leaving the appointment of ministers of various denominations to the judgment of the quarter sessions acted quite rightly; you would think that the quarter sessions was the proper body to appoint ministers, would you not?—No, I think Parliament ought to have done its own duty, which is to declare positively what magistrates ought to do.

1915. Why do you think so?—Because it is not, I think, for those who administer the law to fix taxes upon others who are obliged to pay them. If Parliament thought Roman Catholic priests should be paid, the option should not have been left with the magistrates.

1916. Then you would consider that the magistrates were not in this case the proper body to determine the question with reference to the choice of chaplains, and the payment of them; you think that that should not be left to the quarter sessions?—No; if Parliament thinks it a public duty that ought to be performed, Parliament ought to direct what should be done.

1917. The quarter sessions would be spending the money of the ratepayers without any representations from those ratepayers; would not that be so?—No, I think not. As I said the other day, the magistrates are all of them very large ratepayers; the only difference is that they are appointed by the Crown, subject to all the laws and regulations to which the magistrates are subject who are appointed by the votes of the inhabitants.

1918. But the county magistrates are not appointed in any way by the votes of the inhabitants?—No; they are appointed by the Crown.

1919. Would you be surprised if you heard that, in many quarter sessions of the non-metropolitan counties, there was a very strong political bias?—I should not; because so much depends upon the locality, and the circumstances by which the magistrates are surrounded.

1920. If there was that bias, you would expect it to be in favour of the Conservative institutions of the country, would you not?—Yes.

1921. Therefore, you think that the quarter sessions would not be a fair body to decide the matter?—I think that it is the duty of Parliament to decide it; it is not a question for the quarter sessions.

1922. Mr. Dalrymple.] I understand you to say that if the man declared himself a Protestant, but afterwards, in the infirmary, declared himself a Roman Catholic, he could have the ministrations of a Roman Catholic priest?—Yes.

1923. But that, in ordinary circumstances, he must be considered to remain of the faith which he had represented himself to belong to at the outset?—That is so.

1924. I should like to put to you the question which was put to the previous witness; do you not think that, if doubts were entertained with reference to the religion of a prisoner, it would be better that those doubts should be cleared up by inquiries conducted by some other person than the minister of those religions?—I think the objection would apply to anybody who made the inquiry. The Roman Catholic priest would be no more satisfied with the inquiry of the governor than the governor would be satisfied with the inquiry of the Roman Catholic priest with reference to a Protestant; and, in our prison, where we have upwards of 2,000 prisoners, and 10,000 passing through the prison in the course of the year, you may imagine how difficult it would be if the prisoners were allowed to vary their religious declaration.

1925. With regard to what the noble Lord was asking you just now, you are not averse to paying the Roman Catholic priest for his ministrations?—No.

1926. But you recognise a difference between doing that and recognising him as an accredited officer of the prison?—Yes, certainly.

1927. Mr. Guest.] You stated that familiar conversation was not allowed between the chaplain and the prisoners; are there any rules laid down with reference to what should take place, or rather what should not take place between the chaplain and the prisoners?—I think not.

1928. Are the instructions given by word of mouth?—It would be by word of mouth; I think they are instructed to confine their intercourse as much as possible to religious instruction.

1929. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] You stated to the Committee that you would sooner pay a Protestant Dissenting minister than a Roman Catholic priest; do you mean the Committee to infer from that that the spiritual destitution of the Protestant Dissenters in your prison is so much greater than that of the Roman Catholics, that they would require more religious ministration?—No; my observation would merely convey the idea that my personal feelings were with the Protestant Dissenter, and not with the Roman Catholic priest.

1930. You did not mean the Committee either to infer what I have stated, or that the voluntary ministration is so much more abundant among the Catholics, that that voluntary instruction would be more readily supplied by Roman Catholic ministers than by Protestant Dissenters?—No; I think great benefit has arisen to all prisons from that instruction. I cannot imagine any reformation to take place unless it is preceded by religious instruction. If I might be allowed to say one word about Roman Catholic ladies being allowed to visit the prisoners, I would say that I differ entirely from the opinion that ladies ought not to be allowed to visit female prisoners. I remember perfectly well visiting Newgate with Mrs. Fry, and I saw the benefit that was derived from her instruction; moreover, I have, if I might be permitted to read it, a report from one of the ladies ladies who at present visits the prisoners at Westminster, giving an account of upwards of 100 prisoners, whom she has visited, and what has been the result of her visits, and I must add that I can only regret that the application has not been repeated, for a Roman Catholic lady or ladies to visit the Roman Catholic prisoners. I think the greatest benefit would arise from it. The lady I refer to states that, "During nine years, from 1861 to the end of 1869, 230 prisoners have been visited in their cells; of these eight are married, 26 are known to be satisfactory, 39 were last heard of in refuges or schools, and were also doing well, 103 have not been heard of at all since leaving prison; but as a great part of these returned at once to friends or home, there is reason to hope they have not returned to crime; 15 are still in homes, 12 are unsatisfactory, 22 have returned to prison, but only two for more than once, and three of those are now married and going on well, and 14 are still in prison, and one in Hanwell. I believe the falling into crime in most instances to have arisen from the want of proper homes, good parents, and education; many girls of 17 and 18, could neither read nor write; two had never even heard of Jesus Christ before going to prison, 60 had one parent only, 43 were orphans or friendless, 44 were foreigners, chiefly Germans, from Whitechapel or the City-road, 35 were almost totally ignorant, 151 were under 20 years old, six under 12. Of those who returned to prison, 10 gave little hope from the first, two being amongst the most refractory prisoners, nine refused to go to a refuge or home, and returned immediately to bad companions from prison." It is now a question of whether the prison regulations since the last Prison Act was passed, are to be entirely deterrent, or whether they are to be partly deterrent and partly reformatory; if they are to be partly reformatory, then I think it is essential that ladies should be permitted to visit the female prisoners, if not solely deterrent; then, of course, comes the silent system with all its monotony, and with all its concomitants, and prisoners, I think, would go out more hardened than when they entered the prison; if application for the visits of a Roman Catholic lady had been repeated when I was upon the committee, I certainly should have supported the application that Roman Catholic ladies be admitted to visit the Roman Catholic female prisoners.

Mr. H. Pownall. 7 April 1870.

1931. Recognising the advantage of religious instruction, and being, I am sure, above prejudices of creed, do you not think that Roman Catholic prisoners would best receive religious instruction from those whom they have always been taught to look up to as their spiritual instructors?—Unquestionably.

1932. Do you think that those spiritual instructors could work with equal advantage to the prisoners, if they worked upon a footing of disadvantage as compared with other clergymen?—Unless I understood what those disadvantages were, I could not exactly say.

1933. Do you think it is a disadvantage for a man to be unpaid, as compared with a man who is paid 400 l. a year?—Yes; certainly.

1934. Is not that the disadvantage under which the Roman Catholic minister at present labours?—I would not do them the injustice to suppose so; I take a more elevated view of the ministerial character; to the individual it is a disadvantage when not paid, but not in his ministrations.

1935. You think that the Roman Catholic priests are so exempt from the ordinary feelings of human nature, that although they were not paid while the Protestant ministers were paid, they would think that a disadvantage?—No; I do not thiuk that they would be above the ordinary feelings of human nature, but I believe that even if no payment were made to the Protestant minister, you would find that hundreds of volunteers would come forward to give instruction to the prisoners.

1936. Do you think that voluntary instruction is as beneficial and as likely to be regularly supplied as paid instruction?—I could not say that it would be as regularly supplied, but I believe it would be quite as efficacious.

1937. Even if the Roman Catholic clergymen did not feel their non-payment to be a disadvantage, do you not think that the effect of their ministrations upon the prisoners might be weakened by the feeling that they were placed upon a different level from the chaplain?—Speaking from my view of the ordinary acceptation of human nature, I think it would rather enhance the value of those services. If a person does me a kindness without expecting to receive any reward, I appreciate that kindness more than I should if he was paid for doing it.

1938. You do not consult the bishop of the diocese when you appoint a Protestant chaplain?—Certainly not.

1939. And you do not consult the Roman Catholic bishop or archbishop when you permit the Roman Catholic chaplain to visit you prison?—No.

1940. Is not the ecclesiastical superior likely to appoint the man who is most fit for that duty?—I do not know that positively, but I believe that no Roman Catholic priest would offer his services without the permission of his ecclesiastical superior.

1941. Is not the fact that half-a-dozen or more Protestant clergymen might offer themselves as candidates for the vacancy, and that only one Roman Catholic clergyman would be likely to offer himself as a candidate for the Roman Catholic vacancy, a fact which really only bears upon the difference of discipline in the two churches, that is to say, the Roman Catholic bishop exercises a different supervision over his priests from what the bishop of the Church of England exercises over the clergymen in his diocese?—I think the magistrates would be very unwilling to appoint a Protestant clergyman under such circumstances; and they equally would object to interfere at all with reference to the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain. My own impression is, if I may express it, that as I do not, so I would rather know nothing about the Roman Catholic priest.

1942. You would wish to ignore his existence as far as appointment is concerned?—Yes; as I do not wish to have the selection, as I can be no judge of his qualification.

1943. But how can you be a judge of the Protestant minister's qualifications if you have not known him before?—I think I can, in this way: if I heard that one of our chaplains was in the habit of going out hunting two or three days a week from the prison, I should very soon object to his keeping the office.

1944. But should you not object equally

you heard that the Roman Catholic clergyman was in the habit of doing the same thing?—All we should do, I apprehend, would be, that if we found the Roman Catholic priest absent two or three days in the week, and performing no duty, we should immediately withdraw our permission from him, and request another to be sent in his place.

1945. Taking your own illustration of hunting, do you think that a Catholic bishop would be likely to sanction the application of any clergyman who hunted three days a week?—No; nor do I think the Protestant bishop would; I only gave it as the first impression that came to my mind; as a matter of fact, we have most exemplary chaplains in our prisons, who produced reliable evidence of their fitness for the office.

1946. If any minister is admitted to visit the prison, do you not think it better that he should do so as an officer of the prison, officially recognised, than as some one beyond the control of the prison authorities?—No, I do not; so long as we have an established religion in the country, I think the public officers ought to be in unison with that religion.

1947. And those are the views which have been repeatedly taken by the Middlesex magistrates?—I think they are.

1948. There is one more question which I wish to ask you; do you think that, unless Parliament interfered, there is any chance of the contrary view being taken in Middlesex, and clergymen of different persuasions put upon a different footing in the Middlesex prisons from that which now exists?—I do not think there is.

1949. Chairman.] Upon that point what do you suggest as a remedy?—That Parliament should decide that Roman Catholic priests should be remunerated for their services.

1950. That Parliament should bring in a Compulsory Bill?—Certainly; for payment of services, if they think he should be paid.

1951. Leaving no discretion with the magistrates?—No discretion with reference to the appointment, but let them fix the rate of remuneration.

1952. What you ask is that Parliament should bring in a Bill to say that you shall and must appoint a visiting priest, and that you must pay him?—And that you must pay him according to the requirements of the prison; yes, but not give him an official appointment, but pay him for his services.

1953. Would not that capitation principal act rather unfairly where there was a moderate number, say, 50 or 60 prisoners, who might require considerable attendance on the part of the clergyman, while the remuneration arising from them would be totally insufficient?—I do not think that for 60 prisoners the whole of the services of either clergyman or a Roman Catholic priest necessary; I can easily imagine that prisoners (and we all know their character) would rather prefer to spend their time with the clergyman or the priest, than they would either in picking oakum in their cells or working at the treadmill.

1954. I will put the case in this way: suppose there were 60 Catholics in the prison, and that the Roman Catholic clergyman had to give divine service in the morning and evening on Sunday, and to give two hours or an hour and a half for six days in the week, do you consider that 30 l. a year would be a sufficient remuneration for that service?—No, not for such services; but I think that in many cases a sum very much less than 100 l. a year would be adequate.

1955. But if you adhere strictly to that capitation proposal, you might equally do injustice on the side of liberality?—Yes; and therefore I would in some measure leave the amount to the discretion of the visiting justices with reference to the services which might be deemed necessary for the prison.

1956. There is one other point which I wish to ask you about; you stated in the early part of your evidence to-day, something to the effect that you did not know or require anything, and could give the Committee no information with reference to the mode of instruction or the ministrations of the Catholic clergyman; and in another part of your evidence you stated something to this effect, "they discharged their duty well as far as we could tell;" now I ask should not the visiting justices make it their duty to inquire whether this instruction is such instruction as they would approve of, or whether it is injurious?—I think I had better not answer that question, because it would lead to observations that would not be agreeable, I fear.

1957. Ought not the visiting justices at least to inquire into the manner in which the clergyman discharges his duty?—I do not see how a Protestant can be a judge of how the duty is performed by the Roman Catholic priests.

1958. Now, with reference to the complaint about the chapel at Westminster; that complaint, I believe, was entirely in reference to the space, as the chapel did not admit of more than 160 or 170 attending at one time?—The space is ample at Westminster at present for the number of prisoners that we have, and if more is required I am inclined to think that the chapel could be enlarged.

1959. The nature of the complaint was, that when 220 Roman Catholic prisoners were in the gaol, not more than 170 would attend at one time; it did not go beyond that, I believe?—I do not recollect the present accommodation being complained of by the Roman Catholic priest as insufficient.

1960. But if there was any complaint, it was limited entirely to the space; was not that so?—No; at Westminster the complaint has always been that we do not find the vestments and other things.

1961. But I am now speaking with reference to the chapel itself, and not with regard to the sacred vestments?—I do not recollect a complaint that the space was not equal to the wants of the prisoners. When we talk of the number of Roman Catholic prisoners, we must always recollect that there are several under punishment; several are obliged to be in the kitchen, and many of them would be ill in the infirmary, so that they could never all of them attend at one time.

1962. But at the same time you say that if there were any reasonable demand made for further space, you think it could be granted?—I think it would.

1963. A noble Lord asked you some questions with regard to the political feeling at the meetings of the quarter sessions; is not the feeling that induced the court to refuse those repeated applications rather of a religious than a political character?—It is entirely of a religious character, according to my opinion.

1964. Mr. O'Reilly.] Am I correct in taking this as the fact, that the Prison Ministers Act, being being passed in 1863, the first religious service for Roman Catholics celebrated in one of the prisons under the Middlesex magistrates was on the 22nd of September 1867, in Coldbath Fields prison; that the first religious service in Westminster was subsequent to the 28th of December 1867, which was the date of the resolution appointing it, and that the first religious services for Roman Catholic prisoners in Clerkenwell prison was in September 1869?—I believe those dates are correct; nothing is said in the Act with reference to the visiting justices allowing a Roman Catholic chapel in the prison.

7 April 1870.

1965. Mr. Synan.] You spoke, I suppose, as a Protestant layman, when you said that you were a better judge of the Protestant chaplains' qualifications than of the Roman Catholic ministers'?—Yes.

1966. Have you got Catholic laymen in your body as justices?—Yes, we have.

1967. Are they not good judges, and better judges of the qualifications of the Catholic minister than of the Protestant chaplain?—Yes; but their judgment would not influence mine.

1968. You are in favour of payment for service, but not of salary, are you not?—Yes.

1969. Are you in favour of payment for the essentials to Catholic service?—Certainly not. I would pay for everything in the Catholic chapel that we consider necessary in the Protestant chapel, but the other things I think the Roman Catholics ought to find for themselves, as I consider that it would be repugnant to Protestant feelings to buy some of those things which the Catholics think essential.

1970. Would it be repugnant to Protestant feelings to pay for wine?—No.

1971. Do you pay for wine for the Catholic chaplain?—No.

1972. Has it ever been applied for?—I am not aware that it has been, it would not be required for Roman Catholic prisoners.

1973. Suppose it was stated to this Committee that it had been applied for and refused, what would be your opinion?—My opinion would be that it ought not to be refused if required.

1974. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Do you think it would be repugnant to the feelings of Catholic ratepayers to pay for the essentials of Protestant worship?—I cannot answer for the Catholic feeling, but I suppose that it would.

1975-6. Does the Catholic chaplain require a Testament?—I have no doubt he does, but he has never asked for it, and if the visiting justices comply with what is asked for, I think they should not be blamed for not complying with what is not asked for; they would cheerfully give him a Testament or Bible.

1977. Supposing it were asked for and refused, would that refusal be wrong?—Certainly I think it would, just as if a prisoner had applied for it, and been refused. I should consider that wrong.

1978. Suppose the Roman Catholic clergyman asked for a challice, would his request be granted?—It would depend upon what sort of challice he wanted. I apprehend that we should not object to give a simple cup, such as we have in our church.

1979. Supposing he asked for a challice, and it was positively refused, would that refusal be right?—It would depend upon what sort of a challice he asked for. If the Catholic chaplain asked, as I said, for a mere cup like that which we have in our service, I do not think it would be right to refuse it.

1980. The Protestant chaplain, I believe, uses some vestments, does he not?—He does.

1981. Supposing the Catholic chaplain asked for vestments and was refused, would you think that refusal correct?—It would depend upon what vestments the Catholic priest asked for.

1982. You would say, in point of fact, that if the Catholic chaplain asked for everything essential to Protestant worship it would be supplied?—Yes, if he confined himself to these things.

1983. But if he asked for anything essential for Catholic worship, and differing from what is required for the Protestant service, it would not be given?—I think not.

1984. You stated to the Committee that you would suggest that the Catholic priest's payment should be dependent upon the number of prisoners, and you refer to the Clerkenwell Prison. Could you give the Committee the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners at Clerkenwell?—I think from 320 to 350 would be the average number.

1985. Would not that warrant a payment or salary, which ever you call it?—If there were only six I would pay him.

1986. Now, with respect to the cell, you say that no officer attends to the cell when the priest enters to communicate with the prisoners?—So far as I am aware, he does not.

1987. Supposing you were informed that in ordinary visits, an officer does attend in the cell at the same time with the Catholic chaplain, would you be surprised to hear that?—As regards ordinary visits, I should not be surprised to hear that.

1988. For what kind of visit would you be surprised to hear it?—If the priest wished to talk to the prisoner upon the subject of confession.

1989. If the priest was about to confess the prisoner, then the officer would be obliged to withdraw?—Yes, I think so.

1990. Upon all other occasions the officer is obliged to attend, is he not?—Yes, and if the priest visits the prisoner to know what books he wants, or why he did not come to chapel last Sunday, and in things of that kind, I see no objection to his doing so.

1991. You agree that, except for confessional interviews, all other interviews should be in the presence of an officer of the prison?—I think so.

1992. Does the attendance of the Protestant chaplain under some circumstances require the attendance of an officer of the prison?—I think if he went to a cell, a warder would be there either with the door open or close to it.

1993. You are of opinion that the same rule ought to apply to the Protestant chaplain as to the Catholic minister?—I think it would, when he requires to see the prisoners.

1994. And you say that he does?—I cannot positively say as to the practice, but I think it does.

1995. Mr. Hutton.] An honourable Member asked you, whether there was a special copy of rules given to the chaplain of the prison, relating to familiar conversation with the prisoners, and you said there was not; I suppose, as a general rule, none of the officers are allowed to hold familiar conversation with the prisoners?—I think the Scripture readers, and the men that we employ in providing for the prisoners when they leave the prison, must necessarily have familia conversatio nversation with them to know how they can be st assisted to earn a livelihood.

1996. But as a general rule in the prison, the arders and officers of the prison may not have miliar conversation with the prisoners?—The arders most assuredly may not.

1997. Would not the chaplain come under at general rule as an officer?—Yes, I think , but not equally with the warders.

1998. Mr. Dimsdale.] I think there was some isunderstanding with reference to the chapel at Vestminster; did I understand you to say that either the Rev. Mr. White nor the Rev. Mr. ond made any complaint to the visiting justices any deficiency of room in the chapel?—I am t aware of any complaint having been made.

1999. Mr. Guest.] I understood you to say at you considered it should be laid down by arliament that the Roman Catholic priest should paid?—If Parliament think that Roman atholic priests ought to be paid, I think it is eir duty to say so, and not ours.

2000. I presume, upon the same score, you ould say that they ought to lay down a rule at a proper chapel should be provided for the rvices of the Roman Catholic chaplain?—I ink if they did that in some cases, they might t have the space in the prison, or the oppor- nity of procuring it; but I see no objection to eir ordering it to be done where practicable. think whatever Parliament thinks necessary, ey should determine, and let the justices know at that is the law which they are to carry out, d not leave it to their option.

2001. I want to ask you again this question; u said you would not object to provide certain sentials necessary for carrying on the Roman atholic service; I presume, you would provide ch things as would be considered fixtures, and t those which would be considered moveables?—No; some are fixtures to which we should rongly object.

2002. Viscount Enfield.] Supposing Parlia- ent decided that the Roman Catholic chaplain ould be paid a salary; do you think that that ould be paid by the ratepayers in the respec- ve counties, or out of money specially provided Parliament for that purpose?—I think that had better come out of the pockets of the tepayers, as they pay the other salaries in the ison; I do not see why a difference should be ade.

2003. Chairman.] Is it within your own know- dge that the Catholics of the metropolitan strict are, upon the whole, composed of a very mble and poor class?—Certainly, most of our isoners are very poor.

2004. We have it upon the evidence of a ergyman, who has been examined here, that e Catholics of Westminster are very poor?—o doubt they are.

2005. Composed mostly of a very humble ss?—They are.

2006. Do you think it fair to ask a clergyman pay such a sum as 150 l. out of his own pocket things which are absolutely essential to the tholic service?—I could not answer that estion without being obliged to say what I ought was unfair towards Protestants.

2007. Is not it a very grievous burden upon n?—I do not think it necessary for him to be at t expense.

2008. Supposing it was 100 l., would you be prised to hear that it was a great burden?—I can imagine 5 l. being spent, which he might think necessary, but which I might think objectionable.

2009. But assuming that he has to pay 100 l. out of his own pocket for the purpose of purchasing sacred vessels and vestments, do you not think that that is a very onerous burden upon him?—It is one which he imposes upon himself, and from which he ought not to be relieved.

2010. Supposing he cannot, without having these essentials, perform the rites of his own church, and therefore he must undergo that expense; is not the undergoing that expense a grievous burden upon him?—It cannot be otherwise than a burden to him; but I do not think the Protestant part of the community are to blame for that, or ought to bear it.

2011. Where is he to get the money from?—You must allow me to say, where he can. Protestants ought not to pay it.

2012. Is it not the fact that there are, necessarily, very heavy burdens thrown upon the wealthy portion of the Catholic community for schools and churches, and various institutions and churches in poor districts, for the support of the clergymen?—And so there are in every part of England upon the Protestants, with regard to schools and poor, and upon Dissenting ministers of all classes.

2013. But we are speaking of the Catholics, whom you admit are of a very poor class, with comparatively few rich people amongst them; therefore, is not the burden of providing such matters the more grievous upon the Catholic priest?—Unquestionably; and a great reason for the expense not being incurred.

2014. But suppose that those things to be supplied are essential to their service, and things without which there can be no service?—With submission, you know it is what one man thinks essential to his service, in opposition to what another thinks; our differences are great upon that point.

2015. I do not want to refine upon the matter at all; but suppose there are certain sacred vestments without which a Roman Catholic clergyman cannot perform the rites of his own church, would you say that the providing of them should be thrown upon the Catholic clergyman himself?—Decidedly; or his community; or not incurred.

2016. And, through him, upon the poor congregation?—I think they are unnecessary.

2017. With great respect to you, why should you form an opinion upon a matter of the kind; a matter which is not really within your cognisance at all?—I do know something about it. I have been upon the Continent, and I have seen the enormous expense incurred there in celebrating their services.

2018. We are speaking merely of simple necessaries?—I have already said that as far as relates to the necessaries which in the Protestant church are considered essential I should have no objection to furnish them to the Roman Catholic priest.

2019. But you will admit that there are certain things to be provided, without which there can be no Catholic service?—Then I can only regret it, but I would not be a party to supplying them.

2020. But if you hear it stated, upon Catholic authority, that that is the fact, and that all authority unites in saying that that is the fact, would you wish to alter your opinion?—I could not make any other statement; I consider the expense unnecessary.

Lieut. Colonel THOMAS HARPUR COLVILL, called in; and Examined.

Lieut. Col. T. H. Colvill.

7 April 1870.

2021. Chairman.] I BELIEVE you are the governor of Coldbath Fields House of Correction?—I am.

2022. Dr. Kirner stated in his examination that an official invitation was made to the prisoners to attend the Protestant worship; the first question put to him on that subject was this: "Have you found that there has been a tendency, more or less, on the part of the Protestant authorities to interfere with the Catholic prisoners? Such a case occurred last August or September."—Then the witness was asked to state what were the circumstances of that case, and this is what he stated: "It was officially given out in all the wards that any Catholic who would wish to attend the Protestant service on Sunday afternoons could do so, and that they were to give in their numbers; and then on Sunday afternoons, as there was no service for Catholics, some of the Catholic prisoners, simply to get out of their cells and to get more liberty, attended the Protestant service; I considered it as a direct invitation, because some of the warders opened the prisoners' cells, and said, 'For church;' and then if a prisoner said, 'I am a Catholic,' the answer was, 'You will be locked up if you do not go;'" and he stated that that order was given by the governor; it is with reference to that matter that we wish to have some explanation; what is your explanation of it?—I do not quite remember the circumstances of that case, but it had been an understanding in the prison for many years until lately that Roman Catholics might attend the Protestant service if they pleased; and as far as I remember there was some question as to whether they might go in this case, and I said they might go if there was room; and upon that I think the chief warder put this order in writing, which I had not seen.

2023. Have you a copy of it with you?—No, I have not, but it was to the effect that the Roman Catholic prisoners might attend the Protestant service if they wished.

2024. Was that order communicated to all the Roman Catholic prisoners?—Yes, through the warders.

2025. Did you see that afterwards?—Yes, afterwards.

2026. Was that order given in consequence of any conversation that you had with the warder?—I think it must have been in consequence of some question asked me as to whether the Roman Catholic prisoners might go to the Protestant service or not. I said, "Yes; the Roman Catholics may attend the Protestant service if they wish."

2027. Are the Committee to understand that any one inferior to you in authority would issue such an order as that without your authority?—The chief warder, no doubt, thought that he was carrying out my orders, and put into writing what I had told him by word of mouth.

2028. Do you think that he was carrying out your order?—So far as telling them that they might attend the Protestant service if they pleased, he was, for that had been always the understanding, until the prison became so crowded in March 1869 that all the Protestant prisoners could not attend service on Sunday.

2029. Then the statement made by the Catholic clergyman is true, that such an order was officially communicated to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—It is.

2030. Did you receive your instructions in reference to that matter from the visiting justices?—No, not directly upon that point; but it had always been the rule during the 15 years that I had been in the prison, that the Roman Catholics might attend if they liked, when convenient; but there was no compulsion upon them to do so, if they did not wish it.

2031. But do you not think that such an invitation would be likely to have a powerful influence in tempting men to give up a cold cell for association in a warm chapel?—It might have had that effect, certainly; but it was not done with that intention. The separate cells are warmed in cold weather.

2032. Supposing that that order was still in force, and that the Roman Catholics were in the habit of taking advantage of that invitation, do you not think that it would have at the end, we will say of six or 12 months, a very serious effect upon their religious opinions?—It is hard to say; I think it might; but it would depend upon how far they were influenced by what they heard.

2033. But you assume, of course, that the Protestant chaplain does his best to impress his hearers with the truth of what he says to them?—Certainly.

2034. Would that not have a very strong tendency, therefore, to influence a man's religious opinions?—To a certain extent I think it would.

2035. Would you think it right, therefore, to take advantage of the helplessness of a prisoner to put him under an influence to which he ought not to be subjected?—Perhaps it would hardly be right.

2036. But, at any rate, that order was rescinded a short time afterwards?—Yes.

2037. And no such order is given now?—No; on the contrary, the order is that Roman Catholics shall not attend the Protestant service.

2038. The next thing, therefore, that would have to be done would be to provide accommodation during that period of the Sunday for the Roman Catholics, as well as for the Protestants?—Roman Catholics would be in the same position as Protestants not attending the afternoon service.

2039. Are you in favour of giving a second Roman Catholic service upon the Sunday?—No; I consider that it is not necessary; but in order for each Protestant prisoner to attend service upon Sunday it is necessary to have two services.

2040. Are there not some Protestant prisoners who attend the morning and evening services?—There are very few who do.

2041. But there are no Roman Catholics who attend a second service on Sunday?—No.

2042. Do you not think, if the clergyman were willing to give that second service, it would be right for the prisoners to have the benefit of it?—Prisoners are glad to leave their separate cells for association; and I think there would be some inequality if the Roman Catholic prisoners came out as a regular rule twice a day to attend service, and the Protestant prisoners only once.

2043. Do you not think that that inconvenience might be obviated if it were thought advisable to have the chapel enlarged?—No; I consider nsider that 800 is a very large number of men have loose in a prison at one time, and any oman Catholic service would be in addition to at number.

2044. Mr. O'Reilly.] How many persons does e Protestant chapel hold?—Eight hundred.

2045. What is the number of Protestants now the prison?—It varies from 1,500 to 1,600.

2046. It is returned here as 1,400?—The mber is constantly varying; sometimes it is re than 800.

2048. And there would also be some under nishment; how many would you set those down ?—About 30.

2049. Lord Enfield.] There is chapel for the otestants every morning, is there not?—Yes.

2050. How do you manage if it only holds 0?—Those at work on the treadmill, only end once on the week-day, and the other isoners do not attend every day.

2051. There would be great difficulty to find ditional room even if it were thought adsable?—Yes, there would, and I do not think t it would be advisable to provide accommotion for a larger number than 800.

2052. Where is mass celebrated in Coldbath elds prison?—In the old Protestant chapel, ich will hold about 500.

2053. What time on Sunday is the Roman tholic service held?—The same time as our vice, half-past nine.

2054. Mr. Guest.] I suppose that a certain mber of the warders in the prison are allowed ve on the Sunday?—Yes.

2055. And in consequence of that, I presume u would think it undesirable to have a large dy of prisoners collected on a Sunday afterion?—Yes. It always struck me that the st dangerous time is Sunday afternoon; for en we have the fewest warders we have also largest number of prisoners loose, and if there re any desire to mutiny on the part of the priners, no doubt that would be the time chosen it.

2056. If there were any extra Roman Catholic vice on the Sunday afternoon, you would, of urse, be unable to give so many warders leave now obtain it?—Of course it takes a great ny warders to supervise those prisoners, and bring them up to chapel in the ordinary way; l also it would interfere with the other regutions concerning the feeding of the prisoners, exising them, and preparing their cells for night.

2057. How many warders have you, altother, in the prison?—About 140.

2058. Those would not all be on duty at the ne time?—No; there would be some for night ty, and some on leave; about three-fourths of m would generally be on duty.

2059. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Do you end the chapel in the discharge of your duty? I attend the Protestant chapel every day.

2060. Did you ever hear any sermons preached the chapel respecting differences of creed, or they, as a rule, practical and instructive sers?—I have hardly known a case in which re has been any special reference made to ference of creed.

2061. Have you had any cases of complaints of proselytising on one side or the other?—No, I think not.

2062. Chairman.] Dr. Kirner has stated that the Protestant chaplain has sometimes sent for and spoken to Roman Catholic prisoners; do you know anything about that?—I think that there must be some mistake about that. The old rules required that the chaplains should see every prisoner; and in 1866 it was decided that they should still see every prisoner once, but that they should not speak to Roman Catholics on spiritual subjects.

2063. Was that upon their entrance to the prison?—Shortly after their entrance; on the first opportunity that he had to see them. That was the practice up to the 17th of September 1869, when an order was made by the visiting justices that the Protestant chaplains should not see the Roman Catholic prisoners at all.

2065. Who is there at the time?—The reception warder, with an assistant. He receives all the prisoners as they come in, and they remain there all that day and sleep in a special place at night. On the next morning an assistant chief warder goes into the place and asks each man what his religion is.

2066. Who is present at that time?—The officers whose duty it is to be there and all the prisoners who had come in the day before.

2067. Not the Protestant chaplain?—No, he is not there; he remains in his room, and the prisoners are brought to him as he wishes to see them.

2068. But he is not present in that reception room?—No.

2069. Mr. O'Reilly.] You state that there is daily service for the Protestant prisoners in the chapel?—There is.

2070. Would there be any difficulty, if it were thought desirable, in permitting Roman Catholic prisoners to attend a daily service?—No; the only difficulty would be in collecting the men; the more there is to do, the more officers we require.

2071. Viscount Enfield.] Are there any Roman Catholics among the warders?—I think there are only two.

2072. Mr. Dimsdale.] Has there been any application for daily service?—I think not.

2073. Chairman.] Is there anything that you would wish to state to the Committee before you leave?—There is one point that I should like to explain, and it is that relating to the rules which should guide the visiting minister. It struck me, on looking at the copy hung up in the priest's room, that it had not been corrected according to an order of 1867, which increased the number that might be assembled for instruction on week days from 10 to 25, and I made the correction with my pen about a week ago. I think that the mistake must have arisen in this way; that when we were preparing a new room for him, I forgot to have that alteration from 10 to 25 made in the copy of the rules which was to be hung up in his room. Mr. Tunstall was acquainted with the alteration, for I have seen a letter from him asking that the number might be increased from 25 to 120, but possibly Dr. Kirner was not aware of it, as the correction, unfortunately, was only made after he was examined here.

The Rev. PATRICK PHELAN, called in; and Examined.

Rev. P. Phelan. 7 April 1870.

2074. Chairman.] To what mission do you belong?—St. Mary's, Moorfields.

2075. How long have you been connected with the gaol of Newgate?—Since November.

2076 Where is your predecessor?—At Rome at present.

2077. Have you access to the prison register?—I have never asked to see it.

2078. Do you know that you have a right to see it?—I understood that my predecessors had never any access to it, so I did not apply for it.

2079. If you had thought you had a right to see it, would you now apply?—Yes.

2080. How do you know what Catholics there are in the gaol?—I am furnished with a list of the Catholic prisoners to which the fresh names are added on weekly.

2081. You have no doubt of the accuracy of that list, have you?—None.

2082. What is the average number of Catholics in the prison?—It varies very much; at one time I think there were over 20 in it; at present there are eight or ten.

2083. What class of prisoners are they?—A very bad class generally.

2084. Are they ignorant generally?—Some of them are.

2085. You would say that that is a class more than any other which requires spiritual ministration and instruction?—Yes.

2086. Do they require more time to be given to them for instruction than you can now afford them?—Yes; in fact, some weeks I cannot go there at all at present.

2087. Why cannot you go there?—I have a hospital to attend to and a large district.

2088. If you gave the Catholic prisoners as much time as you would wish to give them, and as you would think necessary, would it occupy considerable time and interfere with your other duties?—It would occupy considerable time, and would interfere with my other duties. It would be difficult to fix the time it would require to attend to them, as it would vary with the number of prisoners.

2089. You have a very large district?—Yes, I have.

2090. Is it generally a poor district?—Yes.

2091. Would the duties of your mission sufficiently occupy the entirety of your time?—Yes.

2092. What would you suggest in the interest of the Catholic prisoners of Newgate?—At present it is impossible for the priests of Moorfields to attend properly to them; their other duties are so numerous. I would, therefore, suggest, in order to have the prisoners properly attended to, that a chaplain be appointed.

2093. Or, at least, a visiting clergyman?—Yes, a visiting clergyman.

2094. Who should be paid fairly for his services?—Yes.

2095. At any rate, the duty is almost left undone at present?—Yes.

2096. What time do you give now to the prison?—Sometimes I may give two hours in the week, and sometimes not as much.

2097. But you state that there is great necessity for religious instruction from the Roman Catholic clergyman?—Yes, great necessity, as sometimes I find prisoners there who have never been instructed, or if they have ever been instructed, they have never attended to their religion in any form.

2098. Have you permission to assemble prisoners together, and give them general instruction?—No.

2099. Would that be useful to you?—At present, it would be most useful, for, as I am situated at present, if I could assemble the Catholic prisoners, it would be more beneficial both to them and to me as I could give them instruction altogether.

2100. What you would say to one you would say to all?—Yes.

2101. Is there any Catholic service at all in Newgate?—None whatever.

2102. Have any of your predecessors applied for it?—I am not aware that they have.

2103. Have you applied for it yourself?—No.

2104. Have you applied for permission to gather them together?—I have not applied for that permission.

2105. You do not know, supposing you made such application, whether it would be conceded?—Such application was made by a priest some years back.

2106. And what was the result of that application?—He obtained his application once.

2107. What is the reason why you yourself have not made that application?—I have not made the application, (1st.) because I thought it would be useless to do so; and (2nd.) because my connection with the prison is only a temporary one.

2108. In fact, you could not give your time to it?—I could not give my time to it.

2109. Your time is so much occupied with your ordinary duties that you could not give the necessary time?—I could not give it.

2110. Would it not be well to make that application so that you might see the prisoners altogether?—If I thought I should succeed I would make it. It would be a very great advantage, as want of time prevents me, under the present system, from performing many duties for the prisoners which I should otherwise perform.

2111. You have no complaint to make against the authorities of the prison?—None, whatever.

2112. They have been always courteous and kind to you, have they not?—They have.

2113. And you have applied for no remuneration?—None.

2114. But you could not devote your time to the prison in justice to your other duties, unless you were remunerated fairly?—Even supposing the authorities gave me remuneration for my duties at the prison, I could not at present give my time to it.

2115. Could not some other person be found who would give the time?—Yes.

2116. Would there be any difficulty about that?—None whatever.

2117. But you would think it absolutely necessary that there should be some person to give instruction to that class of prisoners?—Yes.

2118. And if there were a fair ordinary remuneration paid, you state that a person would be found to discharge the duty?—Yes.

2119. If a prisoner happens to be under sentence of death, of course the duty of the Catholic clergyman is very laborious?—Very much so.

2120. What time would you think necessary

now for the fair instruction of those people?—That would of course depend upon the number of the prisoners that were to be attended to.

2121. I think you stated that there were 20 at one time?—Yes, that would have been either the end of last December or the beginning of January.

2122. If you were relieved from your parish work, would you celebrate divine service to them on Sunday?—Yes.

2123. And also would you have morning and evening prayer?—Yes.

2124. Have you anything further you would wish to state to the Committee?—I have not.

2125. Viscount Enfield.] You are only doing the duty at the prison temporarily, until your predecessor returns from the Continent?—That is all.

2126. Mr. Guest.] There never have been, to our knowledge, over 20 Roman Catholic prisoners confined in Newgate?—Not more than that.

2127. You state that at present you cannot devote sufficient time to the prison, as you are bound to devote time to your other duties?—That is so.

2128. But you are of opinion that if a Catholic priest was paid to attend the Newgate Prison, he would be able to devote his time to the prison?—Yes, he would be able to devote as much time as would be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the prison.

2129. But do you think that the remuneration that he would expect for those duties would support him?—No, it would not; but then he would have some other duties to perform; perhaps, light duties.

2130. I presume it would be most likely that in case of any remuneration being given for so small a number of prisoners, some one connected with the district would apply for the appointment?—The appointment would depend upon the superior.

Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.	Mr. Synan.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., in the Chair.

The Rev. Cornelius James Keens, called in; and Examined.

Rev. C. J. Keens. 28 April 1870.

2131. Chairman.] What prison do you attend?—The City Prison at Holloway.

2132. When did you first attend that prison?—I believe it was at the commencement of November 1868.

2133. How many times a week do you attend that prison?—I visit the prison two afternoons a week for about an hour and a half each time.

2134. Do you know what was the number of the Catholic prisoners in Holloway given by the last return, on the 20th of July 1869?—The total number was 56.

2135. Were those divided as follows, 41 men and 15 women?—I think it is so. I have no means of knowing whether this return is correct, as I have no access to the Creed Register.

2136. Do you see the prisoners singly?—I see them singly.

2137. Are you allowed to see them in any other manner?—No, I am not.

2138. Do you see all the Catholic prisoners in that prison?—I am sure I do not.

2139. Why do you say that?—Because I am only furnished with a list of such prisoners as, on entering, have declared their positive wish to see me.

2140. Is there no list given to you of the Catholic prisoners?—When I first went there no list was furnished me; but I applied later on, and succeeded in getting a list furnished me, which I applied for by letter.

2141. What was the date of that letter?—The date of the letter was 9th of February 1869.

2142. To whom is that letter addressed?—To the governor of the City Prison.

2143. Will you read it?—"Cornwall-place, Holloway, N., 9th February 1869.—Dear Sir,—I find that by Article the 4th of the Act, known as 'An Act for the Amendment of the Law relating to Religious Instruction of Prisoners in County and Borough Prisons in England and Scotland' (28th July 1863, Anno Vicesimo Sexto and Vicesimo Septimo, Victoria Reginæ), 'the keeper or other person performing the duties of keeper of a prison, on receiving into his custody any prisoner, shall enter his name in a book to be provided for the purpose, with the addition of the Church or religious persuasion to which the prisoner shall declare himself to belong, and the said keeper or other person shall from time to time give to any minister appointed or permitted to visit prisoners in the prison, a list of the prisoners so declared to belong to the Church or persuasion of such minister.' You will oblige me much, in accordance with the above Act, by furnishing me from time to time with a list of the prisoners declared as Roman Catholics in the entry book quoted above. I should be grateful if the said list could be provided for me on my visit to the prison next Monday.—Believe me ever, in Xt., yours very respectfully, C. J. Keens." 2144. You had been visiting the prison from November previously, had you not?—Yes, from November 1868.

2145. What was the answer to that letter?—The reply was as follows: "City Prison, Holloway, 10th February 1869.—Rev. Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of yours of yesterday.—Yours respectfully, J. Weatherhead." 2146. Did you consider that answer satisfactory?—I did not; but on the following Monday I made my application for a list of the Catholic prisoners.

2147. To whom did you make that application?—To the chief warder.

2148. What was the result?—He gave me a list of the Catholic prisoners, and I asked him to answer me distinctly, whether that list embodied all the Catholic prisoners in the City gaol; he distinctly told me it did not, and he showed me an Act of Parliament, which he seemed to act upon, whereby prisoners had the option of refusing to see the Catholic priest.

2149. You thought you had a right to a list of all those who had registered themselves as Catholics?—Yes, I thought so from this Act of Parliament.

2150. You only received a list of those who expressed a wish to see the Catholic clergyman?—That was so.

2151. Did you take any further action in reference to that matter?—I made no further application after that.

2152. Were you satisfied with the limited number of your visits to the prisoners?—I was not at all satisfied with it.

2153. Did you make any application to have additional powers of visiting given to you?—I did.

2154. When did you make that application?—I made that application on 3rd December 1868.

2155. That was shortly after you came to the prison?—It was shortly after I entered the prison as the visiting priest. I wrote a letter then to the he governor of the prison; this is a copy of it producing the same).

2156. Will you read that letter?—"19, Corn-all-place, Holloway N.—Dear Sir,—Having as-certained, on the best authority, that in the Go-ernment prisons complete liberty of religion is llowed to Roman Catholic prisoners, and that the oman Catholic chaplain is permitted to stand in recisely the same relation towards them that the rotestant chaplain stands towards the Protestant risoners, I desire with all respect to make the ollowing requests with regard to my ministra-ions in the City Prison, Upper Holloway. 1st. ccess to the Creed Register. 2nd. Power of iving evidence with regard to the religion of uch prisoners as, being actually registered as rotestants, desire to be entered as Roman Ca-holics. 3. Power of assembling for Divine ser-ice in the morning and evening on Sundays and olidays. 4. Free access to the cells of all those ho are registered as Roman Catholics.—Wait-ng your kind reply, believe me, in Christ, yours ery respectfully, C. J. Keens.—3rd December 868." This is addressed to the governor of the ity Prison. I waited some considerable time r a reply, and not having received one, I wrote n Christmas Day to this effect: "Christmas Day, 868.—Dear Sir,—I shall feel obliged by an nswer to my letter of 3rd December, making ertain requests with regard to my ministrations the City Prison, Upper Holloway.—Believe e ever, in Christ, yours very respectfully, . J. Keens.—To the Governor of the City Pri-on." I then received a reply from the City rison, dated the 1st January 1869. "Rev. Sir, —Your letter of the 25th December 1868 is to and, and in reply I respectfully beg leave to nform you that your letter of requests is at pre-ent under the consideration of the magistrates. When they have decided, which I think will be t their next meeting, I will inform you of the esult.—I remain, Rev. Sir, yours very respect-ully, J. Weatherhead, Governor." Later on received an official acknowledgment from Guild-all, dated the 6th January 1869: "Sir,—I am irected by the Gaol Committee of Aldermen to nform you that your letter to the governor of he City Prison, Holloway, relative to your minis-ration in that prison, has been laid before them, nd is now under their consideration.—I remain, ir, your obedient servant, F. Woodthorpe."

2157. Did you do anything in consequence of ceiving that answer?—I was simply waiting for reply to my letter which had been acknow-dged by the governor and by the clerk at uildhall; and I have waited some considerable ne.

2158. What time have you waited?—I have aited to the present day. I have never received y official reply; my letter to the governor was ted the 3rd December 1868; the official reply n Guildhall was dated the 6th of January 69, acknowledging the receipt of my letter, and e fact of its being placed before the Aldermen their consideration.

2159. During the month of January you wrote other letter?—No other letter.

2160. Those were the only letters you ad-essed to the authorities in reference to the son?—I wrote another letter which came later course of time.

2161. During the month of January you wrote other letter?—None.

2162. I should imagine that your intention was to address these authorities as respectfully as you could and with every regard for your own position as a gentleman?—Exactly.

2163. There was nothing in your letter but what was studiously polite?—Nothing whatever.

2164. Did you make any further application for permission to assemble the prisoners either on week days or to have Divine service on Sunday?—No; I was simply waiting for an answer to my letter, and I found my reply in the public journals where I was stigmatised, I must say, in the most unkind and ungentlemanly manner in reference to my application.

2165. In what journal did you see that?—In the "City Press," and the report was also criticised by the "Pall Mall Gazette" and other papers which represent, I believe, public opinion; they criticised the language made use of by certain aldermen in reference to my letter.

2166. Did you ever see that language denied or repudiated?—No, never.

2167. Did you see it yourself in the newspapers?—Yes; I saw it myself in the "City Press."

2168. When did you see it?—I saw it recently and when it first came out.

2169. Mr. Synan.] When did you first see it?—My attention was called to it about a month after I wrote the letter.

2170. Chairman.] Did you ever receive any further answer in reference to that application of yours beyond the official one dated the 6th of January?—Never.

2171. Did you renew your application?—I did not, as I thought it was of no use, from what I saw in the newspapers.

2172. Therefore, on that matter the correspondence was closed?—It was closed.

2173. Will you state to the Committee the reasons which induced you to make no further application?—I found, first of all, that Mr. Alderman Wilson, when my letter was read on Tuesday, January 19th 1869, before the Court of Aldermen assembled under the presidency of the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, had stated, or is represented in the "City Press" as having stated, that my application was inopportune, that I was premature in making my application; because he said I made it as the Roman Catholic chaplain of the City Gaol, when they had no Roman Catholic chaplain at the City Gaol. I am not aware that in my letter to the governor I stated that I was the Roman Catholic chaplain; I merely signed myself as an ordinary priest. Alderman Wilson brought it against me that I had assumed a title I had no right to, and that I was therefore premature in writing my letter.

2174. Was it in the newspapers that you saw that report?—Yes, in the newspapers. I find also that he objected altogether to my having access to the Creed Register, and he said moreover that I came to the prison about a month ago, but how I got there they, the aldermen, did not know; whether I was sent by the Pope or by Dr. Manning, or by whom, they did not know.

Rev. C. J. Keens. — 28 April 1870.

kindly by the governor, and I must say that I have nothing to complain of in the way of treatment at his hands. Mr. Alderman Wilson, moreover, stated that when a Protestant chaplain was appointed, the appointment was made from first-rate men, but here was a man whom they did not know, who asked to see the prisoners in private, and to see the women alone, and to ask them questions with no one present to hear what he said. I hope Mr. Alderman Wilson will satisfy the Honourable Committee as to what he meant with reference to my ministrations at the City Gaol. He moreover spoke of my archbishop as a Romish archbishop, which we know is an offensive term. He alluded to me in a very unpleasant manner; he said, "The writer of this letter might be a man of no education, or he might be a mischievous man."

2176. From the observations attributed to the aldermen in the report of their meeting, you were discouraged from making any further application?—Altogether discouraged.

2177. You have had no Catholic service on Sunday in the prison, I believe?—No Catholic service whatever.

2178. Is there a Protestant service?—Yes.

2179. Is it once or twice on Sundays?—Twice on Sundays.

2180. Do you know whether any Catholic prisoners were in the habit of attending that service?—Some of them attend the service.

2181. Were you ever asked permission by the Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service on Sunday?—Yes; they asked my permission to do so in order to break the long silence, or the confinement of their cells.

2182. Did you give permission, or did you refuse to allow them to attend?—I always refused my permission. I could not conscientiously allow them to do so.

2184. Is it not the fact that some do really attend the Protestant service?—They do really attend, for the reasons I have given.

2186. Are the doors of the cells of the Catholic prisoners opened previously to divine service on the Sunday?—Every morning for prayers, and on Sundays twice. The doors are thrown open by the warders with the announcement, "Chapel," and this is a pressure put upon them, because they have to profess their faith over and over again (nearly every day, and twice on Sundays) to those who open the doors.

2187. Have you made any application with reference to that?—No; I thought it was no use, after the shocking report I saw in the "City Press" of the way in which my letter was received.

2188. With reference to books, do you supply the Catholic prisoners with books, or are they supplied by the authorities?—I had to supply the Catholic prisoners with books; but finding it was a great burthen upon me, as my people are extremely poor (the poorest of the poor), I applied to the aldermen for some contribution towards the purchase of books, by a letter dated the 28th September 1869, which is as follows: "The Rev. C. J. Keens presents his respectful compliments to the chairman of the committee of visiting justices of the City Prison, Upper Holloway, and begs leave to state that hitherto the onus of providing the Roman Catholic prisoners of the City Prison with books of instruction and devotion (with the exception of a few prayer books, already provided at the expense of the prison, and which are insufficient for the wants of the prisoners) has devolved upon the visiting priest. The Rev. C. J. Keens would, therefore, esteem it a favour if the visiting justices would make some allowance for the purchase of books, under any condition they might think it right to propose."

2189. Did you get an answer to that letter?—I got a reply to this effect: "Guildhall, 11th October 1869.—Sir, I am directed by the gaol committee of aldermen to inform you that your letter of the 28th of September last has been laid before them, and has received their best consideration, and I am to inform you that a supply of books is provided for the use of all the prisoners at the City Prison, Holloway; but that the committee consider you are at liberty to exclude such books from the use of the Roman Catholic prisoners as you may think fit."

2190. Then your application for Catholic books was practically rejected?—It was.

2191. Will you give the Committee some information with reference to the books that were given to the prisoners generally, including the Catholic prisoners?—All the Catholics are provided with Protestant books, many of which are very much opposed to their faith, which I, as their visiting priest, could not allow them, in conscience, to read.

2192. Will you give the Committee an idea of those books?—One is a "History of the Spanish Inquisition;" "The Lives of the Popes;" "The Great Apostacy;" "The History of Columbus," and the "Sunday at Home."

2193. Those books are impressed with a strong anti-Catholic spirit, are they not?—They all contain matters pointedly depreciating their faith.

2194. Those books, in your opinion, were not such as ought to be given to the Catholic prisoners?—I could not conscientiously allow them to read such books.

2195. Were those books read by the Catholic prisoners?—They were read by them, but of course they brought them to me to show me those little points, and I said, "You cannot read these books."

2196. Do you know whether they were read by any number of them?—The majority of the prisoners certainly would not read them; but some, from the want of other books, and out of curiosity, would read them.

2197. I suppose, to relieve the irksomeness of confinement, they would be glad to get any books to read?—They would be glad to get any change.

2198. You do not, of course, think it a fair thing to take advantage of the helplessness of prisone isoner to put books offensive to his religion into s hands?—The prisoners have complained to over and over again of it, and it was owing the hardship I felt they were under that I ade the application to the aldermen which I ve mentioned.

2199. Did you repeat that application?—I did t.

2200. Did you take any further steps with ference to this point?—I thought it was best use my influence alone with the prisoners, as thought with the officials I should have very le chance of doing any good.

2201. If you were allowed to assemble the isoners together on week days, and to have vice on Sundays, are you of opinion that the sult would be beneficial to the prisoners?—I quite sure it would, from the effects produced, en under present circumstances, upon them. mbers have been round to see me when they ve left the prison, to thank me for my minis- tions.

2202. Holloway is a house of correction, is it t?—It is.

2203. Convicted prisoners only go there?— s, only convicted prisoners; it is not a house detention.

2204. If I mistake not, the sentences are often- nes very light, the offences being rather vial?—They are generally. The longest time for two years; and many are there only for ee days, seven days, or a fortnight.

2205. Considering that a prisoner who would punished by three days or a week, or a fort- ht's imprisonment, would not be a hardened ender, do you not think that that is the very rson upon whom the ministrations of the priest uld have the most effect?—I think it is im- rtant that the priest should be brought into ntact with those persons. They are very often ought there for the first time, and are incipient eves. I think that if the influence of the rgy could be brought to bear upon them at t moment, they might often be saved effec- lly.

2206. Your congregation is a very poor one, t not?—Very poor indeed.

2207. Still, if you were permitted by the au- rities to visit the prison more frequently, or have service on Sundays, you would endeavour have it?—I should certainly have made use of influence to get an assistant priest appointed.

2208. You yourself, or your spiritual superior uld have made an exertion at any sacrifice, to vide adequate spiritual teaching for those ople?—Exactly; we most certainly should.

2209. And, as you say, you having failed in ir attempts to procure this privilege for them, re discouraged from any further efforts in that ection?—From any further efforts in that ection.

2210. Is there any statement that you wish to ke to the Committee following up anything I e asked you?—I wish merely to say that the ole tone of the prison is opposed altogether to thing like the practical carrying out of his h by a Roman Catholic prisoner; he cannot sibly do it; all the pressure is the other way. nen he enters he is asked if he will attend the pel, and though he is registered as a Catholic, ry morning, and twice on the Sunday, the doors are opened with the announcement hapel." He is brought in contact with the plain when he enters, and he is brought in tact with the chaplain once a fortnight; and he is also brought in contact with the chaplain when he goes out; all possible contact is promoted between him and the services of the Protestant religion. The Catholic religion is quite cut off from him unless he takes the initiative and struggles against all the opposition around him.

2211. Sir John Pakington.] How long have you been in attendance as a Roman Catholic priest on the prisoners in Holloway Prison?—Since the beginning of November 1868.

2212. Then the applications which you have informed the Committee you made in December 1868, were made very shortly after the commencement of your connection with the prison?—Yes.

2214. Is each prisoner, male and female, in a separate cell?—In a separate cell; the prisoners may work together at certain duties during the day, but it is really the separate system which is in operation.

2215. If I understand your statement rightly, you wrote twice to the governor in the month of December 1868, was that so?—I wrote to him twice in the month of December 1868.

2216. Will you tell the Committee once more what were the specific indulgences for which you asked in that letter of December 1868?—They were four; first, access to the Creed Register.

2217. That, I presume, was to enable you to feel satisfied with reference to the real number of Roman Catholics in the prison?—It was.

2218. What was the second?—The power of giving evidence with regard to the religion of such prisoners as being actually registered as Protestants, desired to be entered as Roman Catholics.

2219. What do you mean by "giving evidence?"—It often happens, or it may happen, that a man in a discontented mood, on entering the prison, may say that he is a Protestant, and may be sorry for it afterwards, he being in reality a Catholic; and he may wish, after mature thought, to see his priest. If I had access to the Creed Register, I should be able then to have that corrected.

2220. How would inspection of the Creed Register have guided you with regard to knowing whether anyone who was entered as a Protestant in that register was a Roman Catholic?—I should know, in all probability, by the name.

2221. The name would guide you?—The name would generally be a very clear index.

2222. I presume that your real meaning in writing that letter was, rather that you should be at liberty to receive evidence than to give it in those cases?—To receive and to give evidence. It struck me as being a very important thing, that men entering the prison for their real amendment should not be allowed to take advantage of a falsehood. I had before me the case of a Protestant who was brought to me as a Roman Catholic, and I represented the fact to the chief, that such a man was not a Catholic, and knew nothing about the Catholic religion; and of course upon that representation he did not come to me again.

2223. Have you any reason to suspect that there are many prisoners entered as Protestants who are really Roman Catholics?—I have no reason at all for suspecting it, beyond this, I know that the case does occur, and has occurred in the Government prisons.

2224. What was your third point?—The third point was the power of assembling the prisoners for Divine Service in the morning and evening on Sundays and holidays.

2225. That, I presume, is a request to which you would attach very great importance?—The greatest importance.

2226. Much more so than to either of the previous questions?—Yes.

2227. I understand that you, from that day to the present, have never received any answer to that request?—None whatever.

2228. Although you have never received any answer to that request, has any concession in that respect been made to you; have you ever been allowed to collect the Roman Catholic prisoners for Divine worship?—Never.

2229. Now, take your fourth request, what was that?—For access to the cells of all those who are registered as Roman Catholics.

2230. Was that practically refused?—It was.

2231. You have visited some of the prisoners in their cells, have you not?—I have.

2232. Then what guided you with regard to those that you did visit, or those that you did not?—If they had made a special request to see me on entering, and they happened to be sick, then I was taken to see them when I visited the prison.

2233. Only when they were sick?—Only when they were sick.

2234. Do you mean that you, as a Roman Catholic priest, were never allowed to see a Roman Catholic prisoner in his cell unless he was sick?—I do not remember any other case.

2235. Do you mean to tell the Committee that you do not see any Roman Catholic prisoners at all, except they were sick?—Except they are sick, or in the infirmary; sometimes they are sick in their cells, or they might be in the infirmary, and then I should see them there, of course; and the others that I saw would be in a room provided for that purpose, when they come in one by one; but I never visited them in their cells.

2236. You were allowed to extend your spiritual ministrations to healthy men as well as to sick ones, were you not; or do you mean that you were only as a priest allowed to see sick prisoners?—I am allowed to see the healthy prisoners as well; but you asked me about seeing them in their cells.

2237. I thought you saw the other prisoners in their cells?—No; a room is provided in which I see them as they come in one by one.

2238. A room is provided for that purpose?—Yes.

2239. In that room do you see all the Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison?—No.

2240. Why not?—I only see those who have made a specific request to see me.

2241. No Roman Catholic prisoner was allowed to see you, or you to see him, unless he had asked permission to do so?—That was so.

2242. What proportion of the whole did you see in that way?—When I first went there, there were not more than about 12 or 13; now, from the fact of its being known in the prison that I go there, the Catholics apply to see me, and the number this week amounted to, I think, nearly 45.

2243. When you speak of only having seen 12 I understand you to mean not that that was the limit of the number in the prison, but the limit of the number of those who applied to see you?—That was so.

2244. I see in the last Return of July 1869 that there were 56 Catholics in the prison?—I saw about 32 or 34 out of that number.

2245. Do you see them all now?—I saw this week about 45 or 43.

2246. Men and women?—The majority were men, and there were about three or four women.

2247. Then, from not being allowed to see the creed register, you are still ignorant of the actual number of Roman Catholics in the prison?—I am quite in the dark as to that.

2248. Up to this time you never received an answer to your application with reference to Divine Service?—I received no reply whatever.

2249. Have you been prohibited from seeing more than one at a time in that room?—No, I have not been prohibited, but I thought it would be better under present circumstances to see them one by one.

2250. If I understand your last answer correctly, you do not know whether you might not have seen a number together if you had asked to do so?—I daresay I might.

2251. How many at a time would that room accommodate?—I do not suppose more than 12 could be there conveniently without the place being very offensive, but under the circumstances, I preferred to see them one at a time, my work is very great, and I can only spare about an hour and a-half on two afternoons in a week, and I find that it is more beneficial to the men under the circumstances, that I should see them one at a time.

2252. But if you had seen them 12 at a time you would have been able to see more prisoners during the time allotted to you?—But I could not hear their confessions; I must see them one at a time to hear their confessions. I have to prepare them for the Sacrament, and I could not do that if I saw them all together; and I could not spare more time from my mission under the circumstances.

2253. You stated to the Committee that every Roman Catholic prisoner on entering the prison when he gives his name as a Roman Catholic, is asked, according to the practice of the prison, whether he would desire to attend the Protestant worship?—Yes.

2254. You spoke of that as a pressure; what extent do you think that that amounts to pressure?—In respect of the question being asked by an official of the prison. The prisoners are always anxious to conciliate the officials as far as they can, and very often they think, perhaps, that by saying yes, they will be better treated. I do not say that there is any ground for their reasoning in this way, but that is, I believe, in many cases the reason why they do so.

2255. Are you aware whether a Roman Catholic prisoner, when he is asked if he would like to attend the Protestant chapel, is also asked if he would desire to see the Roman Catholic priest?—Generally so.

2256. He is asked both questions, is he not?—Both questions.

2257. Do you think that that amounts to pressure in the direction of going to the Protest-

Rev. C. J. Keens. 28 April 1870.

estant chapel; does not it give him a fair ption?—I say that he knows quite well that he more likely to conciliate the officials by con-enting to go to chapel, than by saying that he ill see the Catholic priest.

2258. Why do you suppose he would conciliate nybody by consenting to go to the Protestant hapel?—He would think so knowing that the hole discipline of the place is not Catholic.

2259. Do you know how many Roman Catholic risoners did avail themselves of the powers to go the Protestant worship?—I do not know, but I ust say that many of them, when they heard iat it was opposed to my wish, refused to go; id they had to go before the governor to give eir reasons why they did not wish to go to apel.

2260. You stated in answer to a question put the Honourable Chairman, that the Roman atholic prisoners were brought into contact with e Protestant chaplain once a fortnight; under hat circumstances does that occur?—Every eek the chaplain visits a portion of the prison, e left wing or the right wing, or whichever it ay be, and all the prisoners Catholic and Pro-stant await the coming of the chaplain at the or of their cells. He passes down and speaks every one of them, and thus they are brought contact with him; if they wish to speak to him ey can, and he can speak to them, and does so, d this is a pressure which I think ought not to put upon them.

2261. Do you know to what extent the Pro-tant chaplain on those occasions carries the nversation; does he enter into conversation on igious subjects with the Roman Catholic pri-ners?—I cannot say exactly, although I must this, that there are, I think, instances of pri-ners being influenced by being thus brought in tact with the chaplain and attending his ser-es.

2262. Your last answer is not very definite in form; you say there are, you think, instances prisoners being so influenced; upon what do u found that opinon; is it within your know-ge that anything of the sort has occurred?—s.

2263. Will you name the cases?—C 1,119, ederick Peter Desprez, entered the prison on 21st of December 1868. He was registered a Roman Catholic. The morning after he ered, the cell door was opened with the an-ncement, "Chapel." On attending chapel hearing a sermon from the chaplain, and nking there was no hope of his ever seeing a tholic priest, he continued to receive the reli-us ministrations of the chaplain. This went till the beginning of Lent 1869, when he was ted by a warder, who asked him then if he uld like to see the Catholic priest. He dis-tly stated, in the presence of a warder, that to that time he never knew of my visiting the son, and he refused on that occasion to see me, he told me from shame, having committed self to the religious ministrations of the plain. The chaplain, at the end of last year, ached a sermon, the nature of which was to ite them all to take the Sacrament, and this poor n was moved by the sermon to take the Sacra-nt, and being a Catholic and a Frenchman he w no other way of preparing for it than by ng to confession. He stated to the chaplain scruples, and that he wanted to go to con-sion, and the chaplain heard him; but still the n was not satisfied, at least he told the chap-).60.

lain that he was not satisfied, and that he was very uneasy in his conscience, and asked him what he would advise him to do. The chaplain advised him to remain as he was until he left the prison, and gave him as a rule, "When you are in Rome do as they do in Rome." But this did not satisfy the man's conscience, and this week he applied to the governor for permission to see me.

2264. You say he was a Frenchman, did he understand English?—Perfectly.

2265. He came to the prison in December 1868?—Yes, the 31st December 1868.

2266. And he is there now?—He is there now.

2267. Under long sentence, evidently?—I think 18 months.

2268. Did I understand you to state that he was induced to attend the Protestant worship by anything that the chaplain said to him at the cell door when he visited the wards in the morning?—I do not think that was the cause of it, but I think it was the general system of contact with Protestant influence.

2269. Am I at all misrepresenting a statement you have made, when I conclude that this was one of those cases which you have already described to the Committee, where the option was given to the Roman Catholic prisoner of attending the Protestant worship if he liked, and in which he availed himself of that permission?—In this case I do not think he knew that there was any other course open to him than that of going to the Protestant service.

2270. But you have just told the Committee that, on entering the prison, he would, by the rules of the prison, be told that he might go to the Protestant chaplain, or to the Roman Catholic priest, whichever he chose?—Generally speaking, that is the case.

2271. Have you any reason to suppose that the custom of the prison was broken through in that particular instance?—I think he may not have heard the warder, for he distinctly declares to me, in the presence of the chief warder, that he has no recollection of hearing anything with regard to the existence of a priest attending the prison.

2272. He had no recollection of having been told that he might see the Roman Catholic priest if he liked?—None whatever.

2273. But I do not understand that your statement amounts to anything like an attempt at proselytising on the part of the Protestant chaplain?—Only in this way, that the contact with all that was not Catholic induced the man to do what he did against his conscience.

2274. But usually, on the fortnightly visit, as I may call it, when the Protestant chaplain passes up the wards, as far as you know, does any conversation of a proselytising nature take place between the chaplain and the Roman Catholic prisoner?—I do not think so.

2275. And for the most part, I presume, from what you have told us, the Protestant chaplain has very little conversation at all with the prisoners; he sees them, and passes on?—He sees the prisoners, and then passes on.

2276. Does he usually converse with them?—He may if he likes, but I do not know that he does so upon religious matters.

2277. You are still ministering in that prison, are you not?—I am still there.

2278. It is stated in this Return, and I think you stated so too, that you go to the prison twice a week?—Twice a week.

Rev. C. J. Keens. 28 April 1870.

2279. Are you restricted by the rules of the prison from going oftener, or do you find that enough for your duties?—I could not spare more time to the prison.

2280. Is it desirable, for the sake of the prisoners, that you should go oftener if you could? I think so.

2281. You have never, since last December twelvemonth, renewed your application for permission to have Divine service every Sunday?—I thought it was hopeless after what I saw in the public papers.

2282. Did I understand you to state that, at the hour of Divine service, the doors of all the cells are opened?—If a warder knew that a certain cell was tenanted by a Catholic, then he might pass it over; but that is merely accidental.

2283. Then, when he knows that the man is a Catholic, and not in the habit of attending the Protestant worship, the door is not opened?—Not generally.

2284. And, I presume, if the door is opened, the prisoner does not intend to attend the service, or is a Catholic, he closes it?—The prisoner closes it.

2285. Is it your opinion that the alternative of either going to the Protestant service or staying in his cell acts as an inducement to a prisoner?—A very great inducement, particularly in the winter.

2286. But you do not know how many of the Roman Catholic prisoners attend the Protestant service?—I do not know that.

2287. Have you ever applied for any remuneration for your services as a Roman Catholic minister?—Never.

2288. Is it within your knowledge that your predecessors ever applied?—I do not think they ever did.

2289. The statement which you referred to in the newspapers, with regard to what passed in the Court of Aldermen, was as long ago as January 1869?—Yes.

2290. And from that time the whole question of the status and proceedings of the Roman Catholic chaplain at Holloway have been in abeyance and have remained as they were?—Exactly so.

2291. And you have made no fresh application?—No fresh application.

2292. Mr. Synan.] How many is your congregation composed of?—About 3,000.

2293. Do you think that your necessary attendance upon your congregation affords you sufficient time to devote to the 56 prisoners as well?—I am quite sure it does not.

2294. I suppose a sufficient service would be provided for those prisoners, if an opportunity were given by the prison authorities?—Yes, immediately.

2295. And I presume the prison authorities would also have a power of selection among the Roman Catholic ministers, who would attend this prison?—A power of approbation.

2296. If they objected to one candidate, they could have another and another submitted to them until they were satisfied?—Certainly.

2297. What is the character and class, moral and intellectual, of those 56 prisoners; is it a high or a low standard?—They are generally poor people in prison for trivial faults, blocking the way in the City in selling fruit, and so on.

2298. I am talking of their condition, intellectually and morally?—They are a poor class, and generally uneducated.

2299. You spoke of their getting such a book to read as the "History of the Inquisition"; do you know who is the author of that book?—I do not know; I think most of the books are published by the Tract Society.

2300. Have you read it?—I have not, but I have seen it; some of the prisoners brought me down their books, and I saw observations in some of them which I considered objectionable.

2301. In fact, they were indirect attacks upon the Roman Catholic Church?—That is so.

2302. And was the intellectual standard of those 56 prisoners of such a high character that they could be able to separate the poison of that book from what was really historical in it?—I should certainly say they were not capable of distinguishing the historical merits of the book.

2303. Do you think it was a fair book for the prison authorities to put into their hands?—Certainly not.

2304. The prison authorities confined your selection of books for your people to such books as "The History of the Inquisition," "The Sunday at Home," and "The Great Apostacy"?—Yes.

2305. The last-mentioned book is another in direct attack, is it not, upon the Roman Catholic Church?—Certainly it is.

2306. Then, "The Lives of the Popes;" is that confined to certain individual popes, or does it extend over the whole of them?—I could not answer that question.

2307. You applied for liberty to get moral and religious books for your people, and you were refused that permission?—It was refused.

2308. An Honourable Member asked you a question about proselytism, and about throwing open the doors of the cells, and the Protestant chaplain addressing himself to the prisoners; I presume you do not mean to charge him with direct proselytism?—No.

2309. But may not there be an indirect proselytism?—There is the general influence produced by contact.

2310. Do you think that may lead to proselytism?—Yes.

2311. Do you think that the refusal to have Catholic service in the prison, and the solicitation arising from throwing open the doors to the prisoners, to attend the Protestant service, and the refusal to give Catholic books, either of a moral or religious character, and giving a selection merely from a few Protestant books of a certain class, does indirectly lead to proselytism?—Yes, certainly.

2312. Supposing the prison was Catholic, and supposing the Catholic governor acted in the same way towards the Protestant prisoners, what would be your opinion, as chaplain, of the prison authorities?—That we should never hear the last of it.

2313. With reference to the option afforded the prisoners, my honourable friend asked you whether the Catholic prisoners had not the option of going to chapel on the Sunday; have they an option to go anywhere else?—They cannot go anywhere else.

2314. They must otherwise remain in their private cells?—Yes, they must.

2315. Then, in fact, it is no option at all?—None whatever; they must either go to the Protestant service or remain in the cells.

2316. Are the cells cold?—Very cold in the winter. The prisoners have begged and prayed of me in the winter to allow them to go to the Protestant service for the sake of the warmth.

2317. Are you of opinion that 56 prisoners would require almost the whole of the time of a minister of their own religion?—I am quite sure there is ample work for any Catholic priest in that prison, and for this reason, the cases are short cases, and, although the actual number of prisoners may be small, still they are always going out and coming in; so that the aggregate of the year may amount to several hundred prisoners, so much so that during the last twelvemonth I must have seen about 230 different prisoners. As the sentences are very short sentences, it requires for that simple reason that all the efforts of the priest should be brought to play upon those persons, these being, for the most part, their first offences, in order that they might be cured by a little diligence and attention.

2318. Your congregation of 3,000 is very poor, I presume?—Very poor.

2319. You are supported by their voluntary contributions, are you not?—By their voluntary contributions.

2320. Consequently, if you got a fellow labourer in your vineyard, they would not be able to support you both?—They certainly could not.

2321. It would be absolutely necessary for the support of this priest who was allotted to the prison, that the governor or some other authority should pay for his services?—Certainly.

2322. Sir John Pakington.] With reference to that prisoner whose case you mentioned, and who is still in the prison, how has he been classed latterly; has he been classed as a Catholic or a Protestant?—He has always been registered as a Catholic.

2323. Has he been under your spiritual care?—Not till this week.

2324. You mean, he has continued to attend the Protestant worship until this week?—Yes, against his conscience.

2325. How do you know it was against his conscience?—Because he told me so.

2326. Why did he go to the Protestant chaplain?—Because he did not know, until Lent 1869, that he had any other opportunity of obtaining religious instruction.

2327. That is a good while ago?—Yes; but having committed himself, as he says, to the Protestant clergyman up to that time, he felt ashamed to see me; and his conscience had been uneasy ever since, until he summoned up courage to speak to the chaplain about it; and the chaplain advised him to remain as he was till he got out; but he said that he could not rest, and he applied to the governor that he might see me.

2328. When did he apply to the chaplain and have this conversation with him?—I think it was this week.

2329. In fact, the feeling of shame to which you refer has induced him to continue this long time with an uneasy conscience?—Yes.

2330. Mr. Fowler.] Who appointed you?—I was appointed by the Archbishop of Westminster to the mission of Holloway, and the prison being within the parish it fell under my cure.

2331. What course did you take?—I called upon the governor, and stated that I had been appointed to the mission, and wanted to know what facilities there were for my attending to the Catholic prisoners. He received me very kindly, and in the course of a few days I was shown round the prison by the chief warder. I have nothing to complain of with reference to the attention shown me by the officers.

2332. It was the same with regard to your predecessor, as far as you know?—I believe he had nothing to complain of as far as regarded the kindness and courtesy of the officials of the prison.

2333. I presume the system is that a man is asked what religion he belongs to when he enters the prison?—Yes.

2334. And your complaint is that men are frequently induced by the idea that the officials are Protestants, to register themselves as Protestants when they are really Roman Catholics?—It may happen so.

2335. I presume the officials of the prison are not necessarily Protestants?—Not necessarily; there are, I believe, a few Catholics.

2336. I believe you stated that you had made no application to the authorities; to whom would that application be made; would it be made to the Corporation of London?—In the first instance I wrote to the governor, and my letter was forwarded to them.

2337. Your congregation, I think you stated, was about 3,000?—Yes.

2338. And how many Roman Catholic clergymen are there for that population?—I am the only one.

2339. That is rather a small number?—But they are so very poor that they could not support another Catholic priest.

2340. One would consider that, quite independently of your work in the prison, you would be very much overtaxed in having a population of 3,000 to attend to?—Certainly; I have with my people alone as much as my strength can possibly bear, and I am obliged to neglect my own people during the time that I give to the prison.

2341. But I think I understood you to say that you could with satisfaction to yourself devote your whole time to the duties in this prison?—I could, and I am quite sure the result would be most beneficial to the prisoners.

2342. Mr. Dalrymple.] You said you had to take the initiative in all cases in approaching prisoners; are any difficulties, as regards seeing them, thrown in your way, except that you are not an officer of the prison?—I meet with difficulties.

2343. Do you meet with any difficulties except those arising from your not being an officer of the prison?—I do not meet with any other difficulty, as far as I know.

2344. Does the Protestant chaplain see the prisoners on their entrance, alone?—He sees them alone on their entrance.

2345. Do you not think that a man in such a mood as you mentioned, who, though a Roman Catholic, declared himself a Protestant, might be just as likely to declare himself a Roman Catholic, when in reality he was a Protestant?—It might happen so.

2346. Have you any reason for saying that a prisoner would go to the Protestant chapel in order to conciliate the prison authorities; I quite understand what you state about the warmth of the chapel being an inducement; but can you give any instance of such attempted conciliation?—From my knowledge, I cannot positively state distinct instances, but I certainly am under the impression that some have been influenced simply by the fear of incurring the displeasure of the the officials if they refused to attend the chapel, or if they said they were Catholics.

28 April 1870.

2347. You mentioned that the prisoners, on the occasion of the chaplain's visit, waited his coming at their cell doors; do you know any case in which the chaplain spoke to the Roman Catholic prisoners upon religious matters?—I have no recollection of any circumstance of that kind.

2348. With regard to that French prisoner who you stated thought it hopeless to expect to see a clergyman of his own faith; did he never know of your presence in the prison till Lent, 1869?—He declared most positively that he had no knowledge of my being in the prison.

2349. You had no access to the register of the prisoners?—No access whatever.

2350. Therefore you could not know of his case, except from himself?—Except from his own mouth.

2351. You spoke of the advantage of seeing incipient offenders; I suppose, if a prisoner was there for only three days, you would only see him once?—If I were regularly appointed I should see a case of that kind as often as possible; every day if possible, as I am quite sure that the influence brought upon incipient offenders would very often save them.

2352. You spoke of the discipline of preparing prisoners for communion; that would only occur in the case of long-sentence prisoners, would it not?—Not altogether; in the case of those who are there for a short time, they may have neglected their religion when they were out of prison, and the only hope of their radical amendment would be during the time they were in prison.

2353. I understand that it is the amount of your work elsewhere, and not the difficulties which are thrown in your way, which makes it impossible for you to attend more frequently at the prison?—At present I could not undertake more duty; it would require the appointment of a chaplain.

2354. Mr. Guest.] Do you know whether all the Protestant prisoners go to the chapel twice on Sundays?—They go twice on Sundays.

2355. I believe the books are changed every week?—Yes, I believe they are changed by the schoolmaster.

2356. The prisoners are, I believe, allowed to choose what books they like out of the number provided for them?—No; I think it depends upon the schoolmaster, who changes the books from week to week, and gives a fresh set of books to each cell; he does so systematically, and I think without the option of the prisoners.

2357. Did you raise any objection to those books, a list of which you have brought here?—No; I thought it was better, under the circumstances, not to make any further complaints.

2358. All the prisoners go to school, do they not?—I think it is optional; they can refuse to go if they like, or they can go if they choose.

2359. You did not think it was worth while mentioning to the schoolmaster that those books were objectionable?—I thought it was better not.

2360. You are never allowed to go down the wards?—Never, excepting it is to see a man who happens to be unwell, and then under the attendance of one of the officers.

2361. Is it the case, to your knowledge, that there is a different coloured ticket on the doors of the cells of the Roman Catholic and Protestant prisoners?—I do not know that.

2362. You stated that you wished to have access to the Creed Register; I presume you mean by that the General Register of the prison containing a description of the religion of the prisoners?—Yes.

2363. You stated to the Committee that, if you had access to that Register, you would have the power of correcting any error which might occur in the description of the religion of the prisoners; how would you propose to correct those errors?—If I saw a name which was evidently a Catholic name, such as Sullivan or Sweeney, or whatever it might be, I might say this is certainly an Irish name, and I shall be surprised if he is not a Catholic, and that man might be asked if he is a Catholic or a Protestant.

2364. You would propose that he should be asked that question?—Yes.

2365. By whom?—By the governor or by the chief warder.

2366. You would wish to have the power of bringing such a case as this before the governor?—Yes, because I should have grave suspicions that he was not a Protestant.

2367. With regard to the room provided for you, you mentioned that the prisoners are allowed to come there for confession?—Yes, I am allowed to see them one by one; the warder is outside the door; there is a glass panel let into the door so that the warder can overlook if he wishes.

2368. In no case are you allowed to go into the cell itself, except when one of the prisoners is sick?—No.

2369. You have never applied for a Roman Catholic service, have you?—Yes, I have.

2370. Was any objection raised on the score of insufficiency of staff?—None.

2371. Mr. Matthews.] Have you ever known a case of a Protestant falsely entering himself as a Catholic?—I conclude that the case I mentioned of a man representing himself to the chief warder must have been a case of that kind, as he was introduced to me as a Catholic, and I discovered that he was a Protestant.

2372. What was his motive?—I do not know; I reported the case to the chief warder and he said that it was by mistake that the man had been sent in. I could not verify that statement as I had not access to the Creed Register.

2373. Mr. Synan.] You did not mention your objection about the books to the schoolmaster, did you?—No.

2374. But did you not object to letting your people use those books, or any of them?—Yes; the very fact of my applying for Catholic books was practically an objection to those books.

2375. What did you do when you were offered a selection from those four books?—The selection was not offered to me.

2376. What did the prisoners say to you?—They complained to me of them.

2377. Did they read them?—No, they did not; they told me the nature of the books, and I said they must not read them.

2378. Did you send them back?—I had no authority to do so.

2379. Do you know whether that objection was communicated to the authorities?—No, I do not think it was; I am sure it was not.

2380. Mr. Fowler.] Are those books left in the cells?—They are left in the cells weekly or fortnightly. They are systematically taken round by the schoolmaster. The prisoners, I believe, have no selection.

2381. You

2381. You do not know who makes the selection of them?—I think the selection is made under the supervision of the chaplain.

2382. Sir John Pakington.] You stated that the books were changed every week, you thought?—I think so; I am not certain.

2383. You only mentioned four books. Have the Roman Catholic prisoners the option of reading any other books besides those four?—I do not think they have any option in the matter.

2384. Are those the only books supplied to the prisoners?—No, those are only some amongst others.

2385. Only some amongst others which are sent to the Roman Catholic prisoners as well as to the Protestant prisoners?—Yes.

2386. Do you know any case in which those four books were sent together, or were the only books sent to a prisoner, or were they mixed with others from time to time?—One of those books at a time would be sent to the Catholic prisoner.

2387. With others?—Yes.

2388. I understand those four books which you think so objectionable were books occasionally sent to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—Yes.

2389. Do you take objection to any other of the books circulated in the prison?—I take objection to all of them.

2390. They were books which you could not conscientiously allow your flock to read?—They are books published by the Religious Tract Society, and of course they are in their tone altogether Protestant.

2391. They were books of a religious character connected with the Protestant mode of worship?—Yes.

2392. Chairman.] You mentioned those books in particular as an instance of the general tone of the books supplied to the prison?—Exactly.

2393. You were asked whether the Protestants have service twice on Sundays?—Yes.

2394. Do you know the accommodation of the Protestant chapel?—I have never been inside it.

2395. Is it sufficiently large for the number of prisoners?—Quite so.

2396. The number of prisoners in July was 461; do you know whether it is sufficiently large to accommodate all that number at one time?—I believe so.

2397. With reference to the Catholic service on Sunday, although the authorities would not pay the chaplain, were not you determined that, if the authorities allowed service on Sundays under any circumstances, the Catholic prisoners should have it?—Yes.

2398. At whosoever cost it might be, you would have had an assistant, and the prisoners would have had a service if you had been allowed to hold it?—If I had been allowed, most certainly they would.

2399. But at the same time it is not fair to ask the Catholics comprising your congregation to pay for the services of the Catholic clergyman attending the Catholic prisoners?—Certainly not.

Mr. Alderman JOHN CARTER, called in; and Examined.

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

2400. Chairman.] You are a Member of the Corporation of the City of London, are you not?—I am an Alderman of the City of London.

2401. And as such I think you have control over the gaol at Holloway?—The control over all the City gaols.

2402. Is the management of those gaols entrusted to a committee, or how is it vested?—In a committee.

2403. Are you one of that committee?—It is a general committee; each of the aldermen is on the gaol committee.

2404. Do you know that there are Catholic prisoners in that gaol?—Yes.

2405. Do you know how many there were on the 20th of July 1869?—No, I cannot remember; I can tell you how many were there on Saturday last.

2406. How many?—I think we had 37 males, and six females.

2407. Are you not surprised to learn that the number in the prison on the 20th of July 1869 was 41 males and 15 females?—That must have been an accidental number, I suppose.

2408. The number fluctuates very much, sometimes more and sometimes less?—Yes, the number fluctuates considerably.

2409. Is there ever a larger number of the Catholic prisoners than 56?—I think not.

2410. I suppose I need scarcely ask you whether you have a Protestant chaplain?—We have.

2411. He is fairly paid, I suppose?—Yes.

2412. What is his remuneration?—I think it is 200*l.* a year.

2413. Would you think that this return is correct when it states that he receives 350*l.* per annum, with house, fuel, and light?—Really at this moment I cannot say whether it is 200*l.*, or 300*l.*, or 350*l.*

2414. With those other advantages?—He has the advantage of a house, I believe; he is a resident, I know.

2415. Are you of opinion that his services are very valuable to the prisoners?—We hope so.

2416. You are not one of those who object to spiritual ministration in a prison?—Quite the contrary; I think it is necessary that those men, although in confinement, should have spiritua consolation.

2417. Would you make any distinction be tween one class of Her Majesty's subjects an another?—I think we should; we have a chap lain there, and we cannot afford, I think, to plac another chaplain there; if we did there woul be no saying how many chaplains might be re quired there.

2418. You cannot afford it?—We do no choose to afford it.

2419. Let me understand which way you pu it, whether you cannot, or do not choose to affor it?—I will put it in this way, that we do no choose to afford it.

2420. Then you abandon the plea of poverty —Most certainly; yes.

2421. Then it is that you do not choose t afford it?—Certainly.

2422. You think it is advantageous and righ that although these people are in prison, yo should afford them the benefit of spiritual minis tration?—Doubtless.

2423. Do you afford that spiritual ministratio fully to the Catholic inmates of the gaol?—Ye 2424. You afford it fully?—The Catholi priest has full permission to go to the priso twice a week.

2425. How often is the Protestant chaplai there?—He is constantly there by reason of hi dwelling there.

2426. You have Divine service on Sunda have you not?—Yes.

2427. If I mistake not, you have it twice o Sunday, morning and evening?—Yes.

2428. That, according to your idea, is spiritu ministration and consolation?—Yes.

2429. What is the liberty given to the Catholi visiting priest; how many times does he go t the prison?—I think he is there Mondays an Tuesdays.

2430. Is there Divine service on Sunday f the Catholics?—I think not.

2431. Do you think not, or do you know not —I know there is not; I do not think that th Roman Catholic priest is there upon the Sunda

2432. I wish to be quite clear upon the poin as you are an authority upon the subject; as matt matter of fact then, there is no divine service for he Catholics on Sunday?—I do not think there s.

2433. Do you think there is not, or do you know there is not?—I really could not answer hat question; if I had known a little earlier hat I should have been required to give evidence efore this Committee, I would have informed myself upon these points.

2434. Was there ever an application from the Roman Catholic visiting priest to have Catholic worship upon the Sunday?— Some time ago a erson of the name of Keens, I think, who is the riest who visits the gaol, made such an applica- on.

2435. What do you mean by a "person," do ou mean a professional gentleman?—He is a riest of the Roman Catholic persuasion.

2436. Before we go a little further, I might uietly ask you whether you know that a priest the Roman Catholic persuasion receives the lucation of a gentleman?—I do not think it is ways the case.

2437. You do not think he does?—I do not ink he always does.

2438. Do you not think he is entitled to be lled a gentleman, instead of a "person"?—I not know that he is.

2439. Would you describe a shopkeeper in e City of London as a "person"?—I think I ould.

2440. A respectable tradesman?—Yes.

2441. What profession are you?—I am a ronometer maker to the Royal Navy.

2442. That is, a watchmaker by another name? Exactly.

2443. Do you think it would be right for a ntleman to address yourself by the term, a erson"?— I should be independent of any- ng of that kind.

2444. Do you think that that is a courteous y to speak of a gentleman?—That is quite a tter of opinion.

2445. There was an application some time ce made by this "person," who happens to be my religion?—Yes.

2446. This person made that application some e since, was that application couched in ensive language?—Really I forget now; it is ne months since that application was made to 2447. I believe it was in the early part of last r?—I forget when it was.

2448. Permit me first to bring it to your ollection; did that application come before the ard of Aldermen?— It came before the Court Aldermen.

2449. Was that application the subject of cussion?—It was.

2450. Did you take part in that discussion?— , slightly.

2451. You expressed your opinion upon that sion?—Yes, I did.

2452. Therefore, can you not inform the Com- tee whether the application then made to you couched in respectful language, or whether as addressed in such language as deserved uke upon the part of the aldermen?—I can- answer that question.

2453. As this is a matter of some little im- ance I will read you the letter, it is dated 3rd of December 1868, and addressed to the ernor of the prison; I suppose you consider application addressed to the governor of the on as addressed to the authorities?—Not 60. exactly; the governor may place it before us for our approval or otherwise.

2454. But it was addressed, I suppose, to the authorities?—It was addressed to the governor of the gaol, and the governor would present it to the Court of Aldermen.

2455. This is the letter: "Having ascertained, on the best authority, that in the Government prisons complete liberty of religion is allowed to Roman Catholic prisoners, and that the Roman Catholic chaplain is permitted to stand in precisely the same relation towards them that the Protestant chaplain stands towards the Protestant prisoners, I desire, with all respect, to make the following requests with regard to my ministrations in the City Prison, Upper Holloway; 1st, Access to the Creed Register; 2nd, Power of giving evidence with regard to the religion of such prisoners as, being actually registered as Protestant, desire to be entered as Roman Catholics; 3rd, Power of assembling for Divine service in the morning and evening on Sundays and holidays; 4th, Free access to the cells of all those who are registered as Roman Catholics. Waiting your kind reply, believe me, in Christ, yours very respectfully, C. J. Keens;" may I ask you is there anything in that letter inconsistent either with the character or the education of a gentleman? —I find no fault with it at the present time.

2456. Do you now think that the application as I have read it was such as a gentleman ought to present to gentlemen?—You see we had never had these applications before; we have had Roman Catholic priests in the gaol before this Mr. Keens, and we have never had any difficulty whatever. We do not coerce your Roman Catholic prisoners; we are anxious that their creed should be carried out to their own liking; we do not wish to interfere with it at all.

2457. That is the very point I want to come to; but, first of all, was there anything disrespectful in that letter? Is there anything in it which should hurt the susceptibilities of men of ordinary feelings?—I do not say that there is.

2458. I want you to explain that, because certain words are attributed to you in the public journals. I want to know whether you will acknowledge that?—I repudiate nothing I have said.

2459. I want you to explain what you stated then. "Alderman Carter seconded the motion with great pleasure. If they once gave this man free ingress to the prison, the next thing would be that he would come before the court and not only ask, but through his friends demand, a salary, and there would be a repetition of what was now taking place in the county. The priest had already every opportunity of seeing the unfortunate people who were in the prison, and he could see them as they pleased, and minister to them as they pleased; and forsooth, they must find a room for him in which to decorate an altar! Presently he (Mr. Alderman Carter) should ask himself whether he was in France, Spain, or England. He was afraid the time must soon come when these gentlemen must be taught that they could not come before the court with such assurance, nay, impertinence, as was shown in this letter." First of all, you do not repudiate that report?—Not a word of it.

2460. You are quite proud of them, perhaps? —I am not proud of them, but I am prepared to justify them.

2461. What was there in this letter to justify

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

such assertions as those?—There was that which at that time I was disposed to treat in that way, and I am not sorry for doing so, for since that time I have received the most indecent and insolent letters signed by this, that, and the other party connected with this body, I suppose, and with I do not know who.

2462. We are not speaking of anything that happened afterwards; but what was there in that letter that justified you in using this very strong language at that moment?—I should be very sorry to say anything that was offensive, but if you ask me such a close question I must answer it; I must say, that as we are not a Roman Catholic country, I consider you are asking too much.

2463. I suppose you know, as a mere matter of statistical fact, that there happens to be in the British dominions about 8,000,000 of Roman Catholics?—I do not care how many there are.

2464. But do you know that?—I learn that from the statistics.

2465. And do you learn that, according to the law, they stand upon an equality, even with an alderman of the city of London?—They may; I do not know that they stand upon an equality with an alderman; they may as regards their creed, but I do not know what an alderman has to do with a Roman Catholic.

2466. Do not you know that there are Catholic aldermen as well as Protestant aldermen, and that there are Catholics in the Army and Catholics in the Navy; that they are the Queen's subjects, and pay taxes the same as any other persons?—No doubt they do.

2467. Tell me, therefore, why it is an impertinent thing on the part of a Roman Catholic priest to ask permission to do that which you say is essential to the religious instruction of the prisoners upon the Sunday?—I do not refuse him permission.

2468. Did you, as one individual, take with others a course which prevented its being acceded to?—I would not encourage the priests' visits too much, as I think that it would interfere very much with the economy of the country and the convenience of the prison. What right have we to prohibit a Dissenter of any denomination if we give facilities to the Roman Catholic?

2469. Will you explain how the comfort or economy of the prison would be interfered with in any way by Roman Catholic clergymen being allowed to hold Divine worship (in plain words, mass) upon the Sunday?—I do not know that it would interfere so much upon the Sunday, but I believe the priest required it upon the other days of the week, and that would be very inconvenient. I would never suffer a prisoner to be taken off the "wheel," when he is sentenced to hard labour, in order to visit a Roman Catholic or any other priest, I do not care who he was.

2470. I am asking you as to application No. 3, "Power of assembling for Divine service in the morning and evening on Sundays and holidays." In what way would it interfere with the comfort and economy of the prison to accede to that request?—On the Sunday I do not see that it could.

2471. Was not he refused permission to have Divine service on the Sunday?—I think he was. I think there was some demand made for a salary by this priest.

2472. Was an application made for a salary?—I was given to understand that there was an insinuation made about salary, and that there should be a room fitted up for his convenience.

2473. How was that insinuation couched or expressed?—I do not remember.

2474. It is some idea that you have now, is it?—No, I was satisfied of it at the time.

2475. Was the application for a salary, or for permission to hold service?—For permission to hold service; but I believe we had reason to expect what would come afterwards.

2476. At any rate, permission was not given?—Certainly not.

2477. As a matter of fact, one class of Her Majesty's subjects are treated differently in prison from others?—I do not see that they are; they have their religious instructor, Mr. Keens.

2478. But on Sundays they have not?—I think not on Sundays.

2479. Is not Sunday the most solemn day of all, and the day upon which they should offer up prayer and thanks to God for his assistance?—No doubt.

2480. If there be any day of the week out of the seven when Christians ought to kneel in church, it is on that day?—It is so.

2481. Are the Catholics allowed that privilege in Holloway Prison?—I think not.

2482. In fact, you know not?—I think they are not.

2483. Is it not the fact that, owing to the monotony and irksomeness of the tenancy of the cell, the Catholic prisoners being otherwise compelled to remain in the gaol, are very glad to go to the Protestant worship on the Sunday?—Some of them do, but in a very small ratio.

2484. The inducement to do so is very strong, is it not?—You put it in this way, if I understand you rightly, that they would go to the chapel merely to afford a little relief to the monotony of their imprisonment. I consider that as their priest sees them on the Monday and sees them again on the Tuesday, that ought to be sufficient.

2485. The Protestant chaplain sees the Protestant prisoners every day in the week, does he not?—Yes; but you will, of course, remember we are a Protestant country, and we do not ask the Catholics to come here; and if they will go into our prisons they should, in my opinion, receive punishment.

2486. Have not there been Roman Catholics in this country for hundreds and hundreds of years?—No doubt. In early times we were all Catholics; but we have since seen the error of our ways.

2487. I will not ask you any theological question; but the fact is, that you do not allow to the Catholics, for certain reasons of your own, the same liberty that you do allow to others?—We have but 37 or 40 Catholics altogether in the prison.

2488. You had 56 according to the late return?—The returns on Saturday were 37 men and six women, that is within 48 hours. I was at the prison and saw the report.

2489. Mr. Guest.] What would be about the average?—About 45, I think; I only obtained my summons to appear before this honourable Committee about five o'clock on Saturday, and have not had an opportunity of refreshing my memory upon many points upon which my evidence is required.

2490. Chairman.] At any rate you do not place the Roman Catholics upon the same footing?

oting?—We have no Roman Catholic priest ermanently attached to the establishment, ex- pt this Mr. Keens, who visits there.

2491. I think, if I understand you rightly, one your objections would be, if you paid the atholic clergyman or gave him the full per- ission which he desired, you would have to ve it to all Dissenters?—I think very likely ey would claim it, and with as much reason.

2492. With reference to the mere fact, do you t know that Dissenters receive, without any jection, the ministrations of a Protestant ergyman?—They are quite at liberty to do so.

2493. Is it not the fact?—I am not aware it.

2494. Have any complaints been brought to u on the part of dissenting prisoners of their willingness to receive the ministrations of the rotestant chaplain?—No; but I have had com- aints of prisoners requesting not to be troubled ith the Roman Catholic priest, although they ere Roman Catholics.

2495. That is not quite an answer to the ques- n I asked you?—I think it is.

2496. No; I am speaking of Protestant issenters. Have you ever heard of any com- aints on the part of Protestant Dissenters of eir not having the services of a clergyman of eir own immediate denomination?—I have t.

2497. On the other hand, has it ever come to ur knowledge that Catholics are bound not attend the Protestant service?—That I believe be the fact.

2498. Therefore there is no analogy or parity the case of Protestant Dissenters and Roman atholics?—I think there is.

2499. How can there be?—A dissenting nister has very different opinions from what we the Church of England may possess.

2500. Have you not just told the Committee t you never had any complaint on the part of risoner of any Protestant dissenting denomina- n being compelled to attend the service and nistration of the Protestant chaplain?—No, I not remember that I have; but that is simply cause the clergymen of the various denomina- ns are less pushing men, and less interested, rhaps, in giving trouble, than the Roman Ca- olic priest is.

2501. The simple fact is, that you have had no ection on the part of Protestant dissenting soners to receive the ministrations of the Pro- tant chaplain?—I do not remember that we e.

2502. You say that you know as a fact that Catholic cannot conscientiously receive the nistrations of a Protestant clergyman; you ow that as a fact?—They say so.

2503. You admit that that is the case?—I know nerely from their assertion.

2504. Therefore are not Catholic prisoners ced at a disadvantage as regards other Dissen- s?—I only regret that we have Catholics in prison at all.

2505 So do I; but you know that you have arge number of Catholic poor in London?— ere are a large number.

2506. People who are engaged in rough labour? Yes.

2507. In poverty?—Yes.

2508. And liable to temptation?—Yes.

2509. Would it not be well to try and make ne effort to reform them?—I think they are 0.60.

reformed by charitable contributions in the City of London to a large amount.

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

2510. But with reference to spiritual ministration, if there be any truth in religion, do you not think that it would be well to give them moral instruction?—Yes; but Mr. Keens is there on Mondays and Tuesdays, and he is there at the extreme but a couple of hours at any time.

2511. Is he allowed to be there oftener?—He might if he liked come there oftener.

2512. Do you know as a fact of your own knowledge that he has free permission to go there?—If he does not interfere with the economy of the gaol, and the convenience of the men in it.

2513 Will you explain that a little more clearly?—It is possible that he may arrive there at inconvenient hours.

2514. But he is not allowed to go there on Sundays?—I think he is not there on Sundays.

2515. Now suppose we approach this desperate question of the salary; is not the labourer worthy of his hire?—No doubt of it; Scripture tells us so, and we know it.

2516. Might you not apply that principle more widely, and say that we should pay the Roman Catholic labourer?—I have no objection to the Roman Catholic labourer being paid; only let the Roman Catholics pay him.

2517. You would not have the Roman Catholics pay for a service done to the City of London?—It is not a service done to the City of London.

2518. Is the chaplain paid by the City of London?—Yes, he is paid by the City of London.

2519. What do you pay him for?—For services rendered to the prison.

2520. I think he is decidedly entitled to payment?—And I consider your Roman Catholic priest to be so also, but you should pay him.

2521. With reference to the authorities, who pays the Protestant chaplain?—We pay him from the City purse.

2522. For services rendered to Protestant prisoners?—Doubtless.

2523. Then, on the same principle, why should not the same City purse be called upon for the same object with reference to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—I cannot agree with you in that respect.

2524. Would you have had any objection, may I ask, that the application made by Mr. Keens so long a time since, should now be complied with?—I should like to review the whole of the proceedings before I gave a positive answer to that question.

2525. What proceedings?—The proceedings in the Court of Aldermen.

2526. I think I can give that information?—I should rather be excused from giving a positive answer.

2527. We had the statement made here, that this was the answer to Mr. Keens communication, and that beyond that there has been nothing done up to this present moment. I will read it: "Sir, I am directed by the gaol committee of alderman to inform you that your letter to the governor of the City Prison, Holloway, relative to your ministration in that prison has been laid before them, and is now under their consideration. I remain, Sir, your obedient servant, F. Woodthorpe." Since that, there has been no answer whatever?—I believe not, because his letter was ordered to lie on the table.

2528. And there have been no proceedings; there

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

there has been nothing done but sending that reply; that is the last communication upon the subject?—I do not remember; there may have been some step taken. I do not attend every Court of Aldermen.

2529. Is it your opinion that you are bound by law to give the visiting priest access to the Creed Register?—It is not the law.

2530. Has he got that access?—That I do not know indeed.

2531. Would you have any objection that he should be allowed free access to the Creed Register?—You must excuse me as an individual member of the Court of Aldermen from giving an opinion upon that point. When we meet together, and I place this investigation as far as I can before them, I shall be able to speak upon that point with greater certainty.

2532. Mr. O'Reilly.] You are a member of the gaol committee?—Yes.

2533. Am I right in my understanding of your answer to the question of the honourable Chairman that this report in the "City Press" of what you said at the Court of Aldermen is correct?—Yes, I think so.

2534. I see in what you stated then you objected to the application of the Roman Catholic priest, Mr. Keens, in that letter which has just been read; the first objection I take it that you made was this, you said that the priest asked for free access to the Creed Register, that was access to the name of every prisoner, and power to register as Roman Catholics those entered as Protestants when the prisoners desired it; would you point out to the Committee what you considered as an application in that letter for him to register as Roman Catholics those entered as Protestants?—When prisoners are brought into the gaol after commitment from either the magistrates or the criminal court, they are asked their religious creed. If they are Roman Catholics, they have the advantage of their Roman Catholic pastor; if they are Protestants, they have the chaplain's aid and assistance, and, therefore, I thought, and think now, that there was no necessity for Mr. Keens to interfere with our records.

2535. I must repeat my question; would you point out to the Committee what you considered as an application in that letter for the priest to register as Roman Catholics those entered as Protestants?—It is stated here, "Power of giving evidence with regard to the religion of such prisoners."

2536. That is your answer?—Yes.

2537. Then, am I right in saying, that what you meant by saying that he applied for power to register Protestants as Catholics, was power to bring evidence before the authorities to show that they were Roman Catholics?—It might be so; there is no difficulty about it.

2538. In your observations upon this 23rd of January, you objected to the Roman Catholic priest having access to the Creed Register?—I think I did.

2539. And you now state that you are aware that you are bound by law to give him access to it; may I ask why you objected to do that which you are bound by law to do?—He has the opportunity afforded him of knowing who are Roman Catholics and who are Protestants; they are registered by the governor of Holloway gaol when they are brought there, and there is no objection to the Roman Catholic priest seeing that register.

2540. Am I to understand your last answer to be the answer that you wish to give to my question, why you objected, on the 23rd of January 1869, to doing that, namely, allowing the priest to have access to the Creed Register, which you are bound by law to afford him?—I have no objection to the priest having access to it under surveillance.

2541. My question is, why did you object to allow the priest to have access to the Creed Register, when you knew that by law you were bound to afford him such access?—My impression was that we were at liberty to withhold it, and as one of the Court of Aldermen I was right in giving expression to my opinion, and have since learned we are right in so doing.

2542. Do you think you were justified in refusing to do that which you state you were bound by law to do?—I think we met the law by giving the Catholic priest the opportunity of seeing the list which the governor was prepared to show him. Whenever prisoners are brought to the gaol their religious creed is taken down by him and by the chaplain, and Mr. Keens might have learnt from that whether the prisoners were Roman Catholics or Protestants.

2543. I see that you then made this observation: "Then what business has the Romish Archbishop to appoint a chaplain to our gaol?" Now, I do not mean to say that he has any business to do so, but I want to know what right have you to say that he was appointed by the Romish Archbishop?—I understood that he was appointed by the archbishop as chaplain to the gaol.

2344. What was your authority for saying that he was appointed bythe archbishop as chaplain to the gaol?—I cannot recollect now; I only received my information to attend this Committee on Saturday evening, and I cannot retain a recollection of all that passed at the Court of Aldermen, or what induced me to express those opinions which I now retain to some extent.

2545. Could you state to the Committee whether there was anything upon which you founded that opinion; was it something in writing, or what?—I had reason to believe that I had good grounds for doing so at the time.

2546. But at present you cannot give any grounds for that statement?—I do not remember what it was, now.

2547. Then I see you observe that you, "the magistrates, had no right to inflict additional punishment upon them" (the prisoners) "by obliging them to see the priest;" may I ask what you referred in that statement?—Many of the prisoners will not see the priest, and, therefore, we were not bound to compel them to do so.

2548. Were you asked to compel any prisoner to see the priest who objected to do so?—No.

2549. What was the pertinence of saying that you would not do that which nobody had asked you to do?—Simply because it was possible that we might be asked to do such a thing.

2550. Will you be kind enough to state to the Committee the reason which induced you to state that you considered the letter which you have in your hands was a most improper one?—I think I have answered that question before. I considered that it was improper; we are essentially and virtually a Protestant community, and the City of London more particularly, and I am not particularly anxious to see it otherwise than erefore I shall do all I possibly can to prevent y change being made in the religious creed of y fellow-citizens.

2551. That was the reason which induced you think that an improper letter?—It was.

2552. You gave it as your opinion that this is a Protestant country, and that we (the Protestants, I presume you meant) did not ask the atholics to come here. May I ask whether u consider the English Catholics, who have en in England for some hundreds of years with- t changing their religion at all, require an in- tation to come here?—Not at all; they may me if they please.

2553. Do you consider that many of the great oman Catholic families came to England; take e case of the Howards and the Cliffords, and ny other noble families?—No; they have en here many hundreds of years, and so let em remain, but let them keep their creed to emselves; I keep mine to myself.

2554. Are there any Catholic ratepayers in e City of London?—I presume so, but I do t ask a man his creed.

2555. If there are Roman Catholic ratepayers the City of London, they, I presume, contri- ite towards the City purse, do they not?—The ole expenses of our prisons is paid from City sh; that is, the property of the City proper.

2556-9. But a portion of that would be paid the Roman Catholic ratepayers?—The rate- yers do not contribute to prison charges.

2560. You stated to the Committee that the iest has leave to visit the gaol oftener and on her days than he does; is that statement accu- te to your knowledge?—I do not think if there is a necessity for his attending a Roman atholic prisoner his visit would be objected to. n the case of a man wanting extreme unction or ything of that sort, the priest would be lmitted, of course.

2561. Do you mean that he is free to attend e prisoners on other days in the week, and that objection would be made if a prisoner in ex- eme illness wished to see the priest?—Yes; at is what I meant.

2562. Did you mean nothing more?—No; I not think I did.

2563. Then you do not mean the Committee understand that he would be permitted to visit e prison to a greater extent under ordinary cir- mstances?—There are but a few Roman atholic prisoners; about 44 male and female pri- ners; that is what I was told on Saturday st.

2564. What I wanted to know was, whether e is or is not at liberty to visit the ordinary risoners in the gaol more frequently than he oes?—I really can hardly answer that question; know that there are two days in the week lotted to him, and he selects, I think, Monday nd Tuesday for that purpose.

2565. Does not that imply that he has not ore than two days in the week allotted to him?-Except under extreme pressure: if an indi- dual was seriously ill it would be cruel and icked of us to refuse him admission.

2566. You stated to the Committee that a very nall number of Roman Catholic prisoners at- nd the Protestant service; can you tell what is e number or proportion?—Yes, I can; I think, esterday, out of six females two attended, and t of 37 male prisoners, I think 14 attended.

2567. Do you know whether that is the ordinary proportion?—I am sure I cannot say; I am not prepared to answer that question.

2568. Then am I to understand that your answer applies simply to last Sunday; you do not know whether a larger or a smaller number attend on ordinary occasions?—I believe it is about the average.

2569. You stated that there was some application made for a salary for the Roman Catholic priest; do you know whether any application was made?—As I said before, it is now a year and a quarter since the letter was written, and really my memory does not serve me at this time. I know I felt, at the time, that which I expressed, however inconvenient or unpleasant it might be to gentlemen of the contrary creed.

2570. At the same time you are not prepared to say that any application was made for a salary for the Roman Catholic priest?—I cannot remember.

2571. You also said, "That some insinuation was made to me with regard to a salary"?—Yes, I am pretty sure there was.

2572. Can you say by whom?—At this time I cannot.

2573. There were four applications in the letter which came before you, on the part of the Roman Catholic priest, one was, "Access to the Creed Register;" that we have disposed of. The second was, "Power of giving evidence," that is disposed of; and the third was, "Power of assembling for Divine service, in the morning and evening, on Sundays and holidays;" do I understand you to say that you objected to that part of the application being granted?—That is a question which, I think, is more particularly adapted for our own determination as a committee of aldermen; I can hardly, I think, fairly reply to that question.

2574. The question I asked was, whether, when you spoke upon this subject, on the 23rd of January, you objected to that application or not; you may decline answering the question, if you like?—I do not remember; I cannot answer that question; it is impossible for me to detail every circumstance that occurred 15 months ago.

2575. Have you any objection to say whether you consider it undesirable now that Roman Catholics should be allowed to hold such service on Sundays?—I can hardly give a definite answer to that question, for I should be binding my brother aldermen to that which they might not approve of.

2576. You are aware, of course, that this letter of December 3rd, 1868 was brought before the gaol committee, of which you are a member?—There is just the possibility that I might not have been present at that meeting of the gaol committee.

2577. You were aware of it afterwards?—I must have been aware of it.

2578. Can you answer to the fact that no answer has ever been given from that day to this by your committee?—I cannot undertake to say that.

2579. Mr. Matthews.] I understand that the Court of Aldermen did upon deliberation determine not to allow Divine service for the Catholics in Holloway Prison?—Yes, I think that was so.

2580. Upon what ground?—I can hardly give you the grounds at this late period, but I presume it was upon the same as actuated myself. We have a Protestant chaplain, and we did not deem it it needful that we should have a Roman Catholic chaplain likewise in the prison.

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

2581. I am not asking you with reference to having a Roman Catholic chaplain, but upon what grounds the Court of Aldermen determined that the Roman Catholic prisoners should not have Divine service on Sundays when the priest was willing to perform it for them?—That is a question that I cannot go into now, simply because the time that has elapsed is considerable, and I forget the discussion that took place at the time.

2582. It was only last year?—It was the beginning of last year.

2583. You have forgotten upon what grounds the court proceeded?—I have not had an opportunity of refreshing my memory with regard to those points.

2584. I understand that you decline to give any opinion yourself now, with reference to whether that liberty ought to be granted to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—Yes, I do.

2585. Of the two women and 14 men who attended the Protestant Church yesterday, could you say whether any had been visited by the Roman Catholic priest, Mr. Keens?—I do not know; it is quite impossible for me to say; I am not the gaoler.

2586. Mr. Synan.] You have professed yourself to be a friend to what you call religious liberty. I think you stated that all people should keep their creed to themselves?—What I meant by that observation was simply this, that I do not choose to have any creed contrary to my own forced upon me.

2587. Do you think it right that any creed should be forced by you upon another contrary to the creed he professes?—Certainly not; neither would I permit it.

2588. Do you think that the refusal of you, and your brother Aldermen, who are the governors of this gaol, to give religious liberty in that institution to the Catholic prisoner is a forcing of your creed upon them?—Certainly not.

2589. You do not think it is forcing your creed upon them?—We do not attempt it; we do not proselytise at all.

2590. Supposing, under similar circumstances, a Catholic governor refused to Protestant prisoners a service upon the Sunday, and on that account some of those Protestant prisoners went to the Catholic worship in the prison, would you think that a forcing of the Catholic creed upon the Protestant prisoners?—But that is hypothetical altogether.

2591. Cannot you answer it?—It answers itself.

2592. Would you condemn it?—I would not allow any creed to be forced upon the Roman Catholics, neither would I force the Roman Catholic creed upon Protestants.

2593. In the hypothetical case which I have put, would you condemn the act of the Catholic governor?—But we have no Catholic governors.

2594. I am putting a hypothetical case; I am supposing a Catholic country?—But we are not in a Catholic country, we are Protestants.

2595. Is Protestantism less favourable to religious liberty than Catholicity?—No; I think more so.

2596. Then if Protestantism refuses liberty in a prison——?—We do not refuse it.

2597. Do you refuse religious liberty upon the Sunday?—I do not know that the priest attends there on the Sunday; but if the prisoners wished it I have no doubt he might attend there upon the Sunday.

2598. This is a clause in the letter of the priest, "Power of assembling for Divine service in the morning and evening on Sundays and holidays," did you refuse that application?—I did, and should do so again.

2599. Did you call it an impertinent application?—I daresay I did.

2600. Suppose that in a Catholic prison?—But it is no use supposing that; we have no Catholic prisons here.

2601. Are there Catholic prisons anywhere?—I have no doubt there are Catholic prisons in Ireland or in Rome.

2602. Supposing a Catholic alderman in Ireland, a member of the gaol committee, had refused an application of that kind from the Protestant minister in the Irish gaol, what would be your opinion of that?—I do not think it very likely to occur.

2603. What would be your opinion of it if it did occur?—I say again it is not likely to occur.

2604. I must repeat my question: what would be your opinion of it if it did occur?—I consider that I am not bound to answer that question.

2605. You say your gaol is supported by what you call a City purse, and by rates?—Not by rates.

2606. What is the City purse composed of?—Of funds arising from City properties.

2607. Where does it come from?—From estates.

2608. What estates?—I cannot go into the particulars of them.

2609. Do you not know what your own property is?—Yes; if you come to the Guildhall we shall be happy to tell you all about it.

2610. Is not some of it Irish property?—Yes it is.

2611. Do you know that some of that property was the property of Catholics?—The whole of the funds derivable from property left us in Ireland, is dispensed in Ireland, and not in England.

2612. I do not want at all to interfere with your application of it?—I can only tell you how it is applied, we do not get the benefit of it in the City.

2613. Is any of your property composed of Catholic bequests made centuries ago?—I do not know.

2614. Will you say it is not?—I say that which I have said before, namely, that the properties which we hold in Ireland, we derive no absolute benefit from.

2615. Was not some of your property derived from Catholic bequests?—I do not know whether there were any Catholic bequests.

2616. Were there not centuries ago?—That is beyond my memory.

2617. Do you know what the character of the property is?—We have large properties; I cannot enumerate the character of either or of all of them.

2618. You cannot trace your property back?—We have our title-deeds, and are going to keep them.

2619. If some of those title-deeds showed that they came from Catholic bequests, what would you say then?—As I said, we were once all Catholics.

2620. I think you stated that you would le th ıe Catholics pay for themselves?—Yes, I think 2621. Is that upon the principle of voluntary-m?—If you like; it must be voluntary.

2622. I am asking you what you like?—I canɔt compel them.

2623. Is it because you are a friend of the ɔluntary principle that you make that stateent?—I think the Roman Catholics in England ght to be enabled to pay for their Roman Caolic clergy, and especially in our prisons.

2624. Do you think that a Roman Catholic isoner in one of your prisons ought to pay for s clergyman?—No, they cannot afford it; but e Roman Catholic population ought to do so;
ɔu are rich enough.

2625. The Roman Catholic population outside e prison ought, by voluntary contributions, to ɔpport the priests in the gaols, and supply the isoners with Catholic instruction and Catholic orship; that is your opinion?—Yes, certainly.

2626. Would not the same principle apply to e Protestants outside the prison?—It does.

2627. Out of what funds are they paid?—Out our own funds we pay our chaplain.

2628-9. By voluntary contribution?—No, out funds at the disposal of the City for that purɔse.

2630. And has not some of this property, as ɔu have stated, already come from Catholic urces?—I do not know that.

2631. You do not deny that?—I do not affirm
; there would be a difficulty in saying what e creed of the parties was who left us the operty.

2632. Then, when you state that the Catholics ght, by the voluntary contributions of those tside, to supply religious instruction to pri-ners inside the gaols, you would apply the luntary principle to the Catholics alone?—I ɔuld support the Protestant chaplain by giving m an income, but I am not disposed to sup-rt the Roman Catholic priests by giving them laries.

2633. You state that the holding of a religious rvice upon the Sunday would be less troublesome the authorities of the prison than it would be week days?—I should fancy so; but I do not ve that as an authority; I merely suppose so.

2634. Would not that be a reason for permit-ıg the Roman Catholic priest to give his attennce and services upon the Sunday?—It might 2635. And if it was a reason in favour of anting the application, will you explain to the ɔmmittee why the application was refused?— was refused, and will be refused.

2636. That is all you can say?—That is all I n say upon the subject.

2637. You stated, I think, in reply to a quesɔn with reference to why you made that answer, d why you made that speech, that it was be-use it was possible that the priest might ask more?—He might have asked for that which e should not feel disposed to give.

2638. Then it was not in consequence of the plication which he made, and the letter he ote to you, that you sent him this answer con-ued in these minutes, or that you made that eech, but in order to prevent him from apply-g for anything further?—We are quite sure at if we had granted the request of the Romish iest for the prison at Holloway, the citizens would have been generally very much offended with it.

2639. Then you refused him what was legal?—We have not refused him what was legal; he had the opportunity of seeing the lists by courtesy.

2640. Were you bound by law to give him access to the register?—He has the opportunity of seeing who are Roman Catholics, and who are Protestants.

2641. Are you bound by law to give the priest access to the register?—I answered that that was the law, but I am afraid that I have gone rather too far; we are not bound by law; when prisoners are brought into the gaol at Holloway they are questioned as to their religious creed, and in my opinion very rightly so; if the prisoner is a Protestant the Protestant clergyman attends him; if he is a Roman Catholic the Roman Catholic priest has an opportunity of seeing him, and I daresay of consoling him as far as he possibly can. A day or two since there was a Roman Catholic who came to the prison, and he told me himself, "I do not want the priest; the priest wants me to confess; I do not choose to confess, for I believe that no man on earth can possibly forgive me my sins."

2642. Will you answer my question; do you keep a Creed Register in your prison?—There is a Creed Register kept.

2643. Do you refuse the Roman Catholic priest access to that register?—I think it was refused.

2644. Was that a refusal of a legal request?—That question I am not prepared to answer; I answered it rather hastily just now, but upon reflection it is not a legal request.

2645. You doubt whether access to the Creed Register is a legal request?—I do.

2646. What is it kept for?—Merely to identify the creed of the various prisoners.

2647. For whom?—For the Government generally, I suppose; in case the Government may require it.

2648. It is not kept for the governor of the prison?—It is kept for all parties concerned.

2649. Has the gaol committee access to it?—Yes.

2650. Has the Protestant chaplain access to it?—Yes.

2651. Has the governor access to it?—Yes.

2652. Why, therefore, is the Catholic priest refused access to it?—Because he is looked upon with——I would rather not answer that question.

2653. Do you think that a refusal to have Catholic worship in your prison on Sunday was in any way, directly or indirectly, the cause of these two female prisoners and 14 male prisoners attending the Protestant service?—No, I cannot say that; I do not know what their feelings were, or what actuated them to go to the Protestant place of worship.

2654. But they had no Roman Catholic place to go to?—I do not know about that.

2655. Have the Catholics a place of worship to go to in your prison?—I am not prepared to say whether the priest is allowed to go there upon the Sunday, but I think not.

2656. Did you not refuse him that liberty?—I think it is very likely we did.

2657. Mr. Talbot.] I understand you to say that you do not approve of the Roman Catholic priest being paid a salary out of the rates?—I do not.

2658. Do you see any objection to the Roman

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

Catholic priest being admitted into the chapel on Sundays or other days, to hold a service for the Roman Catholic prisoners?—I think it would be almost improper for me individually to give an opinion upon that point.

2659. I do not mean you to bind anybody else, but I want to know your opinion whether you, as one of the governors of the gaol, and the committee managing the affairs of the gaol, consider that there would be anything detrimental to the discipline of the prison in allowing a service to be held on Sundays for the Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison?—I think it is a matter that requires further consideration, so that I should not be at the present moment disposed to reply to that question.

2660. What happens to the Roman Catholic prisoners on the Sunday who do not attend the ordinary chapel if they have no service to go to?—They have their religious books in their cells agreeably to the recommendations of their priest.

2661. But they have no public worship of any sort?—I think not.

2662. Did you ever have any Protestant Dissenters in your gaol?—I should think so, but I do not know.

2663. Supposing there were some, what would be done with them on the Sunday?—They would have the liberty of going to chapel if they thought proper.

2664. But supposing they did not think proper?—There would be no compulsion.

2665. Is it not a rule that all Protestants and Dissenters attend the chapel on Sunday?—No, not all; the rule is that all who are Protestants may attend the Protestant place of worship, but the Roman Catholics are not compelled to attend.

2666. What would happen to a Protestant Dissenter, such as a Unitarian, or a Baptist, or a Quaker, if you had such a prisoner?—I suppose it would be optional with him.

2667. Would access be given to ministers of their denomination on the Sunday?—I think not.

2668. Lord Henley.] Would you kindly describe to us the constitution of the court of which you are a member; is it called the Court of Aldermen?—The Gaol Committee of the Court of Aldermen.

2669. Does the Court of Aldermen hold, in the City of London, the same position which the court of quarter sessions holds in the county for governing all local affairs?—We have various committees, and this happens to be one of them.

2670. It is so with quarter sessions also. I want to know how you become a member of the Court of Aldermen itself; is that by election or appointment?—By election by our fellow-citizens.

2671. The same as the town council in other towns, is it not?—No; it is the ratepayers of the ward in which the vacancy occurs who are the electors.

2672. How many wards are there in the City of London?—Twenty-six, I think.

2673. The ratepayers, I presume, are of various denominations in point of religion?—I should think so.

2674. Are there many Roman Catholics amongst them?—Really I could not tell you that.

2675. There are some, I presume?—I should fancy very possibly so.

2676. Are there many Dissenters of various denominations?—Very many.

2677. Does the contest at the election of aldermen turn at all upon religious differences?—Not at all.

2678. Upon political differences?—No.

2679. Upon what grounds does the election generally turn; is it upon personal grounds?—Upon personal grounds.

2680. We may take it that a man is generally elected owing to the position he personally holds in the City of London?—Yes.

2681. Has every ratepayer a vote, however small his rating?—Yes.

2682. You state there are 26 wards; is there an alderman for each elected in this way?—Yes.

2683. Amongst those aldermen are there any Roman Catholics?—I think not; in fact, I know there are not.

2684. Are there any Protestant Dissenters?—Yes, very many.

2685. But the majority of the 26 do you suppose to be members of the Church of England, or not?—I do not think they are; I think the majority is the contrary way.

2686. You think that the majority of the 26 are of various denominations of Protestant Dissenters?—Yes.

2687. Do you not think it possible that amongst a body so composed there may be a somewhat strong animus respecting the Roman Catholics?—I cannot answer for others.

2688. From the experience which we all of us have upon these matters, is it likely that that should be so?—I can hardly believe but that their feelings are certainly somewhat opposed to the Roman Catholic religion.

2689. Do you think that a body so constituted would be quite the right body to decide questions in which Roman Catholics are concerned?—As I said before, we are a Protestant country, and such being the case, we object to the intrusion of the Roman Catholic.

2690. Is that quite fair, do you think?—I do think so.

2691. Mr. Dimsdale.] Do you make any difference between the religious status of a Protestant and a Roman Catholic Dissenter?—In what way?

2692. Supposing that they enter themselves one as a Wesleyan and the other as a Catholic both would be attended by a minister of their own persuasion?—I can hardly answer that question. I should have liked the governor of the gaol to have been present, for many questions which have been put to me he would have answered better than myself. The question now put to me is, whether I make any difference between the religious status of the Catholic and the Protestant Dissenter; and I answer, that there must be a difference, as the Roman Catholic has his own priest.

2693. Would not a Dissenter have his own minister if he asked to see him?—He might but I could not answer that question.

2694. You would equally object to the payment of a Dissenting minister or a Roman Catholic minister out of the public funds?—I should equally; there are so few who are recognised as Dissenters in a prison that I think it would be a waste of money and a waste of the minister's time to come there.

2695. You would put the Protestant and the Catholic Dissenter upon the same footing?—No, I am am speaking now of Protestant Dissenters enerally; the Roman Catholic is in a different ategory from the Protestant Dissenter.

2696. Mr. Guest.] You stated that you were t certain that the Roman Catholic priest was gally entitled to access to the creed register; t me read you what the Act of Parliament ys; this is the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 79, s. 4: "The eper, or other person performing the duties of eeper of a prison, on receiving into his custody y prisoner, shall enter his name in a book to be ovided for the purpose, with the addition of the urch or religious persuasion to which the isoner shall declare himself to belong; and the id keeper or other person shall from time to me give to any minister appointed or permitted visit prisoners in the prison a list of the isoners so declared to belong to the Church or rsuasion of such minister, and no such minister all be permitted to attend or visit any prisoner longing to any religious persuasion differing om that to which such minister belongs;" you derstood that?—Yes.

2697. Do you consider, therefore, that the oman Catholic priest is legally entitled to have cess to the creed register itself?—They would ve him a list, I have no doubt.

2698. But do you not consider that he is en- led to have access to the creed register itself? He is not entitled to do so.

2699. Therefore I presume I may take it, hen you say that these words are correctly re- rted in the "City Press," "he was afraid the me would soon come, when these gentlemen ould be taught that they could not come before e court with such assurance, nay impertinence, was shown in this letter," that you considered e impertinence and assurance of that letter as holly arising in respect of that demand for cess to the creed register?—No; there were her details at the time that induced me to hold e opinion which I expressed there.

2700. You stated that you had had complaints the priest's visitation from the Roman Catholic isoners themselves?—Simply in this way: they ated that they did not want to be troubled with em; a few days since a prisoner made that servation to me which I mentioned to the nourable Chairman, and which I should not re about repeating again, as no doubt it is of an fensive character.

2701. Would you mention this as a particular se, or is it of general occurrence?—It is of mmon occurrence, but I will not say it is of neral occurrence.

2702. How did it come to your knowledge; as e of the gaol committee?—Yes.

2703. You did not lead up in conversation to . I suppose?—No, not at all.

2704. Of course you have an intimate ac- aintance with the working and discipline of at prison?—To some extent.

2705. Do you consider it possible to have a rvice for Roman Catholic prisoners on the nday?—That is a question I really can hardly swer for the present; it would require some eat consideration; we must first of all prevent ything like that which might by any chance ke place, namely, a little inconvenience or dis- reement between the two creeds, and I should e to avoid that if possible in the prison.

2706. I ask whether it is possible to have a rvice on the Sunday for the prisoners; what I ean by that is, is it possible to apportion a rtain number of warders to watch those prisoners upon the Sunday; how many warders have you in the prison?—I could not give you any idea of that; this is detail which does not come before the gaol committee.

2707. Do you happen to know whether there is any room in the Holloway Prison where you could accommodate the Roman Catholic prisoners for worship?—The Roman Catholic priest has an opportunity of taking them into a room, and does so at the present time; he does not administer consolation to them in their cells only, but he takes them into a certain room and speaks to them there.

2708. One by one?—That is detail that I cannot speak to.

2709. You know he has that room?—I know there is such a room, for when it is not used by him it is used by us.

2710. Would it accommodate 45 prisoners?—Not conveniently; but they would not be there all at one time; I suppose there would be a division.

2711. Do you state that the Protestant prisoners must or may attend the chapel on Sundays?—It is expected that they attend unless they are indisposed, or some reasonable excuse is alleged for their non-attendance.

2712. They must make some reasonable excuse, otherwise they are expected to attend?—Yes.

2713. And if they do not make a reasonable excuse and do not attend, they are punished for it, I suppose?—I am not prepared to answer that question; I could not say.

2715. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Practically, you have not paid any very particular attention to the detailed working of the system of your prison?—We have a report every week of the working of the gaol, and we visit it occasionally; two of the aldermen are told off, if I may use the expression, as visiting magistrates for the month, and it is their duty to attend and to hear complaints, and to make any alterations that may be deemed necessary.

2716. Were you, at the time of the refusal of the application by the Roman Catholic priest, acquainted with those things which you now call details, that is to say, the permission or non-permission of the Catholic prisoners to attend Divine worship?—Yes, I was.

2717. You had mastered the subject, I presume, before you gave that refusal?—Yes.

2718. I think I gathered from your evidence that you yourself are a Protestant?—I am.

2719. And it is as a Protestant that you object to pay out of the public funds of that which you consider a "Protestant country" for the ministrations of the Roman Catholic clergyman?—It is.

2720. Could you yourself conscientiously receive the ministrations of a Roman Catholic clergyman?—Oh, dear, no.

2721. Are you then very much surprised that a Roman Catholic prisoner cannot conscientiously receive the ministrations of a Protestant clergyman?—I understand that perfectly.

2722. Is not the object of the visit of the chaplain or the clergyman of any religious persuasion to a prisoner to effect, as far as can be, the reformation and mental improvement of that prisoner?—Let us hope so.

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

2723. Is not that the object?—I presume it would have a tendency that way.

2724. That is the object equally of the Protestant and the Catholic?—No doubt it is.

2725. You told us the Protestant chaplain is paid willingly and heartily by the City of London, because his services in that respect are services to the City of London?—That is so; he attends to 300 prisoners, and we have so few of the other denomination.

2726. But in what respect are the ministrations of a Roman Catholic priest tending to the reformation of a Roman Catholic prisoner less services to the City of London or to the community than the ministrations of the Protestant clergyman?—Let us hope that they are equally beneficial, but we have a much larger proportion of Protestant than of Roman Catholic prisoners.

2727. Then you come back to this, that it is a question of quantity, of the amount of labour to be performed, and not the theological objection that you have in view?—There is really very little or no labour for the Roman Catholic priest; for sometimes we have very few Roman Catholics, although we have occasionally as many as 50 or 56.

2728. I may take the average to be about 50; is it your opinion that that number of prisoners is not sufficient to justify the employment of some person to effect, if possible, their reformation?—Such a person is already employed there; he is there two days in the week administering consolation to those who choose to ask him for it.

2729. But the provision for the 300 is provided by the prison authorities, and that provision is refused in the other case by the prison authorities, and only allowed in a limited form when supplied by voluntary efforts; how do you reconcile that?—Because we have so limited a number of Roman Catholic prisoners, happily for them.

2730. It is merely then a question of quantity; if we had 300 Roman Catholic prisoners and 50 Protestants, would the argument be the same in your mind?—I think not; if we had so large a number of Roman Catholics we should really be called upon to do something more than we do at the present time.

2731. You stated just now that the Roman Catholic had the advantage of the aid of his religious pastor, but if he is only allowed to visit him during the week and not upon the day when all Christian bodies are in the habit of meeting together, is not that a great limitation of the advantage?—I think that might be looked to with some degree of advantage.

2732. Do you think that the body of which you are a member would be likely to move in the matter unless the aid of Parliament was invoked?—I am sure they are very anxious to do that which is right.

2733. If they are so anxious to do what is right, is the fact that they have not answered the application of the Roman Catholic priest during the last 15 months owing to the circumstance that your board have been carefully considering the question during the interval?—I should rather suspect that the blame lies with one of the officials in not having answered the letter.

2734. Do you think that the Court of Aldermen gave directions for the letter to be answered?—I am disposed to believe that they must have done so, for it is not usual for us to allow a letter to remain 15 months unanswered.

2735. If you were to give advice upon such a subject you would advise a renewal of that application, and you would feel certain that an answer would be given?—An answer would be given; I have no doubt of that.

2736. The Rev. Mr. Keens informed us that he only saw a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners who had expressed a wish to see the Roman Catholic clergyman. Do you know whether that is or is not the case?—I do not know.

2737. You have no reason to doubt the accuracy of that statement?—Every facility is given to the reverend gentleman when he applies to the prison authorities, and I am surprised at the statement which he makes.

2738. The clergyman states that the gaoler "gave me a list of the Catholic prisoners, and I asked him to answer me distinctly, whether that list embodied all the Catholic prisoners in the City gaol; he distinctly told me it did not, and he showed me an Act of Parliament, which he seemed to act upon, whereby prisoners had the option of refusing to see the Catholic priest. You thought you had a right to a list of all those who had registered themselves as Catholics? Yes, I thought so from this Act of Parliament. You only received a list of those who expressed a wish to see the Catholic clergyman? That was so."—I presume that is correct.

2739. Is it the case with the Protestant prisoners that their chaplain only sees them when they express a wish to see him?—I cannot answer that question; those are details which the chaplain could speak to.

2740. As a member of the gaol committee, are you not aware that it is the fact that the regularly appointed chaplain of the gaol has full and complete access to the prisoners?—If you put it in that way, I should say certainly there is no objection to his seeing them whenever he likes.

2741. Do you think, looking to the two classes of prisoners, it is right and wise that one class should be visited or not at the clergymen's discretion, and that the other class should be visited or not at their own discretion?—Those questions are inconvenient for me to answer, inasmuch as I have said before, we are a Protestant community and I do not approve of the same license being given to the Roman Catholic as I do to the Protestant.

2742. I may take it that your principle rule of action is this, that being a Protestant you wish to give certain advantages to the Protestant prisoner, which you do not think ought to be given to the Roman Catholics?—We give as much as we can judiciously to the Roman Catholic prisoners.

2743. And you think that the privileges given to the Roman Catholic prisoners should be left to the discretion of the body of aldermen?—It is immaterial to whom it is left; the prisoner may apply to the authorities in order that the priest may have an opportunity of seeing him.

2744. I suppose persons committed to prison are not always of the most religious character?—Very far from it, unfortunately.

2745. And therefore may they not be the persons most likely to require religious instruction and at the same time most likely to be desirous to avoid seeing the person who could best give it?—I could not answer that question.

2746. Is it not the case that any person who

s committed a crime, might from his very iminality be indisposed to receive visits from a erson who would place that criminality in an ncomfortable light?—Yes, but as I observed be- re, a married man who is sentenced to 12 months' nprisonment, tells me that he has been bored by s priest, wanting to give him absolution and nfession, and he says, "I will not have it; I do ot believe there is any man on earth can forgive e my sins."

2747. And you, I presume, would rather sym- thise with that expression of opinion?—I do ot believe anybody on earth has the power of ing so, not even the Pope.

2748. With respect to the books supplied to e Roman Catholic prisoners, have you any mark to make about them?—The Roman atholic priest has an opportunity of selecting em.

2749. Do you know of your own knowledge at the Roman Catholic priest has the opportu- ty of placing books which should be read by oman Catholic prisoners in their hands?—Yes, believe he has.

2750. Do you know whether or not other oks, books which contain doctrines very much posed to the Roman Catholic religion, are aced in the hands of the Roman Catholic pri- ners?—I believe not.

2751. We have had statements directly to the ntrary?—Then I believe it is not the fact; thing is done by us to pervert a man's opinions, ether he is a Dissenter or a Roman Catholic.

2752. Then when it is said that such books as The Lives of the Popes," "The Great Apos- y," and so on, are supplied to the Roman tholic prisoners, that is a mistake?—I should y so.

2753. And you would no more like such books be placed in their hands than you would like ch books as the "Lives of the Saints" to be aced in the hands of the Protestant prisoners? I may say unaffectedly that the magistrates ve expressed their wish not to interfere with y prisoner's religion; you may come in as a oman Catholic, and you may leave as a Roman atholic; it is not our wish to make any con- rts at all.

2754. If books hostile to the Roman Catholic ligion are placed in the cells of the Roman atholic prisoners, that is contrary to the wish the magistrates?—Undoubtedly; unmistake- ly, I may say.

2755. And probably after what has passed in s Committee, you would think it your duty to stitute inquiries and to remove any such cause complaint?—I certainly shall.

2756. Your objection to Divine service on the nday being afforded to the Roman Catholic soners, rather rested upon your insufficient quaintance at the present moment with the t of whether the discipline of the prison would injuriously affected by it than upon any ier ground?—To some extent it would the officers would be very much incon- nienced likewise, I apprehend, by having o duties to perform at various times; but it is matter that requires further consideration. I ould be happy, as far as I can, to relieve the man Catholic prisoner from any inconveniences t he may suffer in his religious creed, but I still of opinion that we must not attempt to rease that.

2757. You do not doubt that the assembling of ourselves together is a duty in which Christians may very properly practice, and thereby receive instruction, to their great spiritual benefit?—It is very likely indeed.

2758. If you deny that privilege to a class of religionists who have the misfortune to differ from you, it is from some high religious motive?—I could not quite admit what my feelings are upon that point.

2759. But at the same time you will probably admit that it is possible that Roman Catholic prisoners would be better reached by the ministrations of clergymen of their own faith, than by those of a clergyman whose doctrines they had been taught to disagree with from their earliest years?—Very possibly.

2760. But upon some higher principle you do not think it right that the State should pay, or that the ratepayers should pay, for the services of those who, though they might best reach the Roman Catholic prisoners, are not at the same time members of the Established Church?—I give you the same answer that I have given you before, namely, that I am a Protestant, and that I do not wish to encourage that which I consider an error.

2761. And that I believe would, in fact, apply if, instead of having 50 Roman Catholic and 300 Protestant prisoners, the proportions were quite reversed?—No; I think it might be ameliorated a little if the disproportion was so large.

2762. Mr. Downing.] I think I understood you to say that Roman Catholics in the prison have expressed to you that they did not wish to be troubled by the visits of the priest?—Yes.

2763. Was that the case to which you have just now referred, of the man who spoke to you within the last 48 hours?—No; it happened some time ago now.

2764. Are you able to give the name of the prisoner?—No, I cannot; I do not know the name of a single prisoner there; they are all numbered.

2765. You said that you did not think that the Roman Catholic clergyman had a right of access to the register?—He has a copy of it.

2766. He has a right, as I understand you, to ask for a copy?—Yes; which has never been refused him.

2767. To have a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol?—Yes.

2768. Why has he not a right of access to the register?—Simply because we do not choose our books to be investigated, I suppose.

2769. By the Roman Catholic priest?—By the Roman Catholic priest, I suppose; I do not know whether I am right in giving even that opinion.

2770. I think I understood you to say that there was a distinction between Catholic Dissenters and other Dissenters?—Yes; inasmuch as the Roman Catholic has a priest of his own persuasion to visit him in the prison, and none of the other Dissenters have their own ministers to attend them, nor has it ever been applied for.

2771. Was that the only distinction you had in your mind at the time you gave that answer?—That was the distinction.

2772. Your last answer to an honourable Member was, that if there was a larger number of Roman Catholic prisoners, you thought that would justify you in altering your opinion?—It would not justify me exactly; it would ameliorate my impression.

Mr. Alderman J. Carter.

2 May 1870.

2773. What number of Roman Catholics would you have, in your mind, which would justify you in ameliorating that opinion?—I could not tell you that; it is impossible for me to speak to a certain number.

2774. Do you think if you had only 10 Protestants in the gaol that would alter your opinion?—No; I do not think that a hypothetical case ought to be put to me.

2775. Why not?—Because it is not likely to occur.

2776. I will take the case of Swaffham, in Norfolk?—Swaffham is not the City of London.

2777. Do you confine your evidence to the City of London?—I am speaking with regard to Holloway Gaol, which I am called to give evidence upon.

2778. But I want to know how many Roman Catholics you would consider would justify you in appointing a chaplain to a gaol?—I have not determined upon any number.

2779. Can you give no number which you would think sufficient?—I have not determined in my own mind upon that point.

2780. Are you intending to determine upon it?—Perhaps I may.

2781. Have you ever considered the question at all?—Perhaps I have.

2782. Will you give me the result of your consideration. I put to you a case: supposing there were a great disproportion between the number of Roman Catholics and Protestants in a gaol, the Roman Catholics being in a large majority?—I consider that I am not bound to answer a hypothetical case.

2783. In fact, you have a conscientious objection to seeing a Roman Catholic clergyman a paid officer attending to the wants of a prison?—Most unquestionably I have.

2784. And you would not have the ratepayers of the district taxed for his payment?—I think I have answered that question before.

2785. Allow me to ask you if the Roman Catholic parishioners of a district, and resident in it, pay taxes?—Yes, I presume they do; I have been asked that before.

2786. Have you ever been in Ireland?—I have.

2787. I suppose you know that Ireland is a Roman Catholic country as compared with other creeds?—Yes.

2788. And I suppose you are aware that upon boards of guardians and other places the great majority are Roman Catholics?—I do not know; I have merely visited that property which the City of London has some control over.

2789. Supposing that is the fact; will yo allow that Roman Catholics have conscientiou opinions also as well as Protestants?—Yes.

2790. And you might believe that a Roma Catholic is of opinion that you are in error, ju as you are of opinion as regards the Roma Catholic that he is in error?—Yes; every ma has his own belief.

2791. Would you be surprised to hear that, i Ireland, Protestant clergymen are nominated gaols and poorhouses where there are only tw or three Protestants, and sometimes only one, b the Roman Catholic guardians?—It may be so.

2792. Are you surprised to hear that?—I a not surprised at anything that happens in Irelan 2793. Do you not think that you might ado that practice with great advantage?—I should l very sorry to copy them at all; I should not b disposed to copy their example in any way.

2794. Mr. O'Reilly.] Do I understand that yo are stating a fact of your own knowledge wh you say that the books, the names of which ha been given to you, or books of a similar characte are not given to the Roman Catholic prisoners the prison at Holloway?—I should say so dec dedly; and I say so again, that, with the co currence of the magistrates, it is not permitted.

2795. Then I must repeat my question, f there is a variation in your answer; do you stat as a fact, that they are not, or only that they a not with the concurrence of the magistrates?—My firm impression is that they are not offere at all.

2796. Do you assert, as a matter of fact, th the books in question, or books of a similar ch racter, are not supplied to the Roman Catho prisoners in the prison at Holloway?—I shou certainly say no, and, to the best of my belief, am right in so saying.

2797. Mr. Matthews.] Are not the books su plied to the prisoners by the schoolmaster?—Ye and the chaplain and the Roman Catholic prie

2798. Are not the books actually taken to t cell by the schoolmaster?—I do not know tha this is a matter of detail which I cannot go int 2799. Are you aware of the fact that an app cation was made by the Roman Catholic prie Mr. Keens, to the gaol committee objecting to asking for a different class of books to be pr vided?—I do not remember; I am not awa of it.

2800. Did you ever yourself inspect the boo that were supplied to the prisoners in their cell —I have not done so, naturally supposing th they were such as ought to have been supplied

The Reverend James Purdon, Examined.

Rev. J. Purdon.

2801. Chairman.] You visit the County Prison at Maidstone, do you not?—Yes, I do.

2802. How long have you been in the habit of visiting that prison?—For three and a-half years.

2803. What was the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners in that gaol?—The average daily number of Roman Catholic prisoners is about 36 men and 11 women.

2804. An average of between 45 and 50?—Yes.

2805. Has the number of men been larger at any time than that?—Yes, at exceptional times; during the time of hopping there are a larger number of Catholics there; and at those times I think the number of male prisoners has risen 70, and of female prisoners to 15 or 16.

2806. At such times then, that would give y a much higher average?—Yes, just at that tim 2807. What would be the general character the offences for which those people would be co mitted?—The general character is not for a very serious crime; mostly for petty theft a fighting, and things of that sort.

2808. Would you, as a general rule, class th as hardened offenders?—Some might be, but i the general body of them.

2809. Whom did you succeed in this prison? I succeeded a Sicilian priest, Father Emanuel 2810. I

2810. Did he speak English?—Yes, he spoke English very well.

2811. How long had he been visiting the prison?—For five or six years before I came.

2812. And you succeeded him as priest to that prison?—Yes.

2813. How many times do you visit the prison?—I visit the prison every day, and twice upon Sunday.

2814. What is the average duration of your attendance upon week-days?—About half-an-hour; from 20 minutes to half-an-hour; and on Saturdays, in addition to instruction and prayers in the morning, I give about an hour and a half in the middle of the day.

2815. On Sundays what service do you perform?—The amount of time altogether, taking the whole day, would be about two hours, I should think. I say mass there, and have morning prayers and instruction, and evening prayers in the afternoon.

2816. Have you instruction in the afternoon?—No.

2817. Can the men and women be assembled together in the same chapel?—No, there is not accommodation for that.

2818. What arrangements do you make for the women on Sunday?—The women simply have prayers read to them by a governess, whom I have to pay; she is recognised by the prison authorities, and is under Government inspection. She is the governess of the mission school, and is allowed to read prayers to the women on Sundays. There is also a governess for the gaol, but she is not a Catholic governess.

2819. The Catholic governess, so far as she can, takes your place on a Sunday amongst the women?—Yes, on the Sundays, and on the week mornings, when I am with the men.

2820. Have you to pay the governess for that service?—Yes, I have.

2821. You are obliged to visit the men and the women alternately?—I visit them alternately.

2822. Have you any complaint with reference to the books supplied in the prison?—I have no complaint whatever with regard to the books supplied, but I have a complaint with regard to the books that are withheld. The visiting justices very kindly, some time ago, recognised an exceedingly excellent class of Roman Catholic books, but some different arrangement subsequently took place in the discipline of the prison, which caused the visiting justices to depart from their original recognition of those books, and the only books that are now provided, are the Prayer Book, the Catechism, and the Testament.

2823. Those books of which you spoke were of an instructive and, at the same time, of an entertaining character?—Yes, they were books of such a character as are supplied to the Protestant prisoners now; such books as the "Leisure Hour," and the "Sunday at Home," and different books of that kind.

2824. Had those books been supplied by the Roman Catholic clergyman himself?—Yes, out of his own means, and recognised by the visiting justices.

2825. When those books were worn out, did he wish to replace them by another set?—Yes, and it was refused, on the ground that as the prison was not under the same system of discipline as it had been previously, it could not be permitted.

2826. But books of an analogous character, of a Protestant tendency, are given to the Protestant prisoners under the new system, are they not?—Yes, they are.

2827. Do you see any reason why you should not have the same advantage as the Protestant chaplain has, to have useful and entertaining books given to your prisoners?—That is the principal grievance I have, as far as the working of the prison is concerned.

2828. You have no complaint to make of the authorities, I believe?—None whatever; I am treated with the greatest possible courtesy and respect.

2829. Have the authorities provided you with the necessary appliances for Divine worship on Sunday?—Not at all.

2830. Have you yourself provided them?—Yes, the vestments and altar furniture, and everything required for the service of the Church.

2831. Might I ask if those are liberally supplied?—They are not supplied in sufficient quantity; they are just barely necessary for the most simple form of service which can be performed.

2832. How much did it cost you to supply those necessaries?—They have been supplied from time to time; I should think if the cost was all accumulated together it would be, at the very least, 50 l.

2833. If you had them supplied according to your own wish and requirement, what would it cost?—If we had the service fully carried out, as it is in many prisons, it would be very much more expensive, as that would imply a great many more articles which would be necessary for the performance of the service; and that, I should think, would range from 100 l. to 150 l.; not in addition, but including those things which we have already.

2834. Say 100 l., would that be a fair average?—Yes, quite so.

2835. Is your own mission a poor or a rich mission?—A very poor mission.

2836. Just tell the Committee what it consists of; is it composed of working people, or of what class of people?—They are people principally employed in labouring in the fields, we have no large manufactories at all; it is a large agricultural neighbourhood, and a great many of my congregation depend principally for their support on the preparation of the hops.

2837. Do you receive any remuneration for the service that you give in the prison?—Not the slightest.

2838. Have you ever applied for any?—My predecessor applied, and I have done so also.

2839. Will you state to the Committee the nature of your application?—My predecessor applied for a salary, and a great correspondence took place between him and the justices, placing the merits of the question in every possible light.

2840. You have applied yourself, you state?—Yes; I have applied once, about a year and a half ago.

2841. No difference of feeling took place between you and the authorities, I presume, upon that point?—Not the slightest.

2842. How were you received?—I was most courteously replied to by Lord Hardinge, more so even, perhaps, than the application deserved.

2843. Lord Hardinge replied to you as a gentleman, and spoke courteously of your sect, and yet the application was refused?—Yes, it was refused on the ground that there was not a uniform opinion existing amongst the justices with regard to the salary; I think that was the ground alleged.

Rev. J. Purdon. 2 May 1870.

2844. At any rate you were respectfully refused?—Yes, very much so.

2845. Your only complaint is that you were refused, and not of the form of the refusal?—Yes; that was so.

2846. Some persons may be under the idea that the Catholics themselves are able not only to provide all those necessaries for Divine worship upon the Sunday, and other ministrations, but that they are able to pay the Catholic clergyman themselves; now will you just give me an idea of your receipts from your congregation; your professional income, in fact?—We are obliged to ask for some contributions at the door as well as at the offertory, and my collection on Sunday averages about 12*s.* a week, and out of that I have to provide ministration for three unions, one of the largest county lunatic asylums, three hospitals, a barracks, and my own mission and schools, and I have other things to attend to as well.

2847. Sometimes you are paid for your attendance at the barracks when there are soldiers there, are you not?—Yes; but they have been removed, and for some time we have not had sufficient soldiers there to entitle me to payment; 25 entitles me to payment.

2848. That is a serious loss to you?—Yes; I am obliged to take in pupils to keep things going at all.

2849. You do not think that your congregation could supply a chaplain for the prisoners in this gaol?—I think the chaplain has to supply them generally.

2850. Is it not the fact that from the sympathy expressed by the clergyman with the prisoners, he very frequently has claims made upon his scanty resources?—It is a constant drag upon him.

2851. So that he gets nothing and is asked for everything?—Yes.

2852. Would you venture to say that the result of your ministration to those people is really an advantage to them?—I trust it is; I may say that sometimes I am called in to settle a question with a quarrelsome prisoner, and things of that kind, and they will generally listen to my advice; in one or two cases of this kind I have been successful in that way, merely externally with regard to my influence with the prisoner.

2853. Will you just state to the Committee under what circumstances of that kind you have been called into the prison?—Some time ago there was a very violent man who came from Deptford, a man who had made several violent attacks upon the police, and he was exceedingly indignant against a warder in the prison, who had been rather hard upon him, and I believe if he had got the warder he would have done him some grievous bodily injury. They tried every kind of persuasion, and at last I was called in, and I think since then the man would acknowledge himself that he has tried to behave better and to mend his conduct; he was an unruly man before, and since then he has been quiet. And in other cases the matron frequently applies to me when she gets an unruly subject, to advise her; I may say that I cannot speak too highly both of the matron and of the chaplain; they have called upon me frequently with regard to matters of that kind.

2854. Your desire is to maintain the authority of the officers of the prison, and to make the prisoners respectful and docile?—Entirely so.

2855. And to promote, as far as you can, the discipline of the prison?—Decidedly.

2856. Do you think that you are entitled to a salary for your work?—I think so, most certainly.

2857. In fact, you consider that it is not fair to receive your services, which must be given, without giving you adequate remuneration?—I think not.

2858. Sir John Pakington.] You spoke just now of having spent 50*l.* for books and other appliances for Catholic worship; I think I understood you to state that that was the aggregate amount of what had been spent; over what period of time was that spread?—I should think that that period of time would be almost since the prison has been visited, because vestments and those sort of things are very expensive; but being only used once in the week, namely, on Sunday, they last a long time.

2859. You spoke of books also?—At present some of the books used by the prisoners are provided by the priest himself; but I spoke of the ornamental things, the crucifix, &c.

2860. But the books required for the prisoners are provided by the authorities, are they not?—The books, which alone are provided by the authorities of the prison, are simply the Testament, a small Prayer Book ("The Garden of the Soul," as it is called), and also an instructive book called the "Poor Man's Catechism," but no book of an entertaining and instructive nature is allowed by the visiting justices to the Catholic prisoners, although a similar kind of book is allowed to the Protestant prisoners.

2861. The books you have mentioned are the essential books for the religious worship of the Roman Catholic prisoners?—Yes, they correspond exactly with the Book of Common Prayer and the Protestant Bible.

2862. Is there a proper place assigned to you for the care of your vestments, and other things of that sort?—There is a cupboard provided.

2863. Then you mentioned with regard to your expenditure, that if the service was carried out properly, as in many prisons, the expenditure would amount to from 100*l.* to 150*l*; what prisons did you refer to?—When using the word "prisons," perhaps I did not speak quite correctly I refer especially to the large county prison at Wakefield, because the present chaplain at Maidstone was chaplain at the Wakefield Prison, and he has told me (I am speaking on his authority how well the place is arranged, and even elaborately decorated, and, therefore, I spoke perhaps incorrectly in saying "prisons," when I myself only referred to one; I can speak from my own experience of the convict prison at Gibraltar, in which I served for some time, and there they have everything very nicely arranged.

2864. Wakefield, if I remember rightly, is not only an important county prison, but I think it is a prison to which Government convicts are admitted under contract with Government, is it not?—I do not know that.

2865. But when you use the expression "a in many prisons," I wish to know if you can specify them?—I must recall the expression "many," as it escaped from me unguardedly; I know now it is the fact in Wakefield, and I believe it be so in other prisons.

2866. Do not suppose that I want to pin you your words, but I wished to know whether it was within your knowledge that there were ther prisons where the full Roman Catholic rorship was allowed to be carried out. In making our explanation, you allude chiefly to the Wakeeld prison, do you not?—Yes.

2867. Did I rightly understand you to say, in nswer to a question put by the honourable hairman, that you are allowed in the Maidstone rison to assemble the Roman Catholic prisoners n Sundays for associated worship?—Yes, but I m not able to have the women and men together.

2868. But you are allowed to have the men?—Yes, I am allowed to assemble the men gether.

2869. What is the average number of the male oman Catholic prisoners?—The average number one time ranges from 38 up to 50 men.

2870. What apartment is assigned to you for he purpose of associated Roman Catholic worip?—It is a room which we use exclusively r that purpose; it is simply a room in the rison.

2871. Is it sufficiently large for the purpose? It would not hold conveniently a very large umber.

2872. That room is assigned to you by the uthorities of the prison for that purpose?—Yes, d it is not used for any other purpose.

2873. You told the Committee that you and our predecessor had made frequent applications r a salary, and I understand you to say that ose applications were made to the visiting jus-es of the prison?—Yes, or as I should put it, the magistrates. The visiting justices are frequently magistrates, I believe; but the applications for salary were made to the magistrates.

2874. I was going to ask you whether those plications were made only to the visiting jus-es, whom you rightly represent as magistrates, whether they were made to the court of uarter sessions?—I think the applications have en brought before the court of quarter sessons.

2875. Was your own application brought be-re the court?—I think so. I am not quite re about that.

2876. Is it within your own knowledge that y division was taken upon that application?—am not aware of that. I received an answer om Lord Hardinge, stating that the visiting stices saw no reason to change their former decions, and that they could not grant a salary.

2877. In fact, your answer amounts to this, at upon more than one occasion an application s been made to the magistrates assembled in uarter sessions, and that each application has en declined?—It has been deferred or refused.

2878. A salary has not been given?—It has t been given.

2879. You stated that your average income m the offertory was 12 s. a week, out of which u had various payments to make?—Yes.

2880. Which would leave you a very limited ome?—Yes.

2881. I wish to ask you if you have any other ofessional income as a Roman Catholic priest? I take pupils, and when there are soldiers I ve a capitation grant according to the number t may be in the Maidstone Barracks; but if number does not come up to 25, I have no .60.

salary whatever. We have the Horse Artillery in Maidstone, but there are very few Catholics in that regiment.

2882. I wanted to know whether you have any other strictly professional income?—I have the pew rents.

2883. What might they amount to?—They might amount to about 8*l.* or 10*l.*

2884. Irrespective of the prison, what is the district, the spiritual care of which is under your charge?—I should think I have about eight or ten miles all round Maidstone.

2885. Your mission includes the town, does it not?—The town and the neighbourhood. My mission extends to Tunbridge Wells, or touches upon it, and also to Chatham.

2886. Have you a Roman Catholic chapel in Maidstone?—We only use the school; we have a small oratory in the house registered for marriages, but we have no regular chapel.

2887. Does the spiritual care of that district call upon you for a great amount of your time?—Yes, as much as I can give to it.

2888. How often do you attend at the prison?—Every day except Monday, unless I am detained by sickness.

2889. Do you have service once or twice on Sundays?—Twice on the Sunday.

2890. Have you associated worship on any day except Sunday?—Every day we have the men collected together for prayers and instruction.

2891. With the full sanction of the authorities of the prison?—Yes, and there is not the slightest difficulty made.

2892. Your answer to the honourable Chairman was that you had no reason to complain of the authorities of Maidstone Gaol, excepting that you are not allowed a salary to remunerate you for your labour?—That is so.

2893. Mr. Talbot.] I am very much pleased to find that you have made no charge whatever, except upon two subjects; one being the subject of the books, and the other the salary. I will take them seriatim, and ask you in the first place with reference to the books. You stated that there had been a change in the system with regard to the books?—Yes, certain books are not allowed now, which were allowed before.

2894. Will you inform the Committee what was the reason for that change?—I do not see the force of the reason which has been given, as it places the Catholic prisoners in a disadvantageous position in comparison with the Protestant prisoners.

2895. What is the nature of the change exactly?—When my predecessor had been some little time in the prison, he applied to the magistrates, and presented a list of books, which received their sanction; those were books corresponding with various publications which come out like the "Leisure Hour." There are religious and historical books or pamphlets which the Protestant prisoners are allowed to read, and this was a similar class of book to that, and was recognised by the visiting justices. That permission has been rescinded now, and the Catholic prisoners are confined to their devotional books. They have no books whatsoever for their amusement and instruction, except those tending directly towards doctrinal subjects, or relating to the Holy Scriptures, which is rather a disadvantage, and I daresay it might be removed. I applied myself, and I was told that as there was a re-arrangement in the discipline of the prison, my request could not be granted; but I consider that that makes an inequality between the Catholic and Protestant prisoners.

2896. I suppose, with regard to secular books, you would consider that the same secular books should apply to all classes of prisoners?—I should object to a certain class of secular books; there are many things which appear in the "Leisure Hour" which I should have a decided objection to a prisoner reading, and in that feeling I am sympathised with by the chaplain; he would banish that kind of thing, the same as I would.

2897. Do you mean to say that the Roman Catholic prisoners can only read those books?—They can take those books if they like to read them.

2898. But you would object to the prisoners reading such books, on account of their faith?—The prisoners could not always form a right opinion upon the points treated of in such books.

2899. Supposing you applied to the visiting justices for leave for the Roman Catholic prisoners to have a certain number of books besides the devotional books, such books to be approved by them, and that was granted, that would satisfy you?—Quite so.

2900. You have stated that you made that application?—I made that application, and it was refused.

2901. Would it not be worth while to try again?—I might try again, and no doubt it would be granted.

2902. Then, with regard to the question of salary, I think your mind was not quite clear about the body to which your application had been made; but I think you would, probably, understand that if an application had been frequently made to the court of quarter sessions, and had not been accepted by them, the visiting justices would not then think it worth while to bring it again before the court?—I scarcely understand your question.

2903. You do not know that those applications have been made to the court?—They have been made to the court from time to time.

2904. You do not know that your own application was so made?—My own application, I believe, was referred to that court.

2905. You believe so, but you are not quite sure?—I am not quite sure; I might be mistaken.

2906. And you stated also that one claim which you had for a salary was, that you had so many duties to perform in the various parts of Maidstone and the neighbourhood?—That is so.

2907. But the magistrates of the prison have nothing to do with your other parochial duties?—No, but it might be taken into consideration; for instance, if I were receiving a salary for the gaol, I should be very much more bound to go to the gaol than I am now; now, if my mission duties call me in another direction I let the gaol go unattended.

2908. The magistrates do not require you to attend at the gaol at any particular time, I believe?—No, they could not do that without giving a salary.

2909. Therefore, if the poverty of the district makes you obliged to visit the lunatic asylum, the barracks, and your own people, you cannot expect the magistrates to take that into consideration when they are considering the question of the salary?—I think, with regard to giving a salary to the chaplain, a salary should be given to me sufficient to enable me to keep another priest, because the gaol would require from a paid chaplain a very great amount of attention and care, which cannot now be given to it as it should be. For instance, now I only see those men who express a wish to see me. I give them instruction every morning, and after instruction I ask if any other wish to see me; but to attend properly to the Catholic prisoners, I ought to see each one, whether he wished to see me or not. I cannot do my duty to the gaol now, because I am called away in other directions.

2910. Would you think that the number of Roman Catholics in Maidstone Gaol is sufficient to warrant the payment of a Roman Catholic chaplain?—I think so. I think the reformation of a large number of men requires labour of that kind.

2911. You have only about 50 men?—That is about the average.

2912. If the chaplain of the gaol can attend to 400 prisoners, surely you can attend to 50 with very much less labour?—But he has help besides his own labour; he has a schoolmaster to assist him.

2913. One object of this Committee is to ascertain whether a Roman Catholic chaplain should be paid in the prisons or not; and one point which we must arrive at before we come to a conclusion is with reference to the number. I ask you whether you think that the number of prisoners in Maidstone Gaol is, on an average, sufficient to warrant the payment of one man to attend to them, and to do nothing else?—I should think so.

2914. The average number is between 40 and 50, and you would think that that was a sufficient number to take up the whole time of a priest?—Not quite sufficient to take up his whole time, but sufficient to give him plenty of work. If there are 25 soldiers they allow a capitation grant.

2915. But you are not expected to attend to them alone?—No, but you must attend to them at all events.

2916. Lord Henley.] Do you know what is the amount of the capitation grant in the case of the soldiers?—Ten shillings a head for the first 25 and beyond that I do not know how the scale changes.

2917. If there are 25 soldiers stationed at the barracks for a year, you have 10*s.* a head?—Yes.

2918. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Would that scale satisfy you in the case of prisoners?—No.

2919. What reason would you give for its not satisfying you?—Because the prisoners would require very much more attention; they are there for a different object; they are there to be reformed and to receive instruction and guidance; you must treat them in a different manner from what you would treat soldiers.

2920. Do you know what the chaplain's salary is?—£.250 a year, with a house.

2921. Do you know the average number of prisoners that he has to attend to?—I should think about 400 or 500.

2922. Would you be satisfied to be paid upon the same scale as the chaplain is, in proportion to the number?—No, scarcely; it would depend upon the amount of work which you would require from me; the Protestant chaplain has to give service every day, and of course there is a certain amount of correspondence which would fall upon him; and the ain we have had a large number of executions, hich bring a great amount of extra labour, and hich would imply, in the case of a Catholic exe- tion, my getting the assistance of another ergyman.

2923. Do you think that you ought to be paid on a higher scale than the chaplain? — I think e prison authorities ought to give me 100*l.* or 20*l.* a year.

2924. That would be something more than 2*l.* head for every Roman Catholic prisoner?—But do not think that it should be calculated in that ay, it should be the value of my labour; you nploy an educated gentleman to look after the isoners, and I think his salary should be perior to that of a warder.

2925. Then you do not agree with the evi- nce that has been given us, that a capitation ant would be satisfactory?—I do not think so, r that would almost give me an interest in ime.

2926. Then with regard to the Creed Register, have you heard any complaints of persons coming in under one religion and afterwards changing, and of there being any difficulty in changing?— That has been perfectly mutual between us; sometimes persons have entered themselves as Protestants, and the chaplain has got them handed over to me; I have had the greatest attention and kindness from all the officials in any matter of that kind. A great deal has been done for the Catholic prisoners by the Prisoners' Aid Society, which has no Catholic contributor there except myself; so I do not think that in any way any inducement has been held out to the Catholic prisoners. I think it is due to the Protestant chaplain to say that.

2927. There has been no possible source of grievance as regards yourself, except the fact that you are not placed upon a proper pecuniary footing?—That is so.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., in the Chair.

The Rev. Frederick Myers, called in; and Examined.

Rev. F. Myers. —— 5 May 1870.

2928. Chairman.] You are a Roman Catholic clergyman in the city of Bristol, I believe?—I am.

2929. Do you visit any gaol in that town?—Yes, I visit the City Bridewell.

2930. How long have you been in the habit of visiting that prison?—About three years and six months.

2931. Do you go without invitation, or does your visit depend upon invitation?—I never go unless sent for by an official letter from the governor, through the clerk.

2932. In the year 1867, how many times were you invited to attend?—Twice.

2933. In 1868, how many times were you invited?—Three times.

2934. In 1869, how many times?—About twice.

2935. Have you been invited this year?—No.

2936. What is the daily average number of Catholic prisoners in the City Bridewell?—I do not know; I can only judge from the official report; but until I saw the report I had no idea how many there had been in the prison.

2937. You do not know how many there are?—I never know; I asked the governor on one occasion, and he said, "Very few," and I asked him, "What do you mean by very few," and he said, "About four or five at present."

2938. Do you think that that statement was correct?—I really cannot tell.

2939. Have you access to the register?—I have no access to it.

2940. Is it furnished to you when you go to the prison?—No.

2941. Do you think, by law, that you, as the permitted priest, ought to see it?—I did not think so.

2942. First, let me ask you, does any other Catholic clergyman ever visit the prisoners in the gaol?—No.

2943. So that in the case of a prisoner requiring the assistance of a clergyman, you are the Catholic priest sent for?—Yes; the prison comes within my district by an arrangement made between the Catholic clergymen. When I took the district, I wrote to the governor of the prison, requesting that if there were any sick calls to the prison, he would address them to the Reverend F. Myers, St. Joseph's.

2944. The 4th section of the Act 26th and 27th of Victoria, chapter 79, is as follows:—"The keeper, or other person performing the duties of keeper of a prison, on receiving into his custody any prisoner shall enter his name in a book to be provided for the purpose, with the addition of the Church or religious persuasion to which the prisoner shall declare himself to belong, and the said keeper or other person shall from time to time give to any minister appointed or permitted to visit prisoners in the prison a list of the prisoners so declared to belong to the Church or persuasion of such minister, and no such minister shall be permitted to attend or visit any prisoner belonging to any religious persuasion differing from that to which such minister belongs;" do you think that that would confer the right upon you (you being the clergyman permitted to visit that prison) to obtain from the authorities of the prison a list of the prisoners of your denomination?—I suppose so; but I did not read it in that way.

2945. It has never been tendered to you?—No, it has not.

2946. In 1867 were you called in to visit a man named Dwyer?—Yes.

2947. Would you tell the Committee the circumstances under which you visited that man?—The mother came to me and told me that her son was dying of typhus fever, and that she had been sent for, and that she had asked for a priest to be sent for.

2948. Is the mother a Catholic?—The mother is a Catholic. Then the day after that I received a notice from the clerk requesting me to go to the gaol and visit the prisoner, Thomas Dwyer. I went the same day that I received the letter, and I found the prisoner in the infirmary. He was delirious; he could make no recognition of me whatever; he could not speak a word, so that I could do nothing whatever for him.

2949. And he died in that state?—He died two or three days afterwards.

2950. Have you any reason to know that that prisoner, Thomas Dwyer, expressed any desire to see a Catholic clergyman?—Nothing more than han what I learnt from the mother. The mother nformed me that as soon as her son went into he prison she said, "Now, Thomas, if you are ver ill, be sure you send for the priest;" and she elieved he would have sent, and did send, for he priest; for on the day when she saw him, when he was ill with typhus fever, he threw is arms around her neck, and said, "Oh, nother, the priest!" and in consequence of that he then went to the governor and said, "Why vas not the priest sent?" She tells me that the varder said, "What good will a priest do; he as got the chaplain?" but she insisted so strongly ipon a priest being sent for, that at last the governor said, "Very well, woman, you shall ave your wish."

2951. Was it the governor or a warder who aid that?—It was the warder who said, "What ood will a priest do; he has got the chaplain"; ut the governor was present.

2952. Were you sent for on that day or a ubsequent day?—I received the letter by post, nd I am rather inclined to think that it was wo days afterwards, for his mother, I think, saw im upon the Saturday; and I received notice n the Monday following.

2953. At any rate, the man was delirious when ou saw him, and could not understand anyhing?—He was delirious, and understood othing.

2954. Is the mother a woman of such character hat you could rely upon her statement?—I hink so.

2955. You know nothing to the contrary?—know nothing to the contrary.

2956. In 1868, did you by chance visit a voman named Mary Sullivan?—Yes.

2957. Will you state to the Committee the ircumstances connected with that case?—I reeived a letter from the clerk, requesting me to isit a youth of the name of Maws, and when I rrived at the prison, the governor said to me, "There is another case here that I should like you o see. A poor woman is now dying. I suppose ner to be a Roman Catholic from her name of Sullivan, but she has not asked for you, and I ake upon myself the responsibility of sending you to her." He said, "You have no time to ose, for if she is not dead, and I am afraid she s, she must be very near it." I went to the nfirmary and saw this poor woman. She was peechless and dying, and showed no signs of ecognition; I spoke to her and said some prayers; but she made no sign whatever of recognition. Towards the end of my visit, fter I had been with her some five minutes, he opened her eyes and saw at once that I was Catholic priest, and showed signs of recogition and consciousness. She was unable to speak, ut I did what I could in the way of preparing er for death, and begging her to be contrite for er sins, and so forth, during which time the poor reature's eyes streamed with tears. She closed er eyes very soon afterwards, and before I left he gaol, as the governor told me afterwards, she vas dead. It was a mere chance that I saw her. was not sent for to see this person, but to see nother prisoner, and being there, the governor uggested that I should see this woman.

2958. Is it the fact that when you did see any risoners who were dangerously ill, they were ctually in their last moments?—Yes, and this s just an example.

Rev. F. Myers. 5 May 1870.

2960. Did you ever make any application to the authorities in any way to be allowed to visit the prisoner without being specially sent for?—No formal application; it would not be fair to say that I have ever made a formal application.

2961. Formal or otherwise, have you ever made an application?—I will tell the Committee what I did: seeing that my visiting these prisoners was so precarious, and that they might die without having the last rites of the church, I had a conversation with Mr. Gardner, the governor, and I said, "You never send for me except to see dead or dying prisoners; would it not be better to have me appointed chaplain by the visiting justices;" and he replied "No;" I said, "Why not?" and he said, "There are not a sufficient number of Catholics to warrant a Catholic priest being appointed, and if the matter was brought before the justices they would never consent to it; and, secondly, there is no need of it; you shall see the prisoners whenever you choose; when you come here, you shall see them all."

2962. When did that conversation take place?—About May or June last year, and then I said, "How am I to know who the Catholic prisoners are?" and he said, "That is your matter; I am not allowed to let you look at the list;" but he said, "I will tell you what I will do; I will give authority to my clerk to copy out the names for you, so that when you come again he will give you a list." About a month afterwards I went and asked especially to see the governor, when I reminded him of his promise, and of his offer; he took me to the office, and asked me to read the rules and regulations of the prison, and pointed out one to the effect that no prisoner shall see any minister other than a minister of the Established Church, except he or she shall have expressly desired to do so; so he said, "You see that I can do nothing in the matter, though I am very willing to do everything I can for you; and unless the prisoners send for you each time, I shall not have power to let you visit them."

2963. During last year did you make application to any of the justices in reference to this matter?—Yes, I did, but not in any formal way. I called upon one of the visiting justices, Mr. Thomas Canning, and I asked him if he could obtain for me, first of all, the number of Catholics in the gaol, and, secondly, whether he would bring this matter before the justices, in order to have me appointed chaplain; and he said, "Leave it in my hands," and he undertook, as I understood, to ascertain what number of Catholics there were in the prison, and also to bring the matter before the justices.

2964. Was that in October?—About October.

2965. Though informally, you intended that he should be the medium through whom you would communicate directly with the justices?—Yes, and I also wished to sound him to see what prospect there was of the matter being arranged.

2966. Has the question been settled?—Nothing has been done, and I thought it only fair to write and ask him what he had done in the matter, so I wrote about a fortnight since. I had seen him repeatedly, but he never once alluded to the subject. I received an answer to my letter, saying that he would bring the matter before the magistrates at their next meeting.

Rev. F. Myers. 5 May 1870.

2967. Have you ever been told that prisoners have desired to see you, and that, nevertheless, you have not been sent for?—Yes, I have.

2969. Some of the prisoners even rebuked you for not having attended?—They did; I also suspected that the authorities did not send for me immediately when prisoners asked for me in the prison, from this fact: that it generally happened that when I went to the prison by express notice, a warder came and said, that there was first one wanted to see me, and then another wanted to see me. I used to ask myself the question, "How can they know that I am in the gaol?" and therefore I thought it must have been that their petitions were accumulating; that the authorities did not send immediately, but waited until some other opportunity, until the priest came, and then they allowed me to see these persons.

2970. If it was the fact that you were only allowed to see those prisoners who specially asked for you, I need scarcely ask whether you are allowed to hold Catholic worship upon the Sunday?—Nothing of the sort; I had no idea of such a thing; I never went there, except I was specially sent for.

2971. You despair, then, of any such application being successful?—I do not know about that; I certainly never entertained the idea.

2972. It was so desperate?—Yes.

2973. Of course, there is Protestant worship upon the Sunday?—Yes; there is a regular chaplain.

2974. How many times is there Protestant service upon upon the Sunday?—Twice, I believe.

2975. Is the Protestant worship attended by the Catholic prisoners?—Always.

2976. How do you know?—They have told me so when I have visited them in the gaol; and they have put this forward as a grievance, and consulted me with reference to their going to the Protestant service.

2977. What have they said to you?—They have asked whether it was allowable, and so forth.

2978. You could not give it your sanction?—I could not give it my sanction; but I saw that it was no use opposing them, for their answer invariably was, "What are we to do; we cannot bear the tedium of being locked up in our cells all day;" they no doubt do look upon it as a break in the monotony of their confinement to be allowed to go out of their cells to church.

2979. Is the cellular system carried out in that prison?—Yes, it is.

2980. Therefore it is a positive blessing to the prisoners to be allowed to go out of their cells —Yes; when the prisoners have been released they have told me that they used to go to the Protestant services in the gaol to break the monotony of their confinement 2981. As I understand, you rather remonstrated with them, as you were bound to do, that distinctly forbade their going to the Protestant service?—I never forbade them; I never went so far as that.

2982. But you were bound in conscience to remonstrate with them?—I simply told them what I considered to be their duty, and then left it to themselves; I did not wish to push them too far.

2983. But according to the rules of the Roman Catholic Church, a Roman Catholic cannot without a sense of wrong, attend the Protestant service?—He cannot; it is not allowable.

2984. Sir John Pakington.] You account for having been sent for so seldom in the year 1867, 1868, and 1869, by the fact that the rule of the prison was that you should only be sent for when some prisoner himself desired it; but I understand you also to add, that there are three cases within your knowledge in which, although the prisoners did desire it, still you were not sent for?—So they informed me.

2985. In the case of Dwyer, which you have mentioned, the mother came to you?—Yes.

2986. Did you not also say, that before the mother came to you, the prisoner himself had applied to have you sent for?—I stated that the mother presumed that he had asked for me, from the fact of her having told him that if he was ill, he must send for the priest, and she felt sure that he would do so.

2987. It was merely a conjecture upon the part of the mother that he did probably desire it —Merely a conjecture upon the part of the mother 2988. It is not within your knowledge that he did so desire?—It is not.

2989. I understand that when you went to visit the prisoner, upon the application of the mother, you found him delirious and dying; but there was no objection to your seeing the man —Not the slightest.

2990. Then with regard to the woman Sullivan; you stated that the governor applied to you to see her, you being in the prison in consequence of having been sent for to attend another case?—That was so.

2991. What was that other case; was it a case of illness?—No, it was not.

2992. In that case, I presume, the prisoner himself had desired that you might come to him —I believe, in this case, the prisoner had not desired it. It was the case of a boy whose mother had been to the governor and had obtained an order, through the governor, for my attendance but I do not know that the application came from the boy himself.

2993. Do you know whether or not the woman Sullivan had made any application to the governor that you should be sent for?—No, I should think the contrary; because the governor remarked to me, "She has not asked for you."

2994. Did you ascertain how long before you saw that woman she had been in a state of illness?—No, I did not; but it was a case of consumption sumption; therefore it must have been a considerable time.

2995. But the governor himself requested you to see that woman when you came?—Yes.

2996. I do not understand that you made it a case of complaint against the governor that you were not previously called to see her?—I did. I afterwards made this remark to him, "What a shame it seemed not to send for me before!"

2997. From the state of illness that she must have been in, I suppose?—Yes.

2998. You stated, as I understand you, that the Roman Catholic prisoners were always obliged to attend the Protestant worship?—I did not use the word "obliged."

2999. I want to know what your view is; do you think they do it of their own accord?—Yes, I am sure they do it of their own accord.

3000. For the reason that you mentioned, namely, to avoid the monotony of being shut up in their cells?—Yes.

3001. You have heard nothing more, I presume, from Mr. Canning, since you wrote to him a fortnight ago?—Nothing more than what I have already stated, that he would bring the matter before the magistrates at their next meeting.

3002. You do not know what has been the result, if any?—I do not know the result.

3003. You have been three or four years attending at the prison, have you not?—Three and a half years.

3004. Had you never made any previous application of the same nature?—No, never.

3005. Why did you not?—I did not think there was any chance of its being successful.

3006. Did you ever apply to be allowed to visit the prison more frequently?—No.

3007. Did you ever apply to be allowed to visit on the Sunday?—No.

3008. You told the Committee that you did not know what the daily average number of Roman Catholic prisoners was, but that it did not exceed four or five?—That was from what the governor said.

3009. How did that arise?—The governor said, "To your credit, very few of your number come here;" I asked him what he meant by "a very few," and he said, "I do not think there are more than four or five Catholic prisoners in the gaol."

3010. Mr. Synan.] A right honourable gentleman has asked you whether those prisoners went to the Protestant church on Sundays of their own accord; do you believe that they go of their own accord; that is, as willing, free agents?—I do not think that they go completely of their own accord.

3011. I say as free agents; do you think that there are several species of compulsion?—I should distinguish; I consider if they had been permitted to go to their own church, they would have gone, by preference, to their own service rather than to the Protestant service, and I do consider that when a prisoner is put between the alternative, either of being locked up in his cell the whole day, and having no break whatever, or of going to the Protestant service, that is a kind of compulsion, and that the prisoner is not entirely a free agent in that respect.

3012. Supposing a prisoner was told, upon the Sunday, that he had the option of either remaining in his cell, or of going upon the treadmill, or going to the Protestant church, would he be a free agent?—I do not know what would come of disputing that point.

3013. Suppose a prisoner was told that he should remain in a cold cell for a whole day, or go, as he now does, to the Protestant church; would he be a free agent if he went to the Protestant church?—He would be, to a certain extent, free.

3014. Do you call that perfect liberty of action?—I do not think it is perfect liberty of action.

3015. It seems to me a matter of surprise; will you tell me why you never made a formal application under this Act of Parliament; were you aware of the existence of this Act of Parliament?—Yes.

3016. Did you read it?—Yes.

3017. Did you read these words, "That the keeper of a prison, or other person, shall from time to time give to any minister appointed or permitted to visit the prison, a list of persons belonging to his creed or persuasion"?—I did not quite understand it in that way. I thought that "permitted or appointed" referred to a person being permitted by the visiting justices, or appointed by the visiting justices, and not simply sent for; and then, secondly, I was thrown back by the fact, that the governor told me, "I am not allowed to show you the list."

3018. I am coming to that; were you influenced in not taking more active and formal steps of application by the answer of the governor, when he pointed out the rules against giving you the list, or the creed register?—I do not know that that prevented me; I rather think that what stopped me from making any formal application was his telling me that he was perfectly sure that if the matter were brought before the justices they would not entertain it, as the number of Catholics in the prison was so few.

3019. Did the fact of the governor showing you the rule under which you would not even get a copy of the creed register, which you were by this Act entitled to have, confirm your neutrality?—He did not show me any rule.

3020. I understand you to say that he promised that a copy of the creed register should be made out by his clerk for you?—Yes.

3021. And he took you into his office afterwards, and pointed out the rule?—That referred not to giving me a copy of the creed register, but to allowing me to visit unless the prisoner asked for me.

3022. Were you at all influenced in remaining in your state of neutrality by that?—Yes; I think that made me think that there was very little hope, if I pushed the thing further with the justices, of having anything done.

3023. In what year was it that this conversation with Mr. Canning took place?—In October last.

3024. He promised you that the thing should be discussed and entertained at the next sessions?—Yes; he did not say the next sessions, but simply "Leave the matter in my hands."

3025. When did the next sessions occur after that promise, or did it ever occur?—I do not know that.

3026. Has any sessions occurred since that promise was given?—Are you alluding to the last promise or the promise in October?

3027. The promise to bring it before the justices; do you know how often the sessions take place at Bristol?—I think about four times in the year.

Rev F. Myers.

5 May 1870.

3028. At all events, since the promise which he made in October, when he requested you to leave the matter in his hands, nothing has been done by the visiting justices?—Nothing has been done by the visiting justices.

3029. Were you surprised to see this list of the City Bridewell, containing 69 Roman Catholics?—Yes.

3030. When did you see it first?—I saw it last week.

3031. Did you not see it before last week?—Not before last week, when notice came that the matter would be brought before the Committee.

3032. Will you tell the Committee what is the condition in life of these 69 prisoners?—I do not know all the prisoners; many of them are labourers on the quay.

3033. What is the condition in life of those you do know?—Some of them would be labourers on the quay.

3034. They would be all of the labouring class, I suppose?—There were two prisoners last year who were respectable persons—tradesmen.

3035. Of the higher scale of the artisan class?—Of the higher class of artisans.

3036. Did you visit them?—I did not.

3037. What is the condition intellectually and morally of the bulk of the prisoners; are they able to read and write, speaking of those whom you do know?—I could not answer that question, because, out of all the prisoners, I have not seen more than 14; I do not think within three years and a half I have attended the prison, I saw more than 14 or 15 different persons.

3038. Out of the 69?—No; out of 200 or more, who must have been there in three years and a half, if there were 69 in one year and three months.

3039. What is the intellectual condition, as far as you could observe, of those prisoners?—I think most of those that I saw could read and write.

3040. Do you know what is the character of the offences for which they are in the prison?—Stealing, and various other offences.

3041. Minor offences of larceny and assault, I suppose?—Yes.

3042. Independently of the crimes for which they were imprisoned, exclusive of every consideration of that kind, as far as you could form an opinion, what opinion would you form of their moral and religious character?—I can only speak of the 14 that I saw; I think they were all very well-disposed persons, and that I could have done a great deal of good with them; they were very well-intentioned men, and wanted to see me oftener, but so much trouble and bother was occasioned by their wanting to see the priest, that when he came they were so ashamed, and so put out, and so terrified, that I could do nothing; but if I could have had the power of seeing these men oftener, and so got over the awkwardness of my first interview, I could have done a great deal of good with them.

3043. They were persons who, in your opinion, were susceptible of moral and religious impressions?—Yes; but the great drawback was, that I could see them so seldom.

3044. Do you think that your attendance as a religious instructor, would have a great effect in increasing those moral and religious impressions?—Yes.

3045. Can you give an opinion as to whether the greater part, or the entire of your service would be required for the spiritual attendance of those 69 prisoners in this Bridewell, as religious instructor?—I do not think it would require all my services.

3046. How much of your attendance would they require, do you think?—I think if I could have had two days a week: one day for the women, and one day for the men for instruction, and for seeing them, and then, of course, a service upon the Sunday, at least one service, that would have been sufficient.

3047. Would you think two services would be a very good thing?—Yes; I should certainly say there ought to be two services.

3048. Is your church one of the secular or religious order?—It belongs to the regulars.

3049. Have you a parish?—Yes, we have a district.

3050. How many people attend in your district?—About 6,000 or 7,000 people.

3051. Of your people?—Yes.

3052. Are you supported by voluntary contribution?—Yes.

3053. Do you think the claims of your people upon your services would admit of your attending these 69 people sufficiently, without encroaching upon your parishioners' claims upon you?—it would encroach most decidedly upon their claims.

3054. You could not, in justice to your people, devote sufficient of your time to the instruction of these 69 prisoners?—I do not know about that, but it would inconvenience us considerably.

3055. And would it not impose additional burthens upon your fellow-clergymen?—Certainly.

3056. Mr. Dimsdale.] Have you made any application to the visiting justices to hold a Catholic service on the Sunday?—No.

3057. And I understand that you have made no application to be appointed chaplain, other than the one contained in your conversation with Mr. Canning?—None, except that.

3058. What was the date of that?—As far as I remember it was October or November 1869.

3059. And from that period down to the present he has not communicated to you any discussion which may have taken place before the visiting justices, or the court of quarter sessions?—He has not.

3060. You have made no further application, I believe?—Nothing further than that. I wrote a letter about a fortnight since, reminding him of his promise, and asking him what had been done in the matter; his reply was, that he would bring the matter before the magistrates at their next meeting.

3061. For the next sessions?—I do not know what he meant by their next meeting, but I suppose it is that.

3062. Mr. Talbot.] This is a city prison, is it not?—Yes.

3063. And only prisoners from the town come to the prison; there are no prisoners from the neighbouring country districts, I believe?—I do not know; it is called the county prison as well.

3064. It is, in fact, a town prison?—Yes.

3065. And you do not know the total number of prisoners?—Only from the reports.

3066. Do you know of your own knowledge what is the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison?—I do not.

3067. Have

3067. Have you long lived at Bristol?—Nearly our years.

3068. And you have no doubt taken an active nterest in the welfare of the Roman Catholics of hat town?—I have.

3069. Has it never occurred to you to ask what he average number of Roman Catholic prisoners the City Prison was?—I did so. I asked this isiting justice if he could inform me by referring the list.

3070. You seemed to be on friendly terms with he governor?—Quite so.

3071. Did you ask him what the average umber was?—I did. He told me then that here were very few, and he explained the very w to be about four or five.

3072. On an average?—Yes.

3073. And you have just told my honourable iend that you have never made any formal pplication to visit the prison; nothing beyond ese conversational applications?—I have never ade any other application.

3074. You say you have seen the Prison inisters Act?—I have.

3075. And you saw in that Act, did you not, at ministers of denominations other than that of e Established Church were allowed to visit isoners of their own denomination?—Yes, if ey were sent for, I think, or permitted.

3076. It does not say, "if they were sent for," the Act?—I think so. I understand it so.

3077. Did it not occur to you, when you saw e Act provided, that the magistrates were und to give permission, on application, to make regular formal application?—Yes, I did think it, and I had a conversation upon that subject. thought that before I did anything in the utter, I would speak to the governor, as I was good terms with him, and ask his opinion out it, and it was in consequence of his saying me that it never would be allowed, that it s no use bringing it before the magistrates as number was so small, that I did not stir in the utter. He also said, as I have stated, that if it s needed, he would allow me to visit the pri-ners at any time.

3078. He meant at any time you pleased, not en you were sent for?—Yes.

3079. Would it not have been a very easy and vious thing to do, to go and see if that was so? Yes, but I stated that after he had made that er, when I went to remind him of his promise, ask him for the list, he shielded himself ler the terms of this Act, saying that he could allow me to visit unless the prisoner expressly ed for me.

3080. You were satisfied with his interpreta-n of the law, and did not put your interpreta-n on it?—I did not contend with him; I thought est not to do so.

3081. You say there is no Roman Catholic vice in the prison, and you have never thought sking for any?—No, I have not.

3082. Have you any reason to suppose that ou had asked the visiting justices for permis-n to hold a service upon the Sunday, they uld have refused it?—Yes; I did not even template the idea.

3083. You are aware that Roman Catholic ices are held in many prisons?—Yes, I know 3084. Why did you think it would not be per-ed in Bristol?—The visiting justices of tol have the reputation of being opposed to man Catholicism.

3085. With regard to Roman Catholic prisoners who do not attend the ordinary service in the chapel, you are asked what would be their alternative?—I was asked that question.

3086. You know, I suppose, that there is no hard labour done on Sunday in the prison?—Yes, I know that.

3087. Therefore you know that the alternative between the treadmill and the chapel is an imaginary alternative, and not a matter of fact?—Quite so.

3088. The other alternative suggested was, that if they did not like to go to chapel they could only stay in their cold cells?—Yes.

3089. You have been in the cells, I suppose?—Yes.

3090. Those cells, I presume, are certified by the prison inspector?—Yes.

3091. And would not be cold in cold weather?—They would not be cold cells as far as that goes, but the prisoners would naturally be anxious to relieve the monotony and the tedium of remaining all day in their cells.

3092. Viscount Enfield.] Do you put this forward, that unless the prisoner is sick or dying you do not visit him?—No; but that I never visit the prison unless I am sent for.

3093. Mr. Dalrymple.] Have you any reason for thinking that your ministrations are sometimes asked for, and that the prison authorities do not give you notice to attend?—Only from what the prisoners have told me.

3094. You would consider it a very serious charge against the prison authorities, would you not, to neglect such an application?—I certainly would, and therefore I wish to be understood that that evidence lies simply upon what prisoners have said.

3095. From what you have seen of the governor upon different occasions (for you mentioned that upon one occasion of your visiting the prison he told you of another person whom it was desirable that you should see), you would be of opinion that he was willing to give you all possible facilities?—He has always been exceedingly fair and courteous towards me, and always gave me every facility, as far as I could judge.

3096. Mr. Guest.] You stated to the Committee that when you went to see this boy the governor told you that there was a woman seriously ill, whom he supposed to be Roman Catholic?—The governor's words were: "Now you are here there is a woman here I should like you to see; she is dying, if not dead; she is an Irishwoman, I presume, being of the name of Sullivan, and I take it upon myself to ask you to see her."

3097. I suppose you know that when prisoners come to the gaol their creed is registered in a book?—Yes.

3098. So the governor could have been in no doubt with reference to that woman's creed?—No; I suppose not.

3099. It was not, that this woman had registered herself as a Protestant, but that he had reason to suppose that she was a Catholic?—I really do not know as to that, but I have reason to know that prisoners do sometimes register themselves as Protestants when they are Roman Catholics.

3100. How do you know that?—Because they have told me so.

3101. Have you ever heard of cases in which Roman Catholics have registered themselves as Protestants,

Rev. F. Myers. 5 May 1870.

Protestants, and afterwards have been allowed to send for you to see them?—I do not know a case of that sort.

3102. But you say that Roman Catholics have registered themselves sometimes as Protestants?—Yes.

3103. Do you know why they have done so?—The prisoners thought they would be served better.

3104. In what respect?—They thought they would be persecuted if they represented themselves as Catholics.

3105. By whom did they think they would be persecuted?—By the warders.

3106. What difference do you fancy would be made?—That the Roman Catholics would have all the harder work given to them.

3107. That was merely a supposition on their part, as far as you know?—I have nothing more than their supposition.

3108. You do not think yourself that there would be any possibility of a difference of treatment being shown to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—No; as far as I know, there is great fairness shown to the Catholic prisoners.

3109. Did you ever know a case of a prisoner having done this on more than one occasion?—I think two cases have come under my knowledge of persons who have entered themselves as Protestants when they were Catholics.

3110. You do not know that they have repeatedly done so?—I do not.

3111. You stated that you knew two cases of prisoners who, after their release, went to you and complained that when they had asked to see you, you had not been sent for?—Yes.

3112. Do you know their names?—No, I did not inquire their names, as far as I can remember.

3113. Were you certain that they had been in the gaol?—Yes.

3114. Did they belong to your neighbourhood?—Yes.

3115. Did you make any complaint to the governor respecting that statement?—I did not.

3116. Nor to the visiting justices?—No; and I would not even have mentioned it now if I had not been asked, as I do not rely so much upon the statements of these men, and, moreover, I did not wish to say anything that would irritate the governor, as I wished to work well with him; I never made it the ground of complaint.

3117. Did you say just now that you did not quite rely upon their words?—Yes, I said so. I should not take very much into account the complaints of the prisoners; but I think there is a little more importance to be attached to this than to most statements of prisoners, on account of its coming from two or three persons, and also on account of the woman Dwyer telling me she supposed her son must have sent for the priest; moreover, there is another confirmation: several persons, when they have had their boys, or their friends in the prison, have come to ask me, knowing that I had charge of the district containing the gaol, to visit them, and I have invariably said that I cannot visit unless I get an order, and I have told them, "You must go back, and when you see your friends in prison, you must tell them that if they wish to see the Roman Catholic priest, they must ask for him." So many have gone away understanding this, and yet so few have sent for me, that I cannot help thinking there must be some foundation for these statements.

3118. You are perfectly well aware that under the Act of Parliament, when the prisoners ma a request to see you, they were entitled to yo services if you had come?—Yes.

3119. Were you not indignant at the fact your not having been sent for?—Yes, certain I felt so.

3120. Why did you not apply to the govern or the visiting justices when you knew that y had the law on your side?—I foresaw that should be driven to this: the governor or visiti justices would say, "Who told you?" I shou say, "These men;" and they would say, "I you believe these men?" I am certain M Gardner would say that directly; he would sa "The prisoners will say anything."

3121. How are you certain of it?—From wl he has said on similar occasions.

3122. You imagine that from his general to towards you?—Yes, I knew that I should ha gained nothing.

3123. You told the Committee that Mr. Ga ner informed you that there were four or fi prisoners in the gaol during a certain week? He was speaking of a particular week.

3124. You have no doubt that there are ve many more there generally?—No, I do not thi so.

3125. Because the returns here are 69 prison for 16 months, which gives about four or five the month?—Yes.

3126. They are in for short terms, I suppo —Some of them are there for three years, think, 12 months, and six months, and all th who have been committed for trial, and a awaiting their trials, are sent there.

3127. Have you known any cases in which prisoners have suffered from attending the P testant service, that is to say, who have forsak the Roman Catholic creed?—No, I have kno of no such cases.

3128. You only look upon that as an outr to their feelings?—It is little more than that.

3129. You do not know of any harm occurr to them by attending the Protestant service?- know of no harm resulting from it.

3130. It has not been made a vehicle of p selytism?—I never heard of that.

3131. You are acquainted with the chapl of the gaol, I suppose?—I do not know him have been there so seldom.

3132. You have no complaint to make agai him, I presume?—No, none whatever.

3133. From whom did you receive permiss to visit the prison?—I never visited the pri unless a letter came from the governor request me to visit a prisoner.

3134. Why did he particularly write to y —Because it was an arrangement amongst clergymen at our house that I should have c of the prison.

3135. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] I supp however comfortable the cells might be, and h ever well-arranged, still the monotony of soli confinement would be so tedious and painful it would be a great temptation to a Catholic soner to be told that he might break that mo tony even by attending Protestant worsh —No doubt, and that was the reason t generally gave for going to the Protes service.

3136. Have you ever considered the posi in which you think you ought to stand with gard to the gaol which you visit?—Yes.

3137. Do you think that you should be u terms of perfect equality with the Protes chapl haplain; I do not mean as regards salary, but as regards permission to visit the prisoners of your persuasion freely?—Certainly.

3138. And with regard to salary, have you ever contemplated the fair and just way in which a minister with only five, six, or 10 prisoners per month to attend to should be remunerated, contrasting his position with that of a minister visiting a much larger number of prisoners?—No further than this, that some kind of sum proportionate to the number should be paid.

3139. Would you be satisfied provided there was apportioned to you a capitation grant, that is to say, a sum of so much per head, according to the number of prisoners?—Yes, supposing the grant were in proportion to that given to the Protestant clergyman.

3140. In proportion to the number of prisoners, rather?—I mean, that the sum paid to the Catholic priest for attending his number of prisoners, should be proportionate to that which is paid to the Protestant clergyman for visiting his.

3141. Would that be more satisfactory to you than a small fixed stipend?—It is so hard to fix the sum, that I think it would be better to go upon some capitation rule: it would depend upon too many different persons' ideas then, so that you might get very little, and not sufficiently remunerative.

3142. I understand, as a matter of fact, that you are not able to say that the magistrates have ever positively refused to appoint you, but that they have ignored the whole subject, or never taken it into consideration?—It is possible that Mr. Canning never brought it under consideration at all.

3143. Mr. Downing.] You used the expression, "Knowing that I had charge of the district"; you meant by that that you were appointed to it by your superior?—I meant nothing more than that.

3144. You also said that you only attended when sent for?—Yes.

3145. Would you not consider it your duty, if you had free permission to attend the gaol, to visit more frequently?—Certainly.

3146. You had not what is intended under this Act of Parliament, namely, permission as a Catholic priest to go there when you pleased?—No.

3147. Do I understand you rightly, that you would consider, as a clergyman, that it would be better for you to be paid so much per head for each prisoner of the Catholic persuasion who was in the gaol, than by a fixed sum?—As far as I understand the matter, I think so, but I have not quite made up my mind about it.

3148. You have not made up your mind about it?—I think, whatever you pay, it should be something proportionate to what is paid to the Anglican clergyman.

3149. And do you not think, even though there may be a very small number in the gaol, you would hold it your duty to visit them, probably, once a day, if you were the paid chaplain?—I hardly think it would be necessary to visit them once a day, unless there were a great many prisoners; if I could get the work through in two visits in the week, I should think that sufficient.

3150. You never did apply for permission to have service on Sunday?—Never.

3151. Mr. Synan.] When you talk of proportion with respect to salary, do you mean a salary proportionate to services, or proportionate to heads?—I think you should consider, first of all, the sum to be paid per head, which sum should be proportionate to that paid to the Protestant chaplain.

3152. We are going to fix the sum, and in order to ascertain the sum and the scale, we fix upon the proportion; would you think the proportion ought to be to the services rendered, or to the number of heads to whom the services were rendered; which scale would you prefer?—I rather think it should be proportionate to the number of persons.

3153. Than to the services?—Yes.

3154. That brings me to another point; you can instruct your prisoners in a body, cannot you?—I should like to do so.

3155. I find by this Return that the Protestant chaplain has 761 prisoners to attend to, and that you have 69 to attend to; cannot the Protestant chaplain instruct a large number of the 761 together; he need not take them man by man?—I do not know. I suppose he sees them together.

3156. Can he not do so?—I do not know what he does.

3157. I am not talking now of confession; could not you give religious instruction to your people either in twenties, or thirties, or sixties?—Just as well and better than singly.

3158. Therefore is it not a fair inference from that, that it might be as easy to give religious instruction to 200 people in the prison, as it would be to 69, apart from the question of confession?—No, because besides general instruction, you must always deal with prisoners individually.

3159. Apart from that, it would be as easy to give general instruction to the 200 as to the 69, would it not?—Yes.

3160. Then ought not the salary rather to be regulated in proportion to the services rendered, than to the number to whom they were rendered, judging from those two admissions of yours?—I think you ought to consider both questions, and that was what I wished to have stated in the beginning.

3161. Let me ask you this, in order to set a matter right upon which perhaps I may have fallen into an error, which I did not intend to do; suppose the option was given to those prisoners between remaining in what I called the cold cell, but which is said now not to be a cold cell, and going to the church, (I do not care whether it is a Protestant or a Catholic service, no matter of what religion the prisoners are), which would they prefer?—The church, unquestionably.

3162. With respect to proselytism, I am not sure that I understood your answer upon that point; if a Protestant is in a Catholic country, and is influenced at all by the regulations of the prison to go to the Catholic service upon the Sunday, or if a Catholic in a Protestant country is influenced by the rules in the prison to go to the Protestant service on the Sunday, do you not think that that has an indirect tendency to proselytise; what is your opinion with reference to the effect of that morally and religiously upon the prisoner?—It may indirectly tend to proselytise; but I do not think that it is the intention of the authorities of the prison.

3163. I am not talking of their intention, but I am talking of the effect that that would have upon the prisoner?—I think it ought to have that general effect; but whether it has or not, I cannot say.

Rev. F. Myers.

5 May 1870.

3164. I am not talking of individuals, but I am talking of it in a general way?—Then I think it might.

3165. Is not that its natural tendency, I ask you?—Yes, I think it would tend to that.

3166. In reply to a question put by an honourable Member, you stated that in a particular week you were informed that there were only four or five Roman Catholics within the prison; was that particular week between the 3rd of April 1868 and the 28th of July 1869; was it within that year and a half?—As far as I remember, it must have been about this time last year.

3167. Then it was within that time?—Yes.

3168. Sir John Pakington.] You have been asked about the time required, and so on, for the spiritual instruction of 761 Protestants and 69 Roman Catholics; but you are of course aware that those were the numbers spread over a year and a quarter, and that those figures give us no guide with regard to the actual number of prisoners professing those religions respectively at any one moment?—That is so.

3169. I do not understand from you that you have any reason to doubt the accuracy of the statement made to you that in that week there were only four or five Roman Catholics?—I think not.

3170. You stated to the Committee just now, in answer to a question, that you had only, in the course of your three years' ministration, seen about 14 prisoners?—Yes, that is so.

3171. Were any of those 14 prisoners persons in health, or were they all persons in whose cases you were sent for on account of sickness?—There were only two on account of sickness.

3172. All the others were persons in health who had asked to see you?—Yes, for their own consolation.

3173. What proportion of the 14 were women?—I can only remember about three or four women.

3174. Chairman.] Is there a lesser number of women in the gaol than men?—I think the governor told me that it was very seldom that they had any Catholic women there at all.

3175. Then there was a lesser number?—Certainly.

3176. With reference to that impression which you mentioned upon the mind of the prisoners (whether you think there was anything to justify it or not), the impression exists that, by entering as Protestants in a prison where there are no Catholic servants and no Catholic service, they will be better treated?—Yes, our people think so.

3177. You yourself do not attach much importance to it, as matter of fact, but you attach importance to it as existing in their minds?—Yes.

3178. So that if there were a Catholic chaplain and a Catholic service, and everything else, on a scale of perfect equality, you are of opinion that no such thing would be likely to happen?—I think it would do a great deal to remove the objection.

3179. Mr. Synan.] Did I understand your answer to a question of the Right Honourable Baronet to be that you had no reason to doubt, when you were told that there were only four or five prisoners in the gaol at this time twelvemonths, that that information was accurate?—I had no reason to doubt the information being accurate.

3180. Do you believe that there were only four or five Catholic prisoners at this time twelve months in this prison?—Yes, I think so, seeing that there were only 69 in the course of 1 months.

3181. Mr. Talbot.] Do you know that many prisoners, unfortunately, go to prison several times over, so that those 69 prisoners who were sent to the prison between April 1868 and July 1869, might have been the same persons to a certain extent, and not altogether separate individuals; might not that be so?—Yes; but in those cases their sentences would be very short and that is not the general rule in the prison.

3182. But sometimes we know that Irishmen take a little too much on Saturday night, and they might be put in there more than once for a like offence?—No; I think such persons would not be confined there, for they only send the long sentenced prisoners there, from three months to three years.

3183. They would not have been there if they were sentenced for three years, as that is considered penal servitude, and they would therefore go to the convict prison if they were sentenced for more than two years?—That would be so. I do not think that there would be many recommittals, for those sent for three days or a week are not sent to that prison at all; all terms of imprisonment like three months and six months are sent to the House of Correction.

3184. I suppose you have not ascertained what is the minimum imprisonment in the City Bridewell?—No, I have not.

3185. Then with regard to this other point upon which something has been said of the treadmill and the cold cell; you know that the alternative is never between the treadmill and the chapel, and never between the cold cell and the chapel?—Never.

3186. Therefore it is a purely imaginary alternative?—Quite so.

3187. Are the prisoners allowed to read books in the cells?—Yes; but they must be approved of by the governor.

3188. Therefore it is not the fact that those persons would be left in their cells on the Sunday without having books to read; they would have the privilege of reading books?—I do not know that, but I have no reason to doubt, if they asked permission to read books, they would obtain it.

3189. Sir John Pakington.] What do you say is the shortest sentence ever sent to this Bridewell, according to the rules?—The clerk told me there was no rule about it, but the general practice was that those who were sentenced for six months and upwards were sent to the City Prison as well as those who were committed for trial; but he also said that sometimes, when the other prison, which is called the House of Correction was full, they even sent those prisoners committed for three months, and for shorter times, to the City Bridewell.

3190. Is this what I understand you now to state, that in some events, as in the case of the House of Correction being full, the short-sentenced prisoners are sent to the Bridewell?—Yes.

3191. And also that the Bridewell is resorted to for the detention of prisoners waiting their trial?—Yes.

3192. Are all the prisoners awaiting trial for offences committed within the city sent to the City Bridewell?—Yes.

Rev. F. Myers.

5 May 1870.

3193. So that I presume of the aggregate number of prisoners in the prison, a considerable number would be prisoners awaiting trial?—I suppose so.

3194. Could you give the Committee the proportion of those?—I cannot give the proportion.

3195. Mr. Synan.] Can you give the Committee the average time of detention in the City Bridewell?—I do not know that.

3196. Mr. Guest.] Have you ever seen any of the books which are given to the prisoners in their cells?—No, I have never examined the books; I have seen books in the cells, but I have never opened them.

3197. Have you never heard complaints by the prisoners, of books of a nature objectionable to Roman Catholics being supplied to them?—They have never made any such complaint to me.

3198. I understand you to say that you would consider one day a week for males, and one for females, would be sufficient for your ministrations?—Yes, I think so.

3199. And did I also understand you to say that you considered if the Catholic priest performed a service on the Sunday he was entitled to remuneration?—Yes, I think he would be entitled to remuneration.

3200. But you do not think that he would require more time than you have specified?—I think not.

3201. Did I understand you to say that there was a Protestant service twice on Sunday?—I do not know for certain, but I think so.

3202. Do all prisoners go twice to the service?—That I do not know.

3203. You do not know whether the prisoners go half in the morning and half in the evening, or whether the same prisoners attend twice?—I do not know that.

3204. Sir John Pakington.] You have been asked your opinion with reference to the proselytising tendency of Roman Catholic prisoners going to the Protestant worship; within your own knowledge have you ever known a case in which a Roman Catholic prisoner has become a Protestant in consequence of attending the Protesant service?—I have never known such a case.

The Rev. THOMAS DYKES, called in; and Examined.

Rev. T. Dykes.

3205. Chairman.] YOU are stationed in the missions at Bristol, are you not?—Yes.

3206. Do you ever visit any of the gaols at Bristol?—I have visited sometimes at the House of Correction.

3207. Will you take that return in your hand, and tell me how many Roman Catholics there are at the date mentioned there?—I see here that they are put down at 289; that is from the 3rd of April 1868 to the 20th of July 1869.

3208. Do you know what is the average daily number?—I have no means of knowing.

3209. Do you get any returns?—I have never received any returns.

3210. You have no reason to think that that return is incorrect?—I suppose it is correct.

3211. Do you visit that prison without being sent for?—No; I do not visit the prison, unless I am sent for.

3212. When did you first visit that prison; how many years since?—I do not know exactly, but I think about five years ago.

3213. How many times have you visited it during that time?—I have been in Bristol nearly eight years, less three months, and during that time I have been sent for to the prison, as far as I can remember, about eight times; if I were to say 10 times, I should be within the mark.

3214. Within what period is that?—Within a period of nearly eight years.

3215. But you have visited the gaol, have you not, more than those 10 times?—Whenever I visited a prisoner once, I used to ask leave to visit that prisoner again, and I used to go once every week to see that prisoner.

3216. You got permission, when a prisoner had once sent for you, to visit him?—Yes, I used to go to see the prisoner once a week.

3217. As I understand, you visited 10 prisoners, but you visited those 10 prisoners oftener than one time each?—Yes, certainly.

3218. Do I understand you to say that you were invited to attend the prison about 10 times?—Yes.

3219. That is to say, to visit 10 different prisoners?—Yes.

3220. But you represent that, when you saw a prisoner for the first time, you asked permission to visit him again?—Yes, that was so.

3221. So you might perhaps have made 50 visits?—I have not been so often as that.

3222. But you have made a much larger number of visits than 10?—Yes, certainly.

3223. Did you know that there was so large a number of Catholic prisoners in this prison as 289?—I had not the slightest notion that there was so large a number of Catholic prisoners as that.

3224. Do you now know how many there are?—I see it now.

3225. Did you ever apply for permission to visit the prison?—No.

3226. Why not?—Because I thought it was no use.

3227. Why did you think it was no use?—Partly from the feeling that exists at Bristol, and I may state that the prisoners are mostly in for a short time, and I do not feel so anxious about their being visited as the prisoners in the larger prison; and, further, I thought I would wait to see what was the effect of an application that was being made with respect to the larger prison, in which the prisoners are confined for longer terms, before I took any steps.

3228. What application are you speaking of; did you know that Mr. Myers was about making an application?—He made it by my direction; I advised him to do so.

3229. You heard that that application was an indirect one?—He made an application to see the prisoners who were in the City Bridewell, as he stated here, and, as the Committee have heard, it was refused.

3230. That refusal governed your conduct?—That refusal partly governed my conduct.

3231. You thought it perfectly hopeless to make a similar application?—I considered it perfectly hopeless.

3232. And therefore you made no application?—No application whatever.

3233. Do you know whether there is Divine

Rev. T. Dykes.

5 May 1870.

Service according to the Protestant rites celebrated on Sunday?—I believe there is.

3234. Do you know whether there is service twice on Sunday, or once?—I do not know that.

3235. Do you know whether Catholic prisoners attend that service?—I have been told that they do by one or two prisoners.

3236. Do you think that a small number, or the majority of them, or the entire of them, attend the Protestant service?—I have no means of knowing, but I should think, from what they said, that the whole of them did.

3237. What did they say which led you to form that opinion?—I cannot remember exactly, but I remember one of them saying that they had been themselves, and that the other Roman Catholic prisoners also went; I think a boy of the name of Sullivan told me that they went.

3238. What was the motive that impelled them to attend the Protestant worship?—I suppose they did so to avoid the monotony of being in their cells.

3239. Do you know that that is the motive which has influenced prisoners in similar cases?—I have been told so.

3240. And you have no reason to doubt it?—I have no reason to doubt it.

3241. Have you been told so by other clergymen visiting prisoners?—Yes, I have.

3242. In fact, might I say that it is your conviction that it is so?—Yes, it is my very strong conviction.

3243. If you had permission to visit that prison freely, would you be anxious to give the prisoners the benefit of religious worship on the Sunday?—I should be very glad either to do it myself, or to get it provided for.

3244. You would get it provided for?—I would get it provided for if I could.

3245. Is it the fact that within the last few years, if you could have had Divine Service on the Sunday, you would have procured it either by going there yourself or by obtaining the services of another clergyman?—Yes, I would have done so.

3246. But you thought it perfectly hopeless to attempt it?—Perfectly hopeless.

3247. The prospect of denial prevented your applying for permission?—Yes.

3248. Sir John Pakington.] The prisoners are mostly there for short periods, are they not?—Yes, mostly for two or three months. I do not remember a case in which a prisoner was in for a longer period.

3249. From that down to the shortest sentence?—Yes.

3250. Do you attribute to that cause the fact that the number of Roman Catholics who are in this House of Correction appears, during the 15 months mentioned in the report, to be so much larger than the number in the Bridewell?—I think so.

3251. Is it within your knowledge what the number of Roman Catholics in the House of Correction at any one time was?—No, it is not.

3252. Mr. Downing.] How long have you been a priest?—I have been a priest for about 15 years.

3253. Are you a superior at present?—I am at present.

3254. Have you a large parish?—We have nearly the whole of Bristol.

3255. Will you tell the Committee what is the Roman Catholic population of your mission?—Some put it down at about 6,000, and some at 8,000 or 9,000. It is difficult to determine exactly, being spread over the greater part of Bristol.

3256. How many clergymen have you?—Sometimes there are three, but at present there are four.

3257. Are they a poor population?—The greater part of them are of the very poorest class.

3258. I suppose your emoluments and those of the other clergymen, are not very large?—No, very large.

3259. You said that if you had permission to celebrate mass upon the Sunday, you would make provision for it?—I would.

3260. Could you do that without employing an additional priest, or without putting additional labour upon your brother clergymen?—I think I should be obliged to have an additional clergyman; if we had Divine Service in the two prisons we should certainly be obliged to have an additional priest.

3261. And if that additional priest was to be paid, that would still lessen the humble sum which you derive from your parishioners?—It would very much.

3262. I think that you have already stated that you never did make any such application?—I never did make that application.

3263. Did you ever go to the gaol for the purpose of visiting prisoners without being sent for?—I think that on one occasion, where a mother had spoken to me about her son being in the prison, I begged leave to see the governor, and asked him if I might be allowed to see the prisoner; he gave me permission, and I visited the prisoner as long as he was in the prison, once a week.

3264. Did you ever apply to the justices for permission to visit the prison?—Never.

3265. Mr. Synan.] When you talk of visiting the prison eight or 10 times, you mean visiting eight or 10 persons?—Eight or 10 distinct calls to individuals.

3266. Were you aware of the state of the law with respect to ascertaining the creed of prisoners?—I was not aware of it.

3267. Could you tell the Committee what, your opinion, would be the average number of Roman Catholics in the prison at any one particular time; I do not want you to be accurate but to give it approximately?—I can only give a rough guess from the numbers which I see in the prison returns; and, putting them down at the average of about one month each, that would make somewhere about 18 or 20 at a time.

3268. Do you know what is the longest term of punishment in your prison?—I think I have certainly known them in for two months, and believe for three months.

3269. What, in your opinion, is the effect upon the religious impressions of your people, resulting from going to the Protestant services on Sundays, to avoid being confined in their cells?—Of course the direct effect is to unsettle them in their religious belief as Catholics.

3270. Do you know anything of the books which the prisoners have in their cells?—They had, I know, often the Protestant Bible lying in their cells.

3271. Have you seen any other books in their cells?—I do not remember any other books.

3272. Do you know by whom the books are supp pplied to the prisoners in their cells?—I do ot know that.

3273. What is the general position and cha- acter of those prisoners?—Those that I have seen ere generally of the poorest class.

3274. Uneducated?—Mostly; very often the risoners could not read or write.

3275. Are they open to religious impressions? —I think, with some of them, it is the only hance we have of doing them any good. They re lounging about the streets, or in bad com- any the whole of the day, when they are out of rison, and the only chance you have of getting old of them is when they are in the prison.

3276. Have you found visiting the prisoners be of any use?—I have found it to be of great se. They were persons who would not have stened to me out of the prison, but when hey have been in prison they have been very lad to see me.

3277. With reference to the question of the emuneration of the Catholic priest, would you x that remuneration in proportion to the num- er of the prisoners or to the services performed? —I have never considered that question.

3278. Sir John Trelawney.] I believe you ave not formed any opinion with reference to vhat remuneration would satisfy you?—I cannot ell what that amount would be.

3279. Will you tell the Committee what would e the minimum cost of the fitting up a chapel n the prison?—I could hardly tell, as so much vould depend on the requirements. I suppose n this case it could be fitted up for about 10*l.* or 5*l.*

3280. Would 10*l.* or 15*l.* cover all the ssentials?—I think it would cover all the ecessary expenses, as we could, of course, partly upply things ourselves.

3281. I presume you speak with regard to the mallness of the number of the prisoners, because ve have heard in evidence that a larger sum would be required?—I do not think that would nake a very great difference, but I say so in this ase, because we could supply some of the things hat would be required from our own chapel. If hey were bought new it would cost more, but aving already a great number of things in use, ve could supply them more cheaply than if we ad nothing to fall back upon.

3282. Do you know any instances abroad, in which the same chapel is used for both the Pro- estant and the Roman Catholic service upon the ame day?—I am not very well acquainted with risons abroad, and therefore I could not say.

3283. If it is true that there are such things abroad, do you think there is any objection to such a system being carried out here?—I do not think there would be any great inconvenience in it. I think it has been done in cases of army chapels, I know a case in the neighbourbood of Bristol, in the barracks of Horfield, where the chapel has been used for the Protestant service, and also for the Roman Catholic service.

3284. Would not the effect be to give a greater space to the congregation, and more comfort and ventilation?—Yes, but I think at the same time that the Catholic prisoners would value the ser- vice, and think more of it if they had a chapel, which they knew was entirely their own. I think they would look upon it as a more sacred place, and it would have perhaps a better effect upon them in that way.

3285. Lord Henley.] Is this a city or a county gaol that you are speaking of?—A city gaol.

3286. What is the constitution of the Govern- ment of the gaol; is it the town council, or what? —I do not know; I think it is the town council.

3287. Do you not think you might possibly have succeeded with them if you had made appli- cation for permission to administer your religious rites at the prison?—I could not say; from what I know now I think perhaps I might, particularly if I had been able to point out the Act as I see it now, but I was not aware that there were those facilities given, and therefore I did not take that step.

3288. Do any members of the town council, to your knowledge, belong to your church?— None of the visiting justices or magistrates do; there is an alderman in the town who is a Catholic.

3289. You have not conferred with him at all as to the possible success which you might meet with in applying for permission to attend the prison?—I have not.

3290. You have heard of no case in which these authorities have refused any application from your predecessor or other Roman Catholics of a similar nature?—No, none has ever been made.

3291. Mr. Talbot.] It is considered very wrong, is it not, for any member of your church to attend the services of the Church of England? —It is considered wrong.

3292. You would reprove any member of your flock who did attend those services?—I would reprove any member who was out of the prison.

3293. As a matter of conscience, they ought not to do so?—No.

3294. If that is so, has it not occurred to you that it would be worth while applying for leave to hold a Roman Catholic service?—My motive for not doing so was that I thought it might do more harm than good.

3295. What harm could it do?—I thought perhaps I might have less facilities for seeing the prisoners.

3296. At present, have you facilities for seeing the prisoners?—I have only seen those who have sent for me, or for whom I have been sent; that is to say, the governor has sent where the pri- soners have asked for me to see them, or where mothers have asked for me to see their children in the prison.

3297. Have you ever gone to the prison and been refused admittance?—Never.

3298. As far as you know, you might go once a week, and ask to see a Roman Catholic pri- soner and not be refused?—If I had known what the Act was, I should have taken it down and shown it to the governor.

3299. Independently of the Act of Parliament, as far as your experience goes, if you thought it your duty to go to the prison once a week and ask to see the Roman Catholic prisoners, you do not know that you would have been refused?— I do not know that I should.

3300. The visiting justices having treated you with that amount of courtesy, would it not have been well to have gone on and asked leave to hold service on Sunday?—I thought I should have no chance of obtaining leave, and therefore I did not think it worth while to apply for it.

3301. Mr. Guest.] I think you said, there were altogether

Rev. T. Dykes.

5 May 1870.

altogether in their parochial district, four priests?—There are four of us who live together.

3302. Does that include the whole of Bristol?—No; there is one, a much smaller district at the east end of Bristol. There is a priest besides who looks after Bedminster, which is on the other side of the river; and there is the Clifton district, but the great mass of Bristol falls within our district.

3303. Are both the prisons in your district?—Yes.

3304. Therefore, Mr. Myers is included as one of the four?—He is one of us.

3305. You told the Committee that the only book you have ever seen in the prison cells has been the Protestant Bibles?—Yes.

3306. You know that it is a Protestant Bible?—Yes.

3307. Have you seen no other books besides in the prison?—I do not remember seeing any other books.

3308. You have seen nothing but that one book?—Nothing but that one book, so far as I remember.

3309. Have you ever made an application to the visiting justices or the governor to be permitted to supply Douay Bibles to the Roman Catholic prisoners?—I asked permission to give the Catholic prisoners a Catholic Prayer-book.

3310. When was that?—I cannot tell when it was; I asked on two or three occasions for permission to give the Catholic prisoners a Prayer-book.

3311. In what year was that?—It was about two or three years ago.

3312. Was that application refused?—No, the governor told me, I think, he should have to show it to the Protestant minister; the impression is strong upon my mind that his words were, "I must show it to the minister, and if he has no objection it shall be given to them."

3313. What reply did you make to that?—I said nothing at all.

3314. Did you supply those Prayer-books?—Yes, they were given.

3315. How many did you supply?—I think three or four.

3316. Not more?—No.

3317. That was three years ago, was it not?—Three years ago.

3318. You have only seen, I believe, about three prisoners during the last three years?—I do not think I have seen more; I should say within the last two years I have seen about three prisoners.

3319. Do you not think it a very important thing that the Roman Catholic prisoners should have a Bible and Prayer-book belonging to their own faith?—Yes.

3320. But you did not think it necessary to apply for a Bible?—We do not attach so much importance to the indiscriminate reading of the Bible as the Protestants do.

3321. You stated that you thought that you could supply the chapel for 10 l. or 15 l., but that if the things were new they would cost more; what do you think they would cost if new?—I do not think it could be done under 25 l., or even more than that.

3322. From 25 l. to 30 l., would you say?—Yes, I think that would be a fair sum; I do not mean that you could supply any articles of a very ornate character, but simple and decent things I should think could be got for th sum.

3323. Do you know whether there are an Roman Catholic warders in the prison?—I b lieve there are not.

3324. You stated, I think that 18 would b about the number of Roman Catholic prisone in the prison?—I really have no means of findi that out.

3325. You have no reason to doubt the acc racy of the returns?—None whatever.

3326. That would give us an average of abo 18?—About that.

3327. How much time would it take a minist to see those prisoners?—If I had to see tho prisoners separately, it would hardly do to giv them less than about 20 minutes or 25 minutes ea by themselves. Of course, if one could assemb them together you could get through the wor very much more easily, and give them instructio in half an hour perhaps; you could not do muc good under that time.

3328. Once or twice a week?—Yes.

3329. Chairman.] Each prisoner?—Yes, se also each one by himself.

3330. Mr. Guest.] About three days in th week, you think, would suffice, do you not?—I should think it quite sufficient if I saw the pr soners by themselves, to see each prisoner once week. If we could devote a priest to that pu pose, he would, no doubt, see them more frequentl than that.

3331. You would consider, if there were on priest told off to minister to the Roman Catholic in the prison, that he would not have very sever labour in the gaol, if that was his only duty?—I he had to look after the two prisons, as they ar at a considerable distance from each other, i would be a good deal of labour.

3332. I suppose there are females in this hous of correction?—Yes, there are females there.

3333. Do you think there would be sufficien work in the house of correction to justify th payment of a Roman Catholic minister?—Yes I should think so.

3334. But you would think, as I understan you, that it would be better to have one pries for the two prisons?—I am supposing now tha there was the means of living for another priest then, perhaps, he might have a little extra worl in looking after a hospital or two.

3335. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] You hav heard no complaint of Catholic prisoners being treated less well than the Protestant prisoners —No, I have not.

3336. Have you found any persons who ha been prisoners who have complained after leaving the prison that they had expressed a wish to se you, and that you had not been sent for?—No, I have not.

3337. Chairman.] With reference to the ques tion of fittings, fittings would necessarily include vestments of which you would require more than one set, would you not?—Yes, four sets would be required.

3338. And sacred vessels; if you had an even ing service, benediction, you would require a very valuable silver vessel, would you not?—You would require a remonstrance.

3339. And are there not very valuable vest ments worn by the Catholic clergymen?—Yes, there are the cope, chasuble, and the alb.

3340. And 3340. And there are the other things required or the altar?—Yes.

3341. Even taking all those things and providing them decently, if you got 30 l. to provide very necessary for those two services, you would e rather out of pocket than otherwise, would ou not?—Certainly. I think, perhaps, doing it the very cheapest way you could, you might et things that would look decent for about 30 l.

3342. Would that include everything?—On econd thoughts I should think it would cost ore.

3343. Do you not think that 50 l. is something ke a moderate sum to provide all those things?—Yes, I should think 50 l. would be.

3344. Do you base your answer to my question bout the cost of those various necessaries upon calculation of what they would individually ost?—No; I have never had to fit up a chapel, o that I do not know what they would cost.

3345. But supposing you had to fit up a chapel, nd to provide it with every necessary for the Catholic service, you think 50 l. would be a very fair verage for an ordinary supply?—Yes, I think it ould be done decently for 50 l.

3346. But with reference to your visiting, let ne ask you this: there was on your part no hrinking from duty, no unwillingness to attend he prison, but you really thought it hopeless to sk for permission to do so?—Yes.

3347. You did not consider that you had any ight to do so, as you had no facilities afforded ou unless you were specially invited?—My elief was that I had no right to go there unless was sent for.

3348. Mr. Downing.] Reviewing your conduct s a priest towards the Catholic prisoners in these aols, I might venture to say that you will admit hat you did not do your duty if you knew what he law was?—I will admit that I did not know hat the law was.

3349. Mr. Synan.] When you spoke of 10 l. r 15 l. being sufficient to provide what was ecessary, I understood that it was on the condiion of your being able to procure from your ther chapel some of those essentials?—That was o.

3350. And it is allowing for those essentials hat you would procure of your own, that 10 l. or 5 l. from the authorities would be sufficient to do hat is necessary, and to fit up the tables and eats?—I am not speaking of seats, and things of hat kind, but I would be content if I could get 0 l. or 15 l. offered me by the Town Council or he prison authorities. I would accept it willingly, nd try and provide the necessaries and essentials or myself.

3351. With regard to the question by the onourable gentleman opposite, as to why you id not apply (even though there never was an Act of Parliament to warrant the application) to the authorities for liberty to have service upon Sundays, did you consider that application of Mr. Myers in the other prison substantially as an application for yourself; that it would answer both purposes, whether it was refused or conceded?—I thought that what was said to Mr. Myers showed me that there was a very small chance, or no chance whatever, of my succeeding in my application.

3352. I understand you to say that you put Mr. Myers forward for the purpose of testing the will of the authorities upon the subject?—Yes, on account of the prisoners being confined there for longer terms. I looked upon that as the more important prison of the two, and therefore I put him forward to make the application.

3353. The result of that application would decide the matter for you as well as for him, would it not?—Yes; I should know whether it would be of any use making the application.

3354. You told the Committee that most of your people in the prison were uneducated?—Yes, mostly so; they are generally very poor.

3355. And it is, I presume, in relation to that uneducated class that you do not consider reading the Bible pure and simple, as being either very useful or essential?—That is so.

3356. Mr. Guest.] Is it necessary that the vessel mentioned by the honourable Chairman should be of silver?—The cup of the chalice must be of silver.

3357. Chairman.] I asked you with reference to the Remonstrance for the Benediction; need that be of silver?—It need not be of silver; it must be gilt or silvered.

3358. Mr. Guest.] It is not actually necessary that it should be, is it?—One part of it must be.

3359. The cup you mentioned, must be of silver, must it not?—Yes; the cup must be of silver, and it must also be gilt inside.

3360. With regard to the other things, there is no necessity to make them of very costly materials?—No; there is not.

3361. Do I understand you to say that they would cost at least 50 l.?—I never bought a set, so that I could not say.

3362. You say that you must have four sets of vestments?—Yes.

3363. I take it, that the vestments that you use in your ordinary duties in the day, would be available for your duties in the prison?—Yes, but it would be very inconvenient to have to carry them backwards and forwards.

3364. So that you would require to have a different set of vestments for each prison?—Yes; we could not carry them from one place to the other

The Rev. FORTUNATUS SIGNINI, called in; and Examined.

3365. Chairman.] YOU are a missionary priest n Cardiff, are you not?—I am.

3366. Do you visit the Borough gaol?—I do.

3367. Since how long have you been in Cariff?—I have been in Cardiff for a much longer eriod than I have visited the gaol; I began to isit the gaol about a year and a half ago.

3368. You have been about 33 years in this ountry, have you not?—I came in October 1837, and I have remained in the country all the time since, excepting two years, or thereabouts.

3369. Then you are therefore almost an Englishman?—I am naturalized.

3370. For how long a time have you been an inhabitant of Cardiff?—From the summer of the year 1854 until now, with the exception of about three years and a half.

3371. What is the daily average number of

Rev. F. Signini.

5 May 1870.

Catholic prisoners in the prison?—I believe for the last 12 months it has been as near as possible about 50.

3372. Have you seen the number in the returns?—I have; the return speaks of one particular day, namely, July the 20th 1869.

3373. On that day there are 76 Church of England and 45 Roman Catholic prisoners?—It must have been so on that day; sometimes it is more and sometimes it is less.

3374. The average would be between 40 and 50, would it not?—Yes; the average is over 45, I know.

3375. Are there any rules governing your visits to that prison?—Yes; a new rule was issued by the visiting justices on the 21st of March 1868, after long and repeated applications.

3376. How many times are you allowed to visit the prison?—Twice a week; one day for males and one day for females.

3377. What is the length of your visit?—In my religious instruction I am bound to one hour; I cannot exceed one hour. Further than that, there is no limit fixed for the prisoners who express a wish to see me separately. The religious instruction is given collectively in the prison chapel; beyond that I may see any one separately who wishes to see me.

3378. But when the prisoners are assembled in common the religious instruction is limited to one hour?—Yes.

3379. That is one hour each week for males?—Yes.

3380. And one hour each week for females?—Yes.

3381. That is collectively in association, is it not?—Yes, they are gathered together in the chapel.

3382. And besides that for instruction, for preparing for confession, and for hearing confessions, are you allowed to see the prisoners singly?—Yes; I generally go into a private cell, and there they are brought in one by one, if they wish to see me, either for making their confession or for any other private matter.

3383. Are you allowed to have Divine worship on the Sunday?—I am not, nor on any day.

3384. Have you any order issued by the justices that informs you what their regulations are?—I have it in my possession, it was not sent to me, but to my predecessor.

3385. Will you read it?—Yes; it is an extract from the Magistrates' journal, dated the 21st of March 1868. "It is resolved, that, permission be granted to assemble such of the Roman Catholic prisoners as shall be desirous to attend in the room used as a chapel once a week, on such days and at such hours as shall be settled by the governor. Such instruction not to last more than one hour for male prisoners, and one hour for females. Each prisoner to be placed in a separate compartment; one or more warders to be present for purposes of discipline and safety, and no celebration of mass, or other public religious service of the Church of Rome, to be performed in the said room during such instruction; the assembly of the prisoners for instruction is not to prevent any prisoner who may desire to do so, from seeing the Catholic priest separately, as at present. The instruction of the male and female prisoners to be at different hours."

3386. Lord Henley.] That was an extra permission?—That was an extra permission, which we obtained after long and frequent application.

3387. Chairman.] That is to the effect that you are to be allowed to instruct the male prisoners assembled together for one hour once the week?—Yes, I am allowed to instruct the male prisoners assembled together once a week.

3388. And the same with regard to the females?—Yes.

3389. But you are allowed to see individual prisoners for other purposes at any time you require, or they require, are you not?—No, not at any time; we always interpreted this resolution to mean that we must do it at the same time that we are there for the purpose of giving collective religious instruction.

3390. Is there a room specially appointed for you?—There is no room for separate instruction; I generally go into a cell which is vacant, and then the prisoners come to me.

3391. Is there no place set apart for you to give instruction to the prisoners?—The collective instruction is given in the public prison chapel.

3392. Is an hour consumed in that instruction?—Sometimes it is, and some times it is not. I do not think I have ever exceeded the hour. I am careful not to do so.

3393. But independently of that hour, you are allowed to see the prisoners individually at other times?—Yes; either before or after the instruction but not on another day.

3394. Do you mean to say you are not allowed to remain with the prisoners for the purpose of your ministration more than one hour?—Not in the chapel.

3395. But you are allowed to see prisoners individually, you say?—To leave the chapel, and see the prisoners individually after the religious instruction is over.

3396. When the instruction is at an end?—Yes, or it may be before it has begun.

3397. Sir John Pakington.] Over and above the hour?—Over and above the hour.

3398. Chairman.] Without limit as to time?—No time has been fixed, but I find that in practice very few are sent in to me in proportion to the whole number.

3399. What do you mean by that?—I mean that not all the Roman Catholic prisoners who are in the gaol pay me a visit separately after or before the instruction. Supposing I have 43 in the chapel, I may only see five or six in the cell.

3400. That is to say on that day?—I never go any other day but that. We never understood it in any other sense, excepting as regarded sick cases.

3401. Except for religious instruction, you are not allowed to attend more than one day in the week?—Not more than one day in the week unless I am sent for; once or twice there being a sick case in the prison, I was sent for; then I continued to go in without being sent for, and had free access to that sick case without any obstruction.

3402. This decision was the result of long and frequent application, was it not?—So it appeared from papers which I found left by my predecessor.

3403. Who held the same office which you do 18 months since?—Exactly.

3404. Has there been any further application made since?—With reference to the supply of books for Catholic prisoners, I have made application on, but not upon the question of religious orship.

Rev. F. Signini. 5 May 1870.

3405. In consequence of that order, did you nsider that there was no chance of success for y application for a religious service?—That as my reason, or my principal reason, for not plying for it.

3406. You thought it quite useless to apply? I thought it quite useless to apply, knowing e temper of the visiting justices, as described that document, upon which point I have had reason to alter my opinion in any sense vourable to myself.

3407. How many Protestant services are there on Sunday?—Not less than two, if not more; rtainly there are two.

3408. It is quite certain, therefore, that there ust be one?—I might say for a certainty that ere are two, but I know, certainly, that there one.

3409. Do the Catholic prisoners attend the apel?—Yes, several of them do.

3410. Do you know that of your own knowige?—Prisoners have told me that they do, d the officials of the gaol have told me the me.

3411. I will read to you a passage from the turn here, and you will tell me whether this rresponds with your own information: "Priners of all denominations differing from the stablished Church, accept gratefully the visits the appointed chaplain, and attend the services the chapel;" you have no reason to think that at is incorrect with reference to the fact of eir attendance?—Except that the prisoners ll me they do not all attend; but as regards e other point, I have no reason to doubt the ct.

3412. We will come to the feeling that is inired afterwards, but is it a fact which you ve no reason to doubt, that the majority of the atholic prisoners attend the Protestant worship? I could not say if it is the majority; I am not epared to state the proportion, but several tend, and several do not.

3413. Do you think they "gratefully accept e visits of the appointed chaplain;" that is the rotestant chaplain?—I think his visits are acpted gratefully; but that requires an explanan; they are accepted gratefully, on the principle at a poor creature who is severely punished by litary confinement, is very glad of any chance breaking the silence by speaking to anyone o visits him as a friend, as they thereby get a tle relief. We should also consider how very ficult it must be for poor persons in the posin of prisoners to summon enough of moral urage to reject the visits of a gentleman whom ey know to be appointed by the prison authoies with official power as a chaplain for the neral superintendence of the prisoners; espeally when they compare his position with the ry inferior one of their own priest.

3414. And are they not glad to get a little lief from the irksomeness of confinement, by ing to the Protestant chapel?—That is almost variably the reason which they allege; they say: It is so tiresome, so wearisome, to be in the cell; go out, because it is a relief to us." Upon eir being spoken to, several of the prisoners ased from going, but afterwards relapsed, being mpted by the bait of leaving their cells.

3415. Do you think it is fair to have that incement held out to prisoners of the Catholic persuasion, to attend the service of the Protestant worship?—Decidedly not; I think it is most unfair upon the first principles of natural law; and I further consider it very unfair to carry out that rule by which the prison authorities have the power, and exercise it continually and regularly without interruption, of opening the door of the cell of every prisoner, be he Church of England, Baptist, Roman Catholic, or Jew, and inviting him to come to their service; sometimes with very pressing language it seems, as the prisoners have repeatedly told me. There is no command, no compulsion, strictly speaking, but a moral pressure has been exercised; that is my impression, founded upon their information. It seems also reasonable to think that many of the prisoners, especially new comers, seeing themselves invited to attend the Protestant worship, must naturally, in their helpless condition, have some lurking fear or suspicion of incurring in some way the displeasure of those in whose power they are placed, if they do not attend. Indeed, I have repeatedly heard from them remarks to that effect.

3416. But even if the prisoners were not solicited, directly or indirectly, by words, do you not think that the fact of their being otherwise compelled to remain in their cells during Divine worship would be quite sufficient to lead them to go to it?—Quite so; especially when they hear the tramping steps of their neighbours going to church.

3417. There seems to be a number of Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists in this prison; there are 46 prisoners of various Protestant denominations confined in the prison; now, according to your experience, is it not the fact that Protestant Dissenters are glad to receive the ministrations of clergymen of the Church of England?—I can only state from hearsay that, in the majority of cases, members of the various dissenting bodies have no objection to receive the administrations of the Church of England clergy.

3418. And there is a very strongly marked difference between the Protestant Dissenters and the Roman Catholics in that respect?—Yes, decidedly so.

3419. Can a Roman Catholic, without committing a very serious fault, willingly attend?—Not according to his conscience or his sincere belief as a Catholic; he does wrong, and he knows he does wrong.

3420. Therefore, do you think it fair to coerce the conscience, or offer any inducement to a poor person in the position of a prisoner, to violate his conscience by doing, in the prison, what he would not do outside?—Certainly not; it is not fair.

3421. Now, with reference to the books used in the prison; I believe that the Protestant chaplain visits all the prisoners without restraint?—The Protestant chaplain, with the exception of the little time that the Catholic priest is with the Catholic prisoners, is, practically, the sole chaplain of all the prisoners of all denominations; he visits everybody according to his own discretion, and speaks to every body, and gives books to everybody, as he thinks fit. He is, in fact, the official chaplain of the whole, and gives them advice as he thinks fit.

3422. And exercises, no doubt, great influence over their minds?—No doubt; but I must observe, as a matter of justice and fairness, that none of the Protestant chaplains I have known since I have been living at Cardiff, have in any way acted unfairly, fairly, by tampering directly with the religious belief of Roman Catholics; they avoid controversy.

Rev. F. Signini.

5 May 1870.

3423. But you come here to speak against the system, and not against individuals?—Yes, any Protestant clergyman, who should think fit to act otherwise than I have just stated, has full power to do so, as far as I understand the present state of the law.

3424. He has full power, according to the rules to exercise that influence over their minds?—It is only what I call a lucky accident that he does not do so.

3425. Practically, you admit his fairness, but complain of the system which admits of that being done?—Most heartily I do, as a system it is wrong in principle.

3426. By this return it would seem that the Catholic prisoners form about one-third of the whole?—I should think so; the present Protestant chaplain has told me something like that very lately.

3427. I see by this return that the Protestant chaplain receives 250 l. a year for his work?—Yes, I believe so.

3428. Suppose there was also a Catholic clergyman there, do you think it fair that he should be paid for his services, in proportion to the services that he did?—Certainly; a man who has to work has a right to be paid, in order to live to do his work.

3429. You are not prepared to lay down any fixed rule upon which you would base that remuneration?—I think that if, for example, you required an extra priest on purpose to attend to the gaol; or if one of the resident priests took that for his principal duty; or (supposing, that the prison work were not such as to demand the principal attention of such resident priest) if his undertaking the prison duties should, of necessity, throw on his brother priests more than their proper share of the regular parochial work, in such cases as these a salary should be allowed sufficient to maintain the priest with decency; and I should still say so, even if under circumstances like those just mentioned, the number of prisoners was not so large as 50 or even 30.

3430. Sir J. Pakington.] I understand you to say that the hour to which you are limited on the two occasions when you visit the males or the females, applies only to the collective worship?—That is the time allowed for the collective religious instruction.

3431. You are allowed either before or after that collective worship to visit the prisoners individually in their cells, are you not?—Not in their cells, they are brought to me; I must, however, say that sometimes I have asked permission to see some particular prisoner, and was not refused permission to go to the cell myself; and sometimes the officials themselves have said, "Do you wish to see so-and-so," who might have been the subject of a conversation between myself and the officials; those were individual instances, but I think that the meaning of the permission which we have received, is to carry on the work as we did formerly in regard to the separate interviews, namely, the Catholic priest to sit in any private cell which is found empty and available, and there to receive any one brought to him by the officials.

3432. I was going to ask you whether, as you are allowed to see the prisoners individually after the termination of that hour, you are restricted with regard to the time you so devote to th interviews?—I never was, and I suppose I not; the authorities never interfered with me

3433. Supposing the number of interviews quired it, you might remain in the prison the of the day engaged in seeing your flock?— think so; but it never did, nor is it likely to d 3434. Have you ever applied for a salary?— have not.

3435. Have you ever applied for permiss to see the Roman Catholic prisoners more f quently than you do?—I have not.

3436. And why have you not applied for t either?—Because I did not like to trouble waters, seeing the difficulty, which we had perienced in obtaining from unwilling visit justices even the little boon which is embod in that resolution; further, I thought that growing sense of justice and fairness in country towards Roman Catholics would things right at last, and so I concluded t patience was the best thing.

3437. Did I understand you to say that fact of the Protestant chaplain not attempting make proselytes of the Roman Catholic pri ners was a lucky accident?—I conceive it to so, because I see nothing in the state of the l to prevent the Protestant chaplain from act in any way that he thinks fit.

3438. Would it not be fair to attribute it just and proper scruples on the part of the P testant chaplain?—That is what I meant; live on the best of terms; we are very friendl 3439. You meant that it was a lucky accid that he was so good and honourable a man Yes, we were speaking of the system. Oth Protestant clergymen might consider it their d to act towards Roman Catholic prisoners diff ently from the present chaplain.

3440. You said that a portion of the Rom Catholic prisoners attend the Protestant worsh but not all of them?—Not all of them.

3441. Do you know how the distinction is gulated as to those who do attend and those w do not?—I think some of the prisoners abst from attending from their own conscientio feelings without being told by their clergym They say: "It is not right for me to particip in that form of worship, and therefore I will go." Some refrain from going after having g once or twice, or oftener, and then having b told that they must not go against their c science and their principles.

3442. Mr. Downing.] I presume you are foreigner?—I am a foreigner.

3443. When you visit prisoners in a separ cell is there a warder present?—No.

3444. Are you quite sure of that?—Perfec sure. I leave the door open generally.

3445. The rule is: "Each prisoner to placed in a separate compartment, one or m warders to be present for purposes of discipl and safety"?—That applies to the religious struction in the chapel; they are in differ boxes.

3446. I see by this resolution that you are p vented from celebrating mass?—Yes.

3447. Or other public religious service of Church of Rome?—Any kind of religious serv is prohibited.

3448. Had you a very large congregation Cardiff?—We reckon them from 8,000 to 9,(in Cardiff and the vicinity, exclusive of sea-faring population.

3449. That is a population that comes and es?—Yes, trading to the port of Cardiff from rious countries.
3450. No doubt sailors also form a fair propor-on of the prisoners?—Yes, that is so.
3451. You are a superior, are you not?—At esent I am the superior of the Cardiff priests.
3452. How many reside with you?—We have o presbyteries. We are now six altogether.
3453. Do you mean for the whole of Cardiff?
Yes.
3454. I daresay that your income is very small mongst six?—We are struggling hard, as st missionaries are, on account of the great mber of things that have to be done. There s been a sudden rush of a helpless population o the place, so that there has been a hard uggle for the last 15 or 16 years in building nools and places of worship.
3455. I see in this Return that the number of tholic prisoners compared to the Church of ngland prisoners is in the proportion of about o to three. The Protestant prisoners are 76
d the Roman Catholics 45?—That is so; i. e., Church of England prisoners, for the 20th ly 1869. At other times the difference has en much less.
3456. I find, according to this Return, that the otestant chaplain is paid a salary of 250 l. per num?—Yes.
3457. You never applied for any salary?—I not, for I thought it was of no use.
3458. Mr. Synan.] You were asked by the ght honourable Baronet why you did not apply her for more time to give instruction, or for vice upon the Sunday; did you think that the solution of the justices with respect to the time at was allowed to you, and with respect to the fusal of the service upon the Sunday, was con-usive upon that subject?—For the collective inuction, I consider, and I have always done so, at one hour is a fair allowance, but it is a very vere measure to fix you down, as it were, to a nute.
3459. I want to ask you this, were you pre-nted by that resolution from applying either service upon the Sunday, or for additional ne for instruction?—Yes; that resolution was, our eyes, an interpretation of the feelings of e magistrates; we thought they would not ex-nd their permission to further limits.
3460. You stated to the Committee that you not see all your people privately, although u instruct them for an hour in the chapel once week?—Very few in proportion.
3461. Why do you not instruct them all ivately?—One thing I fear is, as is stated by em occasionally, that when they express a sire to see me they are not allowed by the rders and officials to do so, that is what I hear em say; several of them have told me that. I sh to say that by "private instruction," I here derstand the private interviews with prisoners nen not collected for public instruction.
3462. You see those only whom the warder ngs to you?—That is so.
3463. You do not see them all?—I do not see em all.
3464. And their excuse for not seeing you is at they are sent away to other business?—
at is the excuse of some of them; that is what y have told me.
3465. Perhaps that "gratitude" which is entioned in this published return might very well bear that interpretation, which has become a common expression, namely, "a strong sense of favours to come;" I do not know whether you ever heard that expression?—That would be about the key of the whole thing.

3466. When you talk of salary, do you think it ought to be proportioned to services rendered, as well as to the number to whom they are rendered?—I can say nothing further than what I have laid down in my former answer to a similar question, that if it is necessary that there should be an extra priest appointed for that purpose, or principally for that purpose: or even if the number of prisoners was not large enough to take up the whole, or most of the working time of a priest, yet the appointment of a resident priest lays extra work on his brother priests then I consider he should be paid a salary sufficient to maintain him decently in his position as an educated gentleman and a priest.

3467. If the religious and moral instruction of those 45 people in your prison was to be sufficiently attended to, would your mission require an extra priest?—I am inclined to think that it would; after a time it certainly would.

3468. You are of opinion that the attendance upon the prisoners in this prison would so encroach upon your time that it would encroach also upon the claims of your people upon you?—I think so.

3469. And it would also encroach upon the claims of your brethren and fellow priests upon you?—Exactly.

3470. Will you tell the Committee, if you can give an opinion upon the point, how much it would cost for the necessaries and fittings for a religious service upon the Sunday?—If you do not include the requisites for benediction, I should think, without having made a strict calculation, that from 25 l. to 30 l. would procure a full supply of all the necessaries for the altar, including the vestments and everything requisite; yet on a modest scale.

3471. What do you think the essentials would cost, including the benediction?—If you include the thurible and the cope, and the remonstrance, I would not undertake to do it under 20 guineas more; and that would be a very moderate estimate.

3472. That would be altogether about 50 l.?—Yes.

3473. Sir J. Trelawny.] You were asked why you did not apply for an opportunity of ministering at the prison?—I was.

3474. Should you be inclined to think that it was the duty of those who placed the prisoners there to provide clergymen for their instruction; primarily it would be rather their duty than yours, would it not?—I consider that it is the duty of Government to provide the means for the ends which they aim at; their end is to correct the prisoners and not only to punish them, and therefore they should provide all the means requisite for that end.

3476. Mr. Talbot.] I think you told the Committee that comparatively few of the prisoners come to you for private instruction?—That is the case; that is for private interviews.

Rev. F. Signini.

5 May 1870.

3477. And then you went on to say, that that was caused partly by the discouragement which they received from the authorities; is it not possible that there may be this other reason, namely, that they do not ask to see you?—Yes; I only spoke of a few of the prisoners.

3478. The Committee desire to ascertain, as far as they can, how these matters are conducted in prisons. Is it the case that every prisoner is expected to see the priest in private, or is that a privilege of which he may avail himself if he chooses?—Every prisoner is not expected to do so; I believe in many instances it was the prisoner's own wish not to see the clergyman after he had met him at the public religious instruction, thinking that that was enough for him on that day. Once or twice the prisoner told me he had not known that he could come to see me.

3479. Therefore it was rather granting him his wish than putting an obstruction in his way?—It is only fair to say that I think that after the collective instruction the prisoners go out into the air, into the garden, and so on, and perhaps are not always willing to forego that.

3480. Therefore there would be no hardship, as far as the prisoner was concerned?—Except that in some cases the prisoners told me the following week that they had not been to see me owing to having been prevented.

3481. But, knowing the class from which the prisoners are derived, is it not possible that they avoided seeing you of their own wish, and made this excuse to you?—That is quite possible, at least in some cases. When I speak of statements made to me by prisoners, here and in other answers, I understand of course that a further question might be raised as to the degree of reliance to be placed in those statements.

3482. You state that you have certain days assigned you for regular visitation?—Yes.

3483. But supposing a prisoner is sick, have you any means of seeing him at other times?—Yes, I think I have; judging from past experience, which is limited in that respect, I should say that there was no limit put upon me.

3484. If a prisoner was in a dying state, you could visit him from day to day, could you not?—I think I could, judging from the past.

3485. In this Parliamentary Return we have the words, "prisoners of all denominations differing from the Established Church accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain;" do you know whose opinion that is?—That is the Reverend Mr. Prothero's opinion; he is the chaplain, and that is the view he takes; and I have no doubt he thinks it a right view.

3486. But it is signed by two visiting justices and the governor?—But I happen to know that that is an extract from his report.

3487. But I suppose those gentlemen who are connected with the prison, the visiting justices and the governor, agree with that opinion?—They endorse it.

3488. You drew a marked difference between Roman Catholics and others who dissented from the English Church?—I did.

3489. You told the Committee that the Roman Catholic prisoners could not attend the ministrations of a clergyman of the English Church?—If the Catholic prisoners were placed under fair circumstances they would not do so.

3490. Have you lived long in Wales?—I have lived in Wales from 1854 to the end of [illegible] vember 1857, and again from 1861 till now.

3491. That is for many years?—Yes, many years.

3492. And you have had an opportunity observing the feelings of the inhabitants of Wa have you not?—I have.

3493. Except in the case of the Roman tholic prisoners, there is in your opinion grievance whatever?—I am not aware of any.

3494. If you heard that the Welsh Dissen looked upon it as a very great hardship that t were obliged to accept the ministrations of a m ister of the Established Church, you would much surprised, would you not?—Not speak of particular cases; I conceive that in some cases there might be some such objection.

3495. Speaking generally, you would not surprised?—I think I would be surprised.

3496. Mr. Guest.] How long are the prison allowed to remain with you in the cell after struction?—As long as they need it.

3497. What is the longest time you ha known a prisoner allowed to stop with you?—do not think that any prisoner has been with separately longer than 10 or at most 15 minu at any time, judging from memory, and having kept an entry of this, excepting on or two occasions when I have had them altog ther in a cell; there being on those occasi only about a dozen Catholic female prisoners the gaol I had them all in the cell; and ther occupied the whole time in giving instruction.

3498. So that you then held the instruction a cell instead of in the chapel?—That was by n own wish.

3499. What time of the day do you genera hold this instruction?—Shortly after 10 in t morning.

3500. I want to ask you a question also w regard to what you stated about the invitation chapel on the part of the warders; do you happ to know at all in what way the Catholic p soners are invited to go to chapel; the doors a opened, are they not, by the warders?—All know is from the testimony of the prisoners the selves.

3501. Will you state to the Committee wh the prisoners have said to you?—The prisone have told me over and over again, that the c doors were thrown open with the announceme that service is going to begin, and the warde say, "Are you going?" or "Make haste," " is time," or "Why do you not go?" that th made use of expressions like these.

3502. Was this told to you by the prisone during the time of their confinement in the ga or after their release?—During the time th they were in the gaol. It is not my practice state these matters outside the gaol.

3503. Did you ever complain of this to t governor of the gaol?—I told his wife of it in very gentle way; I made it no case of form complaint; I did not like to be too strong up the point; I said, "It is wonderful that they go;" and the officials said, "They go of the own accord."

3504. Who was it that you spoke to; was the governor of the gaol?—I think I spoke to t matron, the wife of the governor, Mrs. Wre and also to officials, acting under her command.

3505. That was the case of a female prison then?—Yes, it was the case of female pr soners.

3506. Hav

3506. Have there not been similar cases of male prisoners?—Yes; in the same way.

3507. You have never made a complaint to the governor upon the point, have you?—On both sides, I complained of it; I forget if I did so to the governor or only to the officials; I may have spoken to the governor also; and the issue of the thing was, that they convinced me that they used no compulsion; I believed that before.

3508. You consider that it is a matter of complaint?—Assuming that the statements of the prisoners were true, I consider that it is a very serious matter of complaint.

3509. But you did not think it worth your while to make any formal complaint to the visiting justices?—I did not.

3510. With regard to the books used in the prison, have you ever noticed books placed in the cells of the Roman Catholic prisoners which they ought not to read; books against their faith?—I do not remember any controversial books being brought to me from any cell, but I have happened to meet with some very anti-Roman Catholic book in some place out of the cells, but that was quite an accident; I was told "this was in former times, and now we have done away with all that;" and I said, "and quite right too."

3511. But you do not think there are any controversial books there now?—No further than the Protestant translation of the Bible.

3512. You do not supply any Roman Catholic Bible, do you?—Yes, I do; I have permission to do that.

3513. And you have got permission to give any books you please?—Any Catholic books I please.

3514. Have you had permission to remove the Protestant Bible?—I believe an order was once made by one of the visiting justices, a Roman Catholic, who examined the cells; he saw several Protestant books in some of the cells, and had them removed; but I, myself, have kept the thing quiet, as they were not exactly controversial books, as far as I know.

3515. I understand you to say that sometimes you did not see all the prisoners when you went to see them separately after the instruction; cannot you imagine, from what you know of the discipline of the prison, that it is not always possible to let the prisoners come to you, because they would have certain work to do?—That is so possibly in a great many instances.

3516. What would the prisoners be mostly doing about that time, at 10 o'clock in the morning?—I am not acquainted with their daily routine of work.

3517. But you perfectly well understand that there are times when the prisoners must be at their work?—I understand that certainly.

3518. Your parishioners in Cardiff are not all of a very poor class, are they?—Not all of them, but most of them.

3519. Some of them are of the better class of artizans?—It is natural that there should be a sprinkling of such persons.

3520. A great many of them are attracted here by the ironworks in South Wales?—Yes, they are Irish generally of the humbler classes; they are labourers mostly; some are cadgers or dealers in a small way, sellers of fire-wood, chalk, sand, and so forth.

3521. The labourers, as a rule, have pretty good wages in that part, have they not?—I believe many have, but that is a matter upon which I have very little knowledge; it is out of my line entirely.

3522. But you have an idea of the welfare of your congregation, have you not?—Yes, but I do not consider that that is exactly an item of my pastoral duty.

3523. But, as the priest of the district, you would know something about it?—Many of them get good wages, no doubt.

5324. Are they well able to support their ministers in Cardiff?—They do as well as they can, I suppose; they have a true Irish heart, which is characterised by generosity and good feeling for the clergy.

3525. Have you any assistant?—I have not; when I am absent one of my confrères attends; he is there this morning.

3526. By permission of the justices, I suppose?—We never mooted the question; any one of us who applies is allowed to go in.

3527. Have you ever applied for an assistant?—I have not; I do not require one.

3528. I suppose you are pretty well aware that it is the case that in Glamorganshire upon one or two occasions, the question of paying the Roman Catholic priest has been mooted?—I believe it has been in Cardiff itself.

3529. And once in Swansea, was it not?—I am not aware of that; that was probably before my official time.

3530. With reference to the opinion expressed here in the Parliamentary Return, that "The prisoners of all denominations, differing from the Established Church, accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain, and attend the services in the chapel;" you stated that you knew perfectly well that that proceeded from the chaplain himself; I want to know how you know that?—By the general knowledge we have of the feeling of our people; that makes me sincerely believe that if the Roman Catholic priest stood towards the Roman Catholic prisoners in exactly the same position in which the Protestant chaplain stands towards his own co-religionists, and if our people knew that such was the case, they would turn the whole of their attention to their own priest, most decidedly. If we were upon equal terms, not one of them would dream of having the advice, or services, or assistance of a clergyman who was not of their own persuasion; I mean in religious or spiritual matters. The proof of this is that they never go near those clergymen when out of gaol, for such purposes.

3531. But that is not an answer to my question; this return is signed by two visiting justices and the governor; and you were asked by an honourable Member, "Who wrote this report," and you said you knew that the chaplain of the gaol wrote it; I want to know from whence you derive your knowledge that the chaplain of the gaol gave this opinion?—From a report which the chaplain prepared not long ago (I do not know the date), for the visiting justices, I think for the quarter sessions, or some such meeting. I know that he wrote and laid before them a report, and I take it for granted that, this being a public and official act, the report must have been published, as such things generally are.

3532. You know this from hearsay, that is all, is it not?—I know as a fact, that it is from the report of the Protestant chaplain. I had a little friendly argument with him about a certain word which he had used in his report, and we made it up in a very amicable way.

Rev. F. Signini.

5 May 1870.

3533. Do you mean those words?—Yes, I happened to notice them also at the very time.

3534. Chairman.] In other words, the justices adopted the words used by the chaplain in a former document?—Yes, whether those are the exact words, or not, I cannot exactly say, but those are the sentiments expressed by the chaplain, Mr. Protheroe.

3535. Mr. Guest.] You do not mean that he wrote that which is signed by the justices?—No, but that is identical in sentiment; the visiting justices endorsed his report in that particular.

3536. Chairman.] In fact the visiting justices received their authority upon that matter from the chaplain?—Yes, they received their authority from the chaplain upon that point, I firmly and sincerely believe that.

3537. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] If the visiting justices wished to know how the ministrations of a minister of religion were received by the prisoners, is it not probable that they would see the visiting minister upon the subject, or take his report with reference to the fact?—It is most natural.

3538. Is not that the case in every gaol, and is not that the case here?—Yes.

3539. When you say the visiting justices' statement is in substance the same as the Protestant minister's report, you have no doubt, and in fact you know, that the visiting justices having asked the Protestant chaplain for his report with reference to the manner in which his ministrations were received by the prisoners, accepted his account of it, and embodied that in their report?—Yes, exactly.

3540. Mr. Guest.] Do I understand you to say that it is through an admission of the chaplain himself, in a friendly argument which you had with the chaplain on the subject, that you are able to state that those are his words, which are signed by two visiting justices and the governor?—Not from the explanation which took place between us upon the expression to which I was referring; it was independently of that; but I think the chaplain's report containing the words in question appeared in the local papers of Cardiff.

3541. But that is a common report, and common report is very often a common falsehood teller; I want to know whether it is directly within your knowledge that the Protestant chaplain wrote that report?—I have not myself read that report, but I know it came up accidentally that that was the fact.

3542. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] I suppose that although Roman Catholic prisoners may gratefully receive the ministrations of the Protestant clergyman, you have no doubt that the members of any religious persuasion would be more likely to have their hearts touched and be reached by a minister of their own persuasion?—Yes; in the way of reformation.

3543. Would not that be the case, particularly with a church that teaches its children especially to reverence its priests?—I should say so.

3544. With regard to the routine of prison life interfering with the instruction to prisoners, if it were represented to you that the hour allotted to you clashed with the daily routine of the prison, would you not willingly alter it?—I not only would, but I have done so, and I have even foregone the instruction altogether for a week or tw in consequence of the number of officers in th gaol being short at the time.

3545. Further, if prison life is not interrupte by the daily ministrations of the Protestar chaplain, you do not see why it should be inte rupted by your ministrations to a lesser numbe of Roman Catholic prisoners?—I do not.

3546. I believe the reason why you made n further applications was not that you were satis fied with your position, but having obtained cer tain comparatively small concessions you preferre to trust to the advancing sense of justice of th country for the removal of those disadvantage to which you and your co-religionists were sub ject?—Yes, understanding by "the authorities the governing powers, as influenced by publi opinion expressing itself ultimately through a Act of Parliament.

3547. Looking at the ordinary class of pri soners, is it not very likely that they might no be particularly desirous always to see thei priest?—There are some very few cases in whicl such is the fact. Some most hardened sinner have no desire to see a priest.

3548. Would not that apply equally to Roma Catholics and Protestants, that a person who i sunk in vice might shun the visits of a ministe of religion of his own or another persuasion?— think that when that happens they force th Protestant prisoner to attend.

3550. You think that if it is right that th Protestant minister should have access to th Protestant prisoners, the same measure should b meted out to the Catholic minister?—I conside that the Catholic priest should have the self-sam spiritual authority over his own people as th Protestant chaplain has over his; that the pries should have nothing to do with the Protestan people, and the Protestant clergymen nothing t do with the Catholic people when they have onc given in their names as Catholics, except wher of their own free and independent will, they say "I do not wish for this minister any more. wish for the other;" then each must be free t follow his own religious impulses.

3551. You think criminal classes of whateve persuasion, having been once taken cognizanc of by the State, and being confined by the Stat in the prison, should be allowed by the Stat equal spiritual advantages?—That is my view.

3552. Mr. Downing.] You stated that you di not think it worth while to make a complain with reference to the attendance of Roman Catholi prisoners at the Protestant service?—Not to th visiting justices.

3553. I take it for granted that what you mean was that you did not wish to do it under th circumstance in which you found yourself placed —Yes; I thought I could do better by speakin quietly and gently to the officials of the place.

3554. And if you thought you could preven it, would you do it?—Certainly.

3555. You would feel that to be a conscientiou obligation on you? — Yes; excepting it wa contrary to the prisoner's own deliberate min I should try to induce them to do that which wa according to their own conscience.

Rev. F. Signini.

5 May 1870.

3556. Can you say from your experience, nd your attendance in any Catholic prisons, hat you have made a sensible impression upon hose who have been perhaps criminals for a very ong time?—I have no doubt of it.

3557. Mr. Walpole.] You stated in answer to question put by the honourable Member for ork just now, that when you went to visit the risoners in their cells, they were occasionally rdered to other work, and that you could not see em, in consequence of that order; am I right n understanding that that was so?—That is what wished to convey; that is, assuming that the risoners' statements were true. I did not sually visit the prisoners in their cells. They ere to come to me in a private cell.

3558. Was that order given on purpose to pre- ent your seeing them, or was it an order given ecause they had their work to do in the ordinary ourse of the prison duties?—The latter is per- ectly possible.

3559. You do not wish to convey to the Com- ittee that there was any desire to remove them rom your superintendence?—I should be doing rong if I were not to endeavour to remove any mpression of that kind. I do not speak of mo- ives; I speak of facts which might be inquired nto, if found necessary.

3560. Chairman.] Is there anything further hat you wish to represent to the Committee?— wish to state this. For a long time after the ommencement of my attendance, I was under he impression that the number of Roman Catholic risoners shown by my list as being actually in- nates of the gaol was generally equal or near to he number of those brought together for in- struction into the chapel. But I once accidentally compared the number present with those who were then in the gaol, and I found a very remarkable difference of about one-third. I looked over the previous entries (I generally put down the number that attend each time), and I found that that had been the case a great many times. I thought, of course, that that was wrong; that not sufficient attention was paid to informing the prisoners of the presence of their clergyman in the gaol, and I remonstrated upon that. Since then things have vastly improved; there is no ground for such a complaint at present; but for a long time that was carried on, with what intention I could not tell.

3561. Mr. Guest.] The chaplain, as you are aware, receives now 250 l. a year; you, in a general way, stated that you would be quite satisfied if a Roman Catholic chaplain was required for the gaol that he should receive enough for his living?—Enough for his support, clothing, and incidental expenses.

3562. What should you think would cover that?—From 90 l. to 100 l. a year, just what a decent person requires in the position of a priest.

3563. Mr. Downing.] Would you be satisfied with 100 l. a year?—Yes, I think so, unless the work grew vastly larger, and then the question might have to be re-considered.

3564. Sir J. Trelawny.] That is irrespective of the necessaries for Divine worship?—Quite so.

3565. Mr. Guest.] Would you have any objection to the present existing chapel in Cardiff gaol being used by the Roman Catholic prisoners for worship?—None whatever.

The Rev. IGNATIUS COLLINGRIDGE, called in; and Examined.

Rev. I. Collingridge. 9 May 1870.

3566. Chairman.] You reside in Winchester, do you not?—I do.

3567. How long have you resided there?—Since the year 1848.

3568. Since that time have you been in the habit of visiting the Hampshire county gaol, situated in Winchester?—From the first month of my being there down to this time I have continually visited it, unless when absent or sick.

3569. In 1848, under what circumstances did you visit it?—I gained access to the Catholic prisoners, if the prisoners themselves had the courage to tell the governor that they wished to see me. I had no other way in which I could get to the Catholic prisoners.

3570. You could not enter the prison unless you were specially invited, in consequence of a request of a particular Catholic prisoner to see you?—That was so.

3571. When was there a relaxation of that rule?—I cannot specify the date, but I should suppose 13 or 14 years ago.

3572. What permission was given to you then?—There was a considerable number of prisoners then in the prison, a larger number than there had been, and then, I know not why, unless it was on that account the authorities allowed me to go in at any hour that was convenient.

3573. Had you made any application with a view of obtaining greater facilities for visiting the prisoners?—At that time I think I had not.

3574. Then was that relaxation of a former rule voluntary on the part of the authorities?—As far as I know it was.

3575. It was not in consequence of any application of yours?—No.

3576. Did you then visit the prisoners, and at what hour did you visit them?—At any convenient hour.

3577. Was there any intimation made to you of the change in the previous rules?—No.

3578. How did you know it?—I found it out by practice; that is, I used to go to the door and ask to see the governor, and I had to wait sometimes a quarter of an hour, and sometimes three-quarters of an hour; at last I saw the governor, and then he generally, either by himself or hi deputy, took me to the prisoners.

3579. Then, if the rule were relaxed, was no it to a certain extent owing to your frequent ap plications to the governor?—It was owing to m going into the gaol so often; that is what I sup pose was the cause of it.

3580. Will you just state to the Committe what amount of permission was granted to yo then?—I used to be allowed to go at any reason able hour, and the warders put me into one o the cells, and brought the prisoners to me on after the other; one prisoner would be in wit me, while another was standing at the door, an the rest were in their cells. As soon as one cam out from me the one standing at the door wen in, and then another was fetched from anothe cell, and put outside the door.

3581. For how many years did that syste continue?—I should suppose about six years.

3582. Were you allowed then to see them i common?—No, neither then or now. I neve was allowed to see more than one at a time.

3583. Are you now recognised by the authori ties as the Catholic visiting clergyman?—Ye fully.

3584. Are you appointed as such?—I am a pointed by the Court.

3585. At what time do you now visit?—I a allowed now to visit from quarter past twelve t half-past one, and in the evening from quart past six to eight o'clock; this is a very rece concession, made, indeed, last month.

3586. Will you inform the Committee of th nature of the service performed in the middle the day?—I go about from cell to cell, a ward accompanying me, and opening the door to l me in. I then go in and see the prisoner a talk to him, and then go to another prisoner a talk to him.

3587. Is the same routine adopted in the eve ing?—Just the same. I can never see two them together, nor any of them anywhere exce in their cells.

3588. Have you permission to celebrate Divi worship upon the Sunday?—No, neither upon t Sunday nor on any other day.

3589. Ha

39. Have you ever asked for permission to ? —Yes, repeatedly.

90. Have you asked permission to do so a late period?—About six months ago.

91. Did you make a formal application, and om?—Yes; I made a formal application to isiting justices.

92. You have made repeated formal applica- to the authorities to be allowed to have ous worship upon the Sunday?—I have repeated applications to have religious wor-

3. How many Roman Catholic prisoners are now in the gaol?—The last time I counted which was upon Saturday, there were only 39.

4. According to the return here, it appears n the 20th of July last year there were 49 lic prisoners?—Very probably.

5. What is about the average? — The al average is about 45, but I have had as as 57 Catholic prisoners, and now the num- low; only 39.

6. You reside in Winchester; what is the n Catholic population of that town?— e are about 500 Roman Catholics.

7. Does that congregation in any way sup- ie inmates of the gaol?—I cannot say that plies none, but very few indeed.

8. Would you give the Committee an idea w many?—I do not think that during the I have spent in Winchester there have been than a dozen from the town.

9. That is, a dozen for 22 years?—Yes.

0. Will you tell us then who those pri- s are?—They are almost entirely soldiers; few are marines, and a sprinkling of sailors the fleet.

1. Are those supplied from Aldershot, urst, Gosport, and Portsmouth?—Those e chief feeders.

2. Then I understand you to say that they ther soldiers, marines, or sailors?—Yes; at oment I believe there are not two civilians gaol.

3. When you made a formal application to Divine service upon the Sunday, what was ature of the objection put forward by the ng justices or the magistrates?—The autho- have put forward different objections at us times, for I have made that request re- dly. One objection was, that if they granted ermission to the Catholics, they would have nt the same to the Dissenters; and another tion was, that they had no room provided ie purpose.

4. With reference to the first objection, do hink from your own knowledge of the dif- ces between Dissenters and Catholics, that is any force whatever in that objection?— k there is none whatever.

5. Will you state to the Committee why hink there is no force in that objection?— use Protestants of one kind do not object to ate with Protestants of another kind in ie worship and in holy things; whereas, lics do object to associate with any sort of stant, whether Dissenters, or of the Church gland.

6. Can Catholics, without a practical aban- ent of their faith, attend the Protestant ip?—They cannot do it without apostacy.

7. That is to say, without practical apos- —It is real apostacy.

8. Therefore, there can be no real analogy 0.60. whatever, with reference to the attendance at the Protestant worship, between Catholics and Dissenters?—Certainly not.

3609. That is clear beyond doubt, is it not?—Upon Catholic principles, certainly.

3610. What other objections were made; was it said that they had no room?—It was first said that the authorities would have to furnish a room.

3611. Did you offer to furnish a room for them?—Yes, I got rid of that objection by offering to furnish a room; after that, they said that there was no room at all, that they would have to build a room; and my reply to that was, "I will build the room, if you will simply permit me."

3612. You would build and furnish a room for that purpose?—Yes, certainly.

3613. Would you, yourself, supply all the necessaries required?—Yes; I offered to do so.

3614. I suppose you offered to do so on the ground that you thought it so essential to the proper instruction, and the probable reformation of those people, to have full means of religious instruction for the Catholic prisoners?—Yes, precisely.

3615. Do any of the Catholic prisoners attend the Protestant worship upon the Sunday?—I am sorry to say that some of them do, but not many.

3616. Some, however, do attend the Protestant worship?—Yes, some of them.

3617. You have, I suppose, remonstrated with them for doing so?—Invariably. As soon as I can see a prisoner I speak to him upon the subject, because the governor, as soon as every prisoner is in his cell, goes to him and asks him whether he will attend the chapel or whether he would prefer seeing his own priest. Now, a great many of our prisoners are so stupid as not to understand that the chapel means the Protestant chapel; they are accustomed to call the place of Protestant worship a "church;" the "chapel" they consider is their place of worship, and although the governor asks them whether they will go to chapel or see the priest, they say sometimes that they will go to chapel, meaning the Catholic chapel.

3618. Is it within your knowledge that it is almost the invariable rule that the Catholic Church in Ireland is called the chapel?—I can easily imagine that, because it was the old name; they had nothing like churches a few years ago.

3619. Are your prisoners generally Irish?—Almost to a man.

3620. When chapel is spoken of, the Catholic prisoners very naturally imagine that it is a place for Catholic worship?—Yes, that is so.

3621. Can you give the Committee any other reasons which induce those prisoners to attend the Protestant service?—I think the real reason generally is to avoid the tedium of solitary confinement which they must undergo while the other prisoners are at worship, if they do not join them in that worship.

3622. Do you think that that is an indirect inducement to proselytism?—So far as the joining in the worship is a species of apostacy.

3623. Or may it not lead to something quite as bad, namely, indifferentism?—Yes.

3624. Tending to a disregard of their own faith?—Yes, I think so.

3625. On what grounds, if any, did the magistrates refuse you permission to see the prisoners

Rev. I. Collingridge.

9 May 1870.

in common?—I suppose what I have already stated must be the only objections. I know of nothing else that the authorities have alleged.

3626. Do you think yourself, considering the matter, that it is so very difficult a thing to provide a room in a large establishment for the accommodation of 50 prisoners?—I think there can be no difficulty whatever in doing what is done in several convict gaols, and, I believe, in some borough gaols also, namely, to allow the same room to be used for the service of both Catholics and Protestants.

3627. You would have no objection to that arrangement?—None whatever.

3628. So that that would remove the difficulty with reference to the room?—Precisely, if they agree to do that.

3629. Have you expressed your willingness to use the Protestant Chapel?—Yes; I have proposed that to the visiting justices. When they said that they had no room, I said the same room will do for us both.

3630. What answer did they give to that?—They said that it would be attended with inconvenience, and that it did not accord with the rules or the routine of the gaol.

3631. Do you appreciate the full force of their objection?—I think there is nothing in it.

3632. There is no inconvenience which could not be easily overcome; is that so?—None whatever, I think.

3633. How far is the gaol from your residence?—Nearly a mile; up a very steep hill.

3634. Then you go up and come down that hill twice a day, I suppose?—Yes, if I go to the gaol twice a day; but though I may go twice a day, I am not under the obligation of going twice a day, so that very often I go but once a day.

3635. But sometimes, or frequently, you do go twice a day?—Yes.

3636. In order to do so you have to take a rather long walk?—It is four miles pretty nearly in the day, if I go twice, being almost a mile up and a mile down.

3637. With reference to books, do you supply books to the prisoners?—I used to do so, but I do not now.

3638. Why do you not do so now?—Because the justices are kind enough to supply them, and pay for them out of the county rates.

3639. What books are they?—The Catholic Bible and the Prayer Book, and others recommended by me.

3640. Were they suggested and approved of by you?—Yes.

3641. And adopted by the visiting justices?—Yes; they have not refused a single book since they began to supply them.

3642. When did they begin to supply them?—About three years ago.

3643. Do the Catholic prisoners have access to the Protestant books?—I believe they may; I do not mean that they are given them without my consent; but they are allowed leave to take them out of the library with my consent.

3644. But are there any books given to the Catholics to which you object?—I object to the presence in every cell of the Protestant Bible, the Protestant Prayer Book, and the Protestant tracts; those books are invariably to be found in every cell, and I object to each and all of them.

3645. I need scarcely say that the tracts and the Book of Common Prayer are strongly anti-Catholic?—Most decidedly.

3646. In the service in the Book of C[ommon] Prayer will not you find, in speaking [of] doctrines of the Catholic Church, it i[s] that "they are fond things vainly invent[ed] repugnant to the word of God"?—Yes.

3647. And that our solemn service "blasphemous fables and dangerous decei[ts]" Yes.

3648. Those expressions are within the of the book?—Yes.

3649. And whoever may believe what is there, it is scarcely right to impress that Catholics?—Certainly not; it seems to me insulting to them.

3650. With reference to the time y[ou] allowed to give to each prisoner, do you th[ink] is sufficient for any practical instruction wi[th] hope of reformation?—It is much bette[r] than it used to be, I must say; but very la[te] was allowed to be there only at noon, f[rom] quarter past 12 to half-past 1.

3651. What time did that give you fo[r] prisoner?—About two minutes per day, [I] pose.

3652. Would that be sufficient time to p[ro] any really marked impression upon them?—I have not time now; even if I could use time it would not be sufficient.

3653. But, if you saw them in common, not the same instruction you give to one all?—Yes; it would be better to see th[em] common than to see them as I do now, o[ne] one; but it would be much better if I cou[ld] them in classes.

3654. Your desire is to render your instr[uc] as valuable and effective as possible, is it n[ot]? Exactly so.

3655. Do you desire to give them instr[uc] in common every day in the week, and a[lso] have Divine worship and instruction up[on] Sunday?—I should be happy if that co[uld] so.

3656. And you have made proposals t[o] effect, have you not?—I have never men[tion] Divine worship on the Sunday in particular in speaking of Divine worship, we mean I worship on the Sunday as well as on other 3657. You contemplated Divine service Sunday?—Yes.

3658. When you applied to the visiti[ng] tices you had that in your view, had you n[ot]? Yes.

3659. You are paid a salary, are you n[ot]? For the last five years a salary of 40*l.* has received. I put it in that way, as I hav[e] always received it myself.

3660. Were you in England at the time that salary was first given?—No; I was in tugal. I was in search of health, as my h[ealth] had been broken up, and I was trying t[o] myself together again.

3661. Do you know the circumstances which that salary was given; was it applied —No, I think not; in fact, I am sure not.

3662. Was it the voluntary act of the m[a]trates?—I am sure it was.

3663. If you had been at home, would it been received by you as an adequate payn[ent] —I would not have received it at all.

3664. Why not?—Because I think it crously small.

3665. What is the Protestant chaplain now?—£. 300 a year.

6. Has he a house?—He has a very nice and garden.

7. And other advantages, I suppose?—He he advantage of being close to his work.

8. You considered that sum of 40*l.* very indeed, and you would have preferred not ve received it?—I would not have received had been there at the time.

9. Have you made any application for its ise since you have been there?—No.

0. I think I was right in saying that you ore anxious to procure religious instruction ur prisoners than to increase your salary? o not want the salary; I not only do not it increased, but I do not want it at all. I ry willing to do the work without a salary, authorities will allow me to do it in such a r as will produce a proper effect upon the of the prisoners.

1. At present you cannot do that, as your are tied?—That is so.

2. Do you think that if the magistrates ou free access to the prisoners, and allowed o have instruction at such times as were ary, you could really produce a useful upon the minds of the prisoners?—I do not it, especially upon the minds of those who e most ignorant among them.

3. Do you wish to make any observation any matter which I may not have asked on, but which you yourself are cognizant No, I do not recollect any matter that I desire to bring before the Committee.

4. Do you not think that it is a very unpolicy on the part of whoever may be sible for it, that the Catholic prisoners are lowed the same opportunities of improvethroughout the country, generally, as the stant prisoners are?—I think that it cer is; I think that until we have those rights d to us by Act of Parliament, we shall not justice done to us; I think it is an in that we should be dependent upon the of any body of magistrates.

5. You are of opinion that it should not pendent upon the individual will of any body to do a great wrong, or to grant a —That is so.

6. Is it your opinion that the State stands parentis to a prisoner, and is bound to e for his religious instruction and improve —I think so.

7. If that be true in the case of a Pro prisoner, it is equally true in the case atholic prisoner?—Quite so.

8. And you would consider that it is unfair to blame Catholics if they are mitted, when they are not afforded facili r religious instruction when in gaols?—

9. Is it not unfair to blame them for the uences of the acts of those who will not em religious instruction when they are in y?—It seems to me quite unfair.

0. Are you of opinion that the law should nged, and that what is now permissive be made obligatory?—Precisely; I think isoners ought to be placed upon a perfect ith the Protestant prisoners, whose rights ured to them by Act of Parliament. It is the power of the visiting justices to take rom them the services upon the Sunday services of their chaplain, and so I think ld be with us.

3681. Are you of opinion that in any prison where there is only one service upon the Sunday, there is a very great inducement on the part of Catholics to attend it?—There is an inducement to avoid the tedium of the solitary confinement of the cell, and that is no trifle.

3682. And that source of injustice you think should be done away with?—Yes.

3683. Quite independently of the advantage of having his own clergyman to instruct him, and his own worship to attend?—Yes.

3684. Mr. Synan.] Do you think that solitary confinement is looked upon by the prisoners as a species of punishment?—I think they look upon it as the greatest punishment they have to undergo.

3685. And, therefore, you do not think that that which is fairly counted as punishment, just as much as putting upon the treadmill or anything else, should be made the instrument in inducing them to go to the Protestant worship or any worship not their own?—Precisely.

3686. You say that you visit the prison twice a day?—I do not as a fact; I am allowed to visit twice a day, that is except Sunday and Saturday.

3687. Are you not allowed to visit on Sundays and Saturdays?—I am allowed to visit on Sundays at noon and on Saturdays at noon, but not in the evenings.

3688. Was the application that you made, an application for liberty to celebrate divine service upon the Sunday?—I did not make any special mention of the Sunday.

3689. Did you make that application by letter?—Yes, by letter.

3690. Did you receive an answer by letter?—I did.

3691. Have you those answers with you, or any of them?—Yes; first of all, I have a pamphlet which I printed in the year 1861, consisting of correspondence between myself and the visiting justices.

3692. That discloses the correspondence between you and them?—Up to that time; but there has been correspondence since.

3693. Do those letters of refusal that you received to your applications contain the grounds of the refusal?—No, they do not.

3694. For instance, they do not state the grounds upon which the prison authorities refused your permission to hold Divine service upon the Sunday?—I think not in any letter directed to me. I gather those objections, which I have before stated, not from their letters to me, but from the reports published in the newspapers of the proceedings at the quarter sessions.

3695. The letters from the governing body to you did not disclose the grounds upon which they refused those applications?—They did not.

3696. Is there a Creed Register kept in the prison?—There is a book kept, in which all the Roman Catholics are entered, or, at least, I suppose they are all entered; it professes to contain all those who belong to my religion.

3697. You are aware that, by the last Act of Parliament, there is a Creed Register obliged to be kept?—I am aware of that.

3698. Have you access to that?—I have access to a book which contains the names of the prisoners I am allowed to visit.

3699. But does it contain a register of the creed of all the prisoners in the gaol?—No, it does not.

3700. Have

Rev. I. Collingridge.

9 May 1870.

3700. Have you ever seen that Creed Register in the gaol containing the name and creed of every prisoner in the gaol?—I have not.

3701. Have you ever asked to see it?—No; I do not think there is any such book. I have never seen it, and I think I should have come across it if it had existed.

3702. Have you applied to the governor of the prison for liberty to see the document in which the creed of the prisoners was entered?—No, I have not.

3703. What is the application you made to the governor with respect to seeing the record of the creed of the prisoners?—I never made any application with respect to seeing the record of the creed of the prisoners.

3704. From whom do you ascertain that a prisoner is a Catholic or a Protestant?—From this book, in which all the Catholic prisoners are inserted.

3705. That is given to you as a kind of memorandum of the creed of your own people by the governor; is that so?—Precisely.

3706. Did you apply for that, or was it given you voluntarily by the governor?—It was given to me voluntarily by the governor after the passing of the first Prison Ministers Bill.

3707. When he was handing you that document, did he tell you that there was a general Creed Register kept in the prison?—No.

3708. He said nothing at all about it?—No.

3709. Did he tell you from what document he took that copy or that memorandum which he handed to you?—No.

3710. Did he tell you that he took it from any document or register in the prison?—He did not take it from anything at all; the clerk made it out.

3711. Did the clerk make it out from any other document?—I do not know that he did. I look in the general books, and I see "R. C." written in red ink over certain names, and those names that have the red letters "R. C." on them are taken out and put into my book; that is the book in which the prisoners are numbered and named, and the Catholics are marked with those red letters.

3712. And nobody else is marked?—No.

3713. You said that the governor was in the habit of asking the Catholic prisoners when they came into the gaol whether they would go to the chapel or see the priest?—Yes, that is so.

3714. How did you ascertain that; was it from the governor himself?—Yes; I have talked to the governor about it, and he does not deny it; and I have tried to show him that it is not a fair thing to do, and he scarcely denies that; but he is under the direction of the justices, and cannot act otherwise than he does.

3715. Was that his excuse?—That is what he said to me when I complained to him of the practice.

3716. Did you complain to the governor that your people misunderstood the meaning of the word "chapel"; that they thought it meant the Catholic chapel?—I do not think I put that to him.

3717. You put it on the ground only of general unfairness?—I told him that it was unfair for a man in his position to ask a poor trembling culprit any such question.

3718. What is the court that you mentioned composed of?—Of the magistrates of the southern division of Hampshire.

3719. Are you the only clergyman for gregation of 500?—I have lately had an as and I have one now.

3720. Are those 500 of your people Almost all of them.

3721. I suppose they find it a hard th support two clergymen by voluntary co tions?—No, they do not support two clerg the place is so far endowed that, with wh receive also from the barracks and the litt comes from the gaol, we can go along v ever calling for contributions.

3722. What do you call endowed?—Th certain monies (how located I do not know) produce so much per annum; that is gi the support of the priests at Winchester.

3723. Then that is I suppose, the re voluntary contributions perhaps over the co —No.

3724. Is it a local contribution?—No.

3725. Does it consist of gifts?—Origin may have been gifts.

3726. Does your attendance at the pris der an assistant necessary for your peo what was the cause of your employing That was the main cause of it.

3727. But for the attendance at the p suppose, you could yourself attend to th gious wants of the congregation?—Ver indeed.

3728. Without any assistance?—Yes well indeed.

3729. Do you think 40 l. a year suffic pay for your assistant?—If you mean to p his support, and for what must be allowe I do not think so.

3730. Independently of everything else, a year sufficient to maintain, in the positi gentleman, your assistant priest?—Certain

3731. You stated to the Committee tha is great ignorance amongst the prisoner they all ignorant and uneducated, or the part of them?—No; some of them hav abilities naturally, and at the same time h a little cultivation, and can read well, wri cypher tolerably, and are rather intelligen

3732. How many of them do you mean apply to, to the half, to two-thirds, or wh portion?—Perhaps it would apply to one-

3733. Then the other two-thirds are wh may call ignorant and uneducated?—Co tively so, and some are very ignorant ind

3734. Apart from the inconvenience of struction, would not religious instructi classes, or even instruction in common of general character, be more effective as the people receiving instruction, than by —Yes.

3735. When you instruct those 49 p singly, you say that you can only give prisoner about two minutes?—It is rathe now, since I have increased my time; I is about three minutes.

3736. But if you could instruct them mon, could not you devote a whole hour t —Very well.

3737. And for moral purposes ge would that not be as effective, or more each individual, than if you instructe individually for two minutes each?—Cert 3738. Lord Henley.] Do you know wha number of the Protestant prisoners in th —The number according to the return is 3739. You mentioned that the salary

Pr

Protestant minister was 300 l. a year?—Yes, and a house.

3740. Does the number of Protestant prisoners ever rise as high as 300?—I do not know.

3741. And the number of Catholic prisoners you mentioned as 39, did you not?—That was the actual number when I last counted them.

3742. Then the salary of 40 l. a year, which is now given to the Catholic chaplain would not be quite proportional to the number of prisoners, but it would not be so very far different from the scale on which the Protestant chaplain is remunerated?—No; judging of it on that principle only.

3743. But, then, why if those two payments are somewhat proportional, do you repudiate the payment to the Catholic chaplain as being so wholly inadequate?—One reason is, because I am living a mile or nearly a mile from the gaol, and consequently I have to walk two miles every time that I attend the gaol from my own house. Another reason is this, that I do not think that a capitation tax is a fair way of paying two gentlemen whose circumstances differ so much; that is to say, I do not mean merely on account of my distance from my work, but if I am there and perform Divine service, we will say for 40 prisoners, it takes me as much time, and labour, and attention, and care, as it would if there were 100.

3744. But the nature of your ministration has not been that of a public service, but of private interviews with each separate prisoner?—Yes; but I have to spend more time there than the Protestant minister does; though he has 300 l. a year, and I have only 40 l.

3745. Does that arise from the particular way in which your services are regulated by the prison authorities, or from the nature of the Catholic religion, which requires your attention to be given to each prisoner individually?—It is mainly because the prison authorities will not allow me to see more than one prisoner at once.

3746. If you could see the prisoners collectively, you think you could manage for the Catholic prisoners with the same amount of time and salary as the Protestant chaplain does for the Protestant prisoners?—Not exactly so, for there are requirements in our religion which do not exist in the Protestant religion; there should be more intercourse between the priest and the prisoner; the priest should see the prisoner in private, as he has certain things to transact with him which the Protestant chaplain has not to do.

3747. Cæteris paribus, if you were asked point-blank, must the Roman Catholic chaplain be paid at a higher rate than the Protestant chaplain, you would be obliged to say, yes?—I should say, no, decidedly.

3748. He might be paid at an equal rate then?—Yes.

3749. I should like to know whether you have any general knowledge of the position of your Church throughout England, as I wished to ask you whether you think it would be likely that in any great borough or county gaols in this country, there would be wanting a Roman Catholic priest residing near, who could give his services to the Catholic prisoners if required; do you think there is a Roman Catholic priest resident in every large town?—I should say pretty nearly so.

3750. In those cases where there was no Catholic priest residing within easy distance of the prison, in what way would it be possible for the Roman Catholic prisoners to be attended to; have you ever thought of that, or have there ever been any cases where the Roman Catholic prisoners were a great distance from their priest?—Never.

3751. You have always found in the case of any great prison, that there has been a Roman Catholic priest within easy distance?—Yes.

3752. Mr. Dalrymple.] You told the Committee that you were consulted with reference to the books which the Roman Catholic prisoners had to read?—"Consulted" is perhaps hardly the word; the justices introduce no Catholic books into the gaol for the use of the Catholic prisoners, except such as I myself request them to purchase; but they purchase them now themselves and pay for them, and not I.

3753. When it is said that they can have Protestant books also, I conclude you mean books which are common to all?—Books in the general library.

3754. You mentioned that a Bible and a Book of Common Prayer and a tract were in everybody's cell; whose arrangement is that?—I suppose it is an arrangement made by the order of the visiting justices.

3755. Have you ever remonstrated against that?—Yes, I have.

3756. What was the result of your remonstrance?—The answer, I think, was that it would be an inconvenience to remove them from those cells which the Catholics happened to occupy, inasmuch as they are continually changing the cells. The same prisoner does not continue in one cell through the course of his term of imprisonment, but he continues there as long as he is in class 1, and then when he is in class 2 he is removed to another cell, and to another in class 3, and so on until he gets to class 5.

3757. Then the probability is that those prisoners would be short-sentence prisoners, and that it was not worth while to remove those books, because the same prisoner would probably be in that cell only a very short time?—The books are left in all the cells whether the prisoners are there for long or short sentences.

3758. I take it that the question put by the governor with reference to whether the prisoners would attend the chapel, or see their own clergyman, was a matter of prison arrangement. You do not mean to say that it was done with any proselytising intention?—I cannot suppose anything of the sort on the part of the governor, most certainly; he puts the question in as fair a way as possible.

3759. I think we may infer that the reason of a prisoner going to chapel would be from a desire to get out of the cell, and not from any confusion between the word "church" and the word "chapel?"—It has happened through that confusion, according to what the prisoners themselves have told me.

3760. But would it not be the case that in all such buildings the place of worship would be called the "chapel," whether Catholic or Protestant?—That may be the fact, but it is not a fact which would suggest itself to their ignorant minds.

3761. Mr. Guest.] You have had some correspondence with the visiting justices upon the subject of the association of the prisoners, have you not?—Yes.

Rev. I. Collingridge.

9 May 1870.

3762. In what year did your correspondence begin?—The 10th of May 1860.

3763. Did you ever mention to the justices in this correspondence that you would desire to have service upon the Sunday?—I think the Sunday was never specially mentioned.

3764. Did you ask for any services at any time?—Yes. I have asked to be allowed to say mass for the prisoners; that is, that we might have Divine service.

3765. Did you ask for permission to have Divine service generally?—Yes.

3766. Did you not mean that you should be allowed to have Divine service on the Sunday?—I do not know that I had Sunday particularly in my mind.

3767. You told me that you asked to be permitted to hold Divine worship according to your rites, in the gaol?—Yes, that is so.

3768. Had that been conceded to you by the visiting justices, do you mean the Committee to understand that you would not have had it on the Sunday?—If it had been permitted it would have been held upon the Sunday, but if there had been any other day specified it would have been upon that day.

3769. But I take it that you attach more importance to having Divine service upon the Sunday than upon any other day in the week?—Yes, the Catholic Church orders all her children to hear mass on the Sunday.

3770. Therefore you consider that it would be more important that the Roman Catholic prisoners in a gaol should hear mass upon the Sunday than upon any other day in the week?—Certainly.

3771. There were several objections made to your application; you stated two, one being that if you obtained permission, any dissenting body might ask leave to perform their worship in the gaol upon the Sunday?—Yes.

3772. Another reason being that there was no room adequate for the purpose?—That was so.

3773. You stated that your answer to that objection was that you would build a room?—Ultimately. First of all, they observed that they would have to furnish a room, and I said, "I will furnish it myself," and then it was objected that there was no room, that they would have to build a room.

3774. And you then offered to build the room?—Then I offered to build the room.

3775. Is that in this correspondence?—No, this correspondence is ten years old, but this circumstance has just happened.

3776. When did it happen?—The last offer was in a letter to the Earl of Carnarvon, written about two months ago.

3777. When did this printed correspondence cease?—It was printed, I think, in 1861, so that it is nine years old.

3778. You renewed your application after 1861 to the visiting justices for permission to hold service?—Over and over again.

3779. After 1861, when did you write again?—I cannot give you any date.

3780. In fact we may take it that you have written to the visiting justices every year for that permission?—I do not know that I have written so often as that; I was in correspondence with the Earl of Carnarvon about it in the course of last year.

3781. Have you any copies of your correspondence in your possession here?—No, I have not.

3782. To what did your correspondence with Lord Carnarvon during the last year refer, did it refer to Divine worship on the Sunday or to your building a room, or to what did it refer?—It referred to all those questions, it referred to having Divine service, to the times when I myself was allowed to go to the gaol which I wished increased and which they kindly have increased, and also to my making use of my assistant when I am unable to go myself to the gaol, which they also very kindly granted; my assistant is now doing his duty there for the first day.

3783. Did you apply for any payment to that assistant?—Never nor for myself either.

3784. What was the answer with regard to your building a room?—I never had any answer to that point.

3785. Was that application made by a separate letter?—No.

3786. Was it mentioned amongst other things that you would be willing to build a room?—There certainly must have been other things in the letter, but I do not distinctly remember what those things were.

3787. You stated to the Committee that there was another objection put forward, namely, that the rules and the discipline of the prison would not permit of your having Divine worship?—That was in the same chapel with the Protestants, it was in answer to my observation. When they objected that they had no room, I observed "The same room answers the purposes of both Catholics and Protestants in convict gaols sometimes, and in military prisons, and in several borough prisons." Then they made that objection and said that it could not be done without upsetting the routine of the gaol.

3788. In answer to a question put by the honourable Chairman, you stated that you considered that objection was groundless, did you not?—I thought it could be easily made to square in with the regulations; the regulations are not the laws of the Medes and Persians; they could be altered, and why should they not be.

3789. Are you acquainted with the rules of the prison at all?—Very little.

3790. Do you know what employment the Roman Catholic prisoners, who do not attend the service, have during the time that the Protestants are at chapel?—They can do as they please; they can employ themselves if they like in picking oakum in their cells, or saying their own prayers privately; they can do what they like, in short, but they must be there in solitude.

3791. Were you, or were you not, told at any time by the governor, that one of the great difficulties of your holding service on Sundays, would be the inadequacy of the staff of the gaol?—It was stated that the prison authorities would have to get fresh warders, or something to that effect.

3792. Do you know how many warders there are in this gaol?—I do not know that.

3793. Have you any idea?—I should think 14 or 16 perhaps.

3794. Would you be surprised to hear that there were not so many?—Perhaps I had in my eye rather all the officers together, than the warders only; perhaps there are not so many warders, but I do not know.

3795. Were you ever told, or was it ever intimated to you, that in case there was service held, or that you were allowed permission to hold service vice upon the Sunday, the only way of doing it would be by asking the Roman Catholic prisoners to forego their exercise on that day?—Never, that I can remember.

3796. You have already stated that you consider that objection was without any foundation, as the laws could be altered; in what respect do you think they could be altered; you must have known pretty well the discipline of the gaol to be able to say that?—I think that all that would be needed would be a little addition to the laws rather than an alteration; there would only have to be added to the present regulations, as far as I see, that "the Catholic prisoners at such a time shall be assembled at such a place"; even the corridor of the prison would do for us.

3797. Are you not aware that prisoners are never left any portion of the day without employment of some sort or another?—If you mean that the Catholic prisoners are obliged to labour during the time that the Protestant prisoners are at worship, I think they are not.

3798. But at other times of the day they are?—There is a certain time allowed for breakfast, I believe, a certain time for dinner, and a certain time for supper; but, except those times, and when they are out for recreation, I think they are obliged to work.

3799. Are you thinking of the Sunday or week day in giving your last answer, as regards employment?—I suppose that there is no work done upon the Sunday.

3800. As far as you know, is there any work done upon the Sunday?—None at all.

3801. Then you do not know that during the time the Protestants are at worship the Roman Catholics are engaged in picking oakum?—When I said that I was alluding to week days only.

3802. You know that during week days they have not a moment for pleasure?—Many of them have.

3803. How long?—It depends upon circumstances; it depends upon the quality of the oakum which they happen to get to pick, and it depends upon their aptitude in picking it; some get through a large quantity of oakum in half the time that others do.

3804. And some of them do not get through it at all?—Precisely.

3805. But do you think that the discipline of the prison on week days would permit you to have time to assemble all the prisoners for worship?—I do not see why not.

3806. Without interfering with the present discipline of the gaol?—There must be some alteration made.

3807. Some relaxation of the work?—I do not say some relaxation of the work. I do not see why there need be any at all; your idea seems to be that if they go to worship, the time which they spend in worship must be lost to their labour. I think not; because you could compel them to labour during the time that Protestants were at worship, unless they are at worship themselves at the same time. If they are at worship at the same time, then it is perfectly fair that the Catholics should have freedom from labour the same as the Protestants; but if they are not at the same time with the Protestants at worship, then they should labour while the Protestants are at worship, and the Protestants should labour while the Catholics are at worship.

3808. Do the Protestants go to worship every day in the week?—Yes, every day in the week.

3809. Do you know at what hour?—A quarter past seven, I think.

3810. What time does that last?—I believe half an hour.

3811. I think you stated that if you had been at the gaol at the time when the salary was appointed to the Roman Catholic priest you would have refused to accept it?—I certainly would have refused it.

3812. You stated that you considered it ludicrously small?—Yes, I do; but it is not on that account merely that I would have refused it.

3813. Upon what ground would you have refused it beyond that?—I had an idea in my mind that in offering it they offered it chiefly for the purpose of being able to say they had offered it; and secondly, perhaps, in the hope that they would shut my mouth and stop my complaints.

3814. Do you receive 40 l. a year now from the visiting justices?—Yes.

3815. Though you consider it ludicrously small, and though you do not wish to have any salary whatever, you still receive it?—I do not say that I do not wish to have any salary whatever.

3816. Have you ever represented it to the visiting justices as being ludicrously small?—No, I never said one word to them about salary in my life, and never will.

3817. Though you thought it small you never asked for an increase?—No; and I never shall, under any circumstances.

3818. But you have never refused to receive it?—I have never refused to receive it.

3819. You say that the Roman Catholic priests, yourself, and also your confrère, are well supported in Winchester. You have an appointment under Government, have you not, in the barracks?—Yes.

3820. You now attend, or can attend the gaol, three hours a day, can you not?—I can, from half-past twelve to half-past one, and from a quarter past six to eight.

3821. That is three hours during the day; you can be in the gaol, if you choose, for five days in the week?—Yes.

3822. That is 15 hours in the week?—Yes.

3823. Do you consider that 40 l. a year is a ludicrously small payment for your services for 15 hours a week?—You must add to the time spent in the gaol the time spent in getting to and from the gaol. As I mentioned before, I live nearly a mile from the seat of my labours.

3824. Do you go there in the evenings frequently?—Very often; in fact, generally in the evenings.

3825. You have a district in Winchester that you minister to, have you not?—The whole of Winchester; and a considerable part of the country belongs to me as my parish or district.

3826. And you also attend the barracks on Sunday, do you not?—Not on the Sundays; indeed never for Divine service.

3827. Do you attend on week-days?—On week-days, just as it happens.

3828. Do you receive from the Government a salary for so doing?—Nothing fixed, but I have a capitation grant.

3829. What is that capitation grant?—Ten shillings for each man up to 100; that is, supposing that there are as many as from 50 up to 100 I get 10 s. for each man.

Rev. I. Collingridge.

9 May 1870.

3830. And, above that, how much do you get?—I think it is 5 s. for each man up to 300.

3831. What is the most you have ever received there?—If you mean the largest sum I ever received in a year I suppose it would be about 90 l.

3832. Do the soldiers attend your place of worship?—Yes.

3833. On Sundays, as well as on week-days?—They are marched to mass on Sundays only.

3834. You are allowed to enter the barracks at any time you choose, are you not?—Yes; the hospital and the barracks.

3835. You have been a great number of years in Winchester, have you not?—Yes; I went to Winchester in the year 1848.

3836. Have you had an assistant all that time?—No, I have not; I have been there quite by myself till within the last three years, except occasionally; of course when I have had a little fit of illness some one has assisted me for a time.

3837. I think you mentioned that you had seen a book in which the letters "R.C." are marked in red?—Yes.

3838. You stated that it was not the Creed Register?—No.

3839. What book is that?—I do not know; it is one of the large books that lie upon the desk in the chief clerk's office; the name of it I do not know.

3840. You have no reason to doubt that the name of every prisoner who is a Roman Catholic is properly given in to you?—Every prisoner who enters himself as a Roman Catholic, I think, is handed over to me, but there are Roman Catholics who do not call themselves Roman Catholics at their entrance, and there are also, on the other side, Protestants who call themselves Catholics.

3841. Can you give any instances of either?—If you mean, do I remember instances, I have plenty of instances of cases on both sides; I do not know which is the more numerous.

3842. What do you do when you find a Protestant entered as a Roman Catholic?—Generally speaking, I talk to him as if he was a Protestant wishing to know something about the Catholic religion, and I believe that is generally the case.

3843. You have never informed the governor, I suppose?—Never.

3844. Why have you not done so?—I am not allowed to see a Catholic who enters himself as a Protestant, and I think it is but fair I should take my advantage when I have it, and go on doing what I can with that Protestant.

3345. Is there no other reason?—None that occurs to me.

3846. Do you know whether cases of prisoners who have entered themselves as Protestants, being Roman Catholics, have ever come under the governor's notice?—I do not know that that has ever fallen under the notice of the present governor, Captain Hill, who has been there but a very few months, but the officers were aware of it most certainly; they have spoken upon the subject with me.

3847. I suppose you remonstrated with them upon the matter?—No, I did not.

3848. Have you ever requested that Roman Catholics who had entered themselves as Protestants might be permitted to have the entry in the Creed Register changed?—I have not; there was a case a little while ago that I thought was rather hard. It was the case of a person of the name of Peter Crim; he had been in the gaol several times before, and had been in my hands as a Roman Catholic; he came in once more, and called himself a Protestant; and after he had been in the gaol a certain time it is supposed that he felt remorse for having gone to the Protestant worship, and he tried not to go. He told the governor he did not want to go; at least, when the door was opened by the warder for him to go, he said, "No, I do not go." He was reported to the governor, and the governor remonstrated with him, but, in spite of that, the next day that man would not go, and he was put upon bread and water for one day; nevertheless, the next day he would not go, and he was put upon bread and water two days, and that seemed to have the effect of subduing him, for after that he went for a time; but, whatever was the reason, he again objected, and he was again put upon bread and water, and that had the effect a second time of bringing him round.

3849. Are you quite certain that that was the case of Peter Crim, and not of Michael Crim?—That was so; there were two brothers named Crim.

3850. Did you speak to the governor about that man?—No, never.

3851. How did you know of this occurrence with regard to Peter Crim?—In the first place I knew it from the mouth of Michael Crim, who was in the gaol at the same time. Peter Crim I had not seen.

3852. You do not remember any instance of Michael Crim entering himself as a Protestant, and wanting to change his religion in the Creed Register?—No, I do not.

3853. You would be surprised to hear that that was the case?—I know that he came in as a Protestant, but that, as far as I know, is the only time he had ever been in gaol.

3854. Would you be surprised to hear that there was a similar occurrence with regard to Michael Crim, the brother of Peter?—I should, because I am under the impression that he had never been in the gaol but once up to that time.

3855. Do you know of any other instances, or frequent instances, of prisoners entering themselves as Protestants when they were Roman Catholics?—Yes; I know there have been others.

3856. Have you ever heard them give any reasons for so doing?—No, I never heard them give any reason. With regard to the other side of the question, the deputy-governor and I upon one occasion were speaking of Protestants coming into the gaol and calling themselves Roman Catholics; the reason he gave for their so doing was that they expected a long sentence, seven or five years of penal servitude, and they wished to be sent to Portsmouth, to which prison Catholics, at that time, were specially sent, and where the work was, or was thought to be, very much easier than at several of the convict prisons. That was the reason why those men pretended to be Roman Catholics.

3857. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Are any of the warders Catholics?—No.

3858. Are you well acquainted with the Book of Common Prayer in use for the Church of England?—Pretty well; I have looked it through several times, and read most of it.

3859. When you stated, in answer to a question of the honourable Chairman, that the ordinary services of the Book of Common Prayer were vere strongly anti-Catholic; did you mean to tate that, or were you only referring to those passages in the Articles of the Church of England at the end of the Prayer Book, which the honourable Chairman read out to you?—I cannot remember that I made that statement as to the services of the Prayer Book. I never meant to ay so.

3860. The ordinary services of the Church of England would, probably, in the eyes of Roman Catholics sin more by omission than by commission?—Certainly they are Catholic as far as hey go.

3861. You mentioned "the Protestant tract" eing placed in the cells of prisoners; is that any articular tract?—I did not mean to say the tract; meant a tract; one tract, with the Bible and Prayer Book is left in each cell.

3862. But a different kind of tract is left in ach cell?—Yes, there are hundreds of them bout, I believe.

3863. Is it within your knowledge that those racts have been of a controversial character, or alculated to be offensive to Roman Catholics?—es, as you will find mentioned in the correspondence.

3864. With regard to the same room being sed for Catholic and Protestant worship, is it not ssential for Catholic worship that Divine worship should be performed at a certain time upon he Sunday?—If you refer to the mass, that hould certainly be after daylight and before the vening.

3865. Chairman.] Before mid-day?—Not necesarily; it might be at one o'clock, but not in the vening.

3866. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] But so far as ou know, there is no reason why the times of he two services should clash?—I see no reason hy they should.

3867. Does the Protestant chaplain ever visit our Catholic prisoners?—He visits them, but ot, I think, with any unfair intention; he has o make certain marks on their cards every now nd then, and to report upon them.

3868. But it is not necessary that he should isit them, is it?—I suppose it is for his purposes.

3869. But is there not a provision in the Act 1865 which relieves Catholic prisoners and risoners belonging to other than the Church of ngland, from the necessity of receiving the visits the chaplain?—Considering those visits as linistrations, or intended to instruct the prisoner, s; but I think he has certain things to do with gard to each prisoner: to report regarding his arks, and so on, which he cannot do without oing into his cell.

3870. But at all events, you make no complaint on that head?—No, I have no reason to do so present; I had formerly.

3871. Have you any complaint to make about roselytizing being carried on, or interference th your prisoners by or with the connivance of y of the officers of the gaol?—I think that e main evil lies in the school.

3872. Are the prisoners forced to attend the hool?—I can hardly say, for the rule as it ands is very badly worded, and some of the atholic prisoners have understood the rule to ean that they must go to school; but I am told e rule is not intended to have that meaning.

3873. Is the instruction given in the school ven in such a manner as you think militates 0.60. against the interest of the Catholic faith?—I am convinced that it is so at times.

3874. Have you made representations to that effect to the authorities?—I have told the visiting justices plainly that I am obliged to forbid Cathlics with the sanction of the bishop from attending the school, because it is dangerous to their Catholic principles, and I have requested that an alteration might be made which would render it unnecessary to enforce such a prohibition.

3875. And has that alteration been made?—A promise was given that some alteration should be made with regard to prisoners of long sentence, but as far as I know, although that promise was made nine years back, it has not yet been fulfilled.

3876. You have no doubt that the ministrations of ministers of religion are useful in aiding towards the reformation of a prisoner?—I think they might be made very useful.

3877. I am speaking of prisoners generally, without reference to any particular persuasion?—Yes, there is no doubt of the fact generally.

3878. Do you think that Catholic prisoners can be reached effectually unless the ministrations offered to them are those of priests of their own church?—I think they can be reached by no other means.

3879. If they do not get those ministrations, and are led to fancy that they are placed at some disadvantage in their treatment, as compared with the treatment which Protestant prisoners undergo, do you think that is likely to harden them rather than to reform them?—I do.

3880. You stated that the salary which was given to the Roman Catholic minister you thought was given by the justices for one reason, in order that they might be able to say that they had done so, but is it not the fact that concessions have been made by them gradually since you first visited the prison?—Yes, very gradually.

3881. But still a more liberal spirit has been gradually shown?—Yes, the present committee contrasts very favourably with its predecessor, of which Lord Cholmondeley was the chairman.

3882. Do you think you are likely to be placed in the position which you think you ought to occupy as a Catholic minister in the prison, unless Parliament interferes with the discretion which is now left to the visiting justices?—No, I think that no Catholic priest will ever have anything like justice in the Hants County Gaol until Parliament has interfered, and even if they could expect justice from the county justices, I do not think even then they ought to be content. I think it ought not to be in the power of any body of men, or any bench of magistrates, to give or take away the rights of a free-born Englishman.

3883. By the rights of a free-born Englishman I apprehend you are only meaning the rights to spiritual instruction?—No, I mean more than spiritual instruction; I mean the right of every man to worship God according to the rites of his church.

3884. And you think that when the State takes cognizance of a person as a criminal, and confines him in a gaol, whatever his religious opinions may be, it should take care that he does not lose the proper religious ministrations of his church?—Yes, so far as is reasonable.

3885. I understood you to state to the Committee, that you thought a capitation allowance would not be sufficient, but that any gentleman who was called upon to perform services at a gaol, and devote his time to it, should have an adequate salary; would you limit the application of that principle at all by the number of persons to whom he had to minister?—Some regard must be paid to the number of persons, no doubt, but it should not be decided upon that ground simply and solely.

Rev. J. Collingridge.

9 May 1870.

3886. Supposing there is an average of five prisoners in any gaol belonging to a certain persuasion, would you think it necessary that the authorities should provide out of the public, or their local funds, a salary for the minister of that church?—I believe that that is done for Protestants of the Church of England in Ireland, and I do not see why it should not be supplied in England for the Catholics where they are in so small a minority.

3887. That is your opinion?—It is.

3888. Would it be satisfactory to you, supposing a system was introduced, based upon the principle of capitation, but providing a minimum salary, that is to say, that not less than a certain salary should be given in any case?—It would.

3889. You would be satisfied with that system, provided that with it there was given permission to ministers of your persuasion to visit the prisons upon terms of perfect equality with the Protestant chaplains?—Yes, if you mean to include the freedom of Divine worship.

3890. You consider it essential to the due care of Catholic prisoners, that they should have proper facilities for assembling themselves for Divine worship upon the Sunday?—I do.

3891. In other respects, besides what you have stated, you have no complaint to make of the authorities of the gaol?—I think there is nothing that I need mention.

3892. Sir John Pakington.] I understand you to state that you are allowed by the authorities of the prison to visit each day, except Saturday and Sunday, for three hours; is that so?—From a quarter-past 12 to half-past 1, and from a quarter-past 6 to 8.

3893. That is three hours?—Yes.

3894. Do you each day avail yourself of that permission to attend for three hours?—No.

3895. Do you often attend twice?—Yes.

3896. Do you attend twice on the majority of days?—No.

3897. How often do you attend twice?—I have been allowed to attend twice for a very short period. I really have not counted the number of times I have been there twice a day, or the number of times I have been there once.

3898. You say you have been only for a short time permitted to attend twice a day?—It is a very recent concession on the part of the justices.

3899. When was it conceded?—Only a few months back; I cannot state the exact date.

3900. Was that concession made in consequence of any demonstration on your part?—Yes, in consequence of very earnest petitions and requests to be allowed to visit the gaol more frequently in the day than once.

3901. Previously to that concession, how often were you allowed to attend in the day?—Only at noon, from a quarter-past 12 till half-past 1.

3902. What is the present regulation with regard to Saturday?—I can go there at noon.

3903. What is the present regulation with regard to Sunday?—The same; I can go there at noon.

3904. But you are only allowed on either occasion, either Saturday or Sunday, to see the prisoners individually; is that so?—One by one.

3905. Now that you are enabled to go twice, are you enabled to see each prisoner?—No; not every day.

3906. You do not attempt that?—No; I seldom see more than four or five.

3907. At the time that you made this application, and this concession was made to you a few months ago, did you at the same time make any application with reference to combined worship on the Sunday or any other day?—I think that upon my last application for an increase of time I did not make an application for worship.

3908. But I understood you to say you had repeatedly made that application, and that it was always refused?—Yes.

3909. And refused on the grounds that you have explained to the Committee?—Yes.

3910. You stated a little while ago, that the governor was in the habit of asking the prisoner whether they would go to chapel, or whether they would see the priest, and you said that you complained of that as being an unfair question to put to a culprit; why do you consider that an unfair question?—Because a Catholic prisoner knowing the governor to be a Protestant, and considering that all the officers about him are Protestants also, will naturally suppose that he might please the governor and those other officers by going to join in their worship.

3911. Therefore, you think that after a prisoner has once entered himself as either Catholic or Protestant, there ought to be no further question put to him?—I think he ought not to be asked that question after he has called himself Catholic. I think that it ought then to be taken for granted that he will act as a Catholic ought to act.

3912. Have you not already told the Committee that you yourself endeavoured to explain to a Protestant, who had entered himself as a Catholic, that he had better act upon the profession and become a Catholic?—I did not say that, that I can remember.

3913. I understand that you have not very frequently availed yourself of the power to visit twice in the day?—I have frequently, considering that it is only a short time since I have been allowed to do so.

3914. Whenever you do so, I understand you are obliged to walk nearly four miles for the double attendance?—That is so. From 1st M. 1869 to 1st May 1870 I thus walked 768 miles.

3915. When you remonstrated against the Protestant Bible and Prayer-book being left in the cell, you said that the authorities refused to remove them; was that so?—They did not remove them; but, whether or not, they said, "We will not remove them," I do not pretend to say.

3916. Do you not remember whether you got an answer to your remonstrance?—That pamphlet containing my correspondence will show.

3917. At all events, the books were not removed?—Certainly not.

3918. And you also said that when you applied for Roman Catholic books for the Roman Catholic prisoners, the visiting justices gave you the books you asked for?—They have done so invariably since they undertook to buy them.

3919. Can you tell the Committee whether after a Roman Catholic prisoner had left his cell those Roman Catholic books still remained in cell for the Protestant prisoners?—No, they did not.

3920. In that case there was no objection to remove the books?—None.

3921. This pamphlet, which is before the Committee, I understand to be the correspondence carried on between you and the visiting justices nine or ten years ago?—Yes.

3922. In addition to that, you say you have have had a recent correspondence with Lord Carnarvon?—Yes.

3923. At the time of this former correspondence who was chairman of the visiting justices?—Lord Henry Cholmondeley.

3924. At the time you had this correspondence with Lord Carnarvon, who was chairman of the visiting justices?—Lord Carnarvon himself.

3925. What was the object of the correspondence between you and Lord Carnarvon?—It was with reference to the time of my visiting the prison; with reference to having the use of my assistant, and to having Divine worship for the prisoners collectively, and seeing them together.

3926. Do you consider that the concession made respecting your second visit is one result of that correspondence?—Yes, I do.

3927. In that correspondence last year with Lord Carnarvon, did you renew either of those suggestions with respect to building a room, or of letting the Catholics and Protestants go to the same chapel?—It was in that correspondence that I made the offer.

3928. In that correspondence you renewed the proposal for combined worship?—Yes.

3929. And that was again refused?—Yes.

3930. Then you were asked whether, if worship were allowed, that could be done without interfering with the labour of the prison; I presume that the time occupied by the Roman Catholic worship would not detain the prisoners from labour longer than the time occupied by the Protestant worship if the arrangements were properly made, would it?—I should think not.

3931. What was the nature of your complaint with reference to the school?—My complaint was that the Protestant Bible was read there and interpreted by a Protestant schoolmaster, and, of course, interpreted in a Protestant sense.

3932. Was that the only complaint?—Yes.

3933. Did you never make an application that when that part of the school lessons was carried on, the Roman Catholic prisoners should be allowed to retire?—No, I never made an application in that shape, but I have asked for some alteration to be made.

3934. You remonstrated generally?—Yes.

3935. But your remonstrances were disregarded?—Not entirely; a promise was given me that an alteration should be made, but no alteration has been made to my knowledge.

3936. If I understand you rightly, the promise that that alteration should be made was given nine years ago?—Yes.

3937. It has not been fulfilled, I believe?—Not yet.

3938. Chairman.] Are you in possession of that correspondence which you have mentioned?—I have most of the letters, if not all.

3939. Could you forward them to the Committee?—I shall be happy to do so.

3940. With reference to the inadequacy of the staff, do you think it would require more than one warder to conduct 39 or 40 prisoners to chapel on Sunday?—No, I do not see why it should.

3941. I suppose the Catholic prisoners would be very glad to attend the Catholic worship on the Sunday?—No doubt; they have repeatedly made complaints to the visiting justices.

3942. Then, it would not be very difficult for one warder to control them, when they were doing the very thing they liked?—Certainly.

3943. Therefore, upon that ground, there would be no great difficulty?—None.

3944. You were asked by an honourable Member whether Catholics might not forego their exercise in order to attend the Catholic worship; do you think it would be fair to ask any prisoner, of any persuasion, to forego any advantage for the sake of attending his own worship?—I do not think it would.

3945. But supposing that were put as an alternative, do you think it would be a fair thing to put such an alternative, that he should forego an hour's healthy exercise for the purpose of attending his religious worship?—I do not think it would.

3946. Mr. Downing.] I understood you to say that you could object to be paid per head for your attendance as a clergyman upon the prisoners; you do not think that that is a proper and right mode of paying the Catholic clergyman?—I have never considered the matter at all.

3947. You have said that you objected to the capitation?—It is not a fair way of paying me, that is to say, I do not get a fair share of what the chaplain gets, if you limit me to that scale.

3948. I find by the return, that there are 49 Roman Catholics in the gaol at Winchester, over which you are chaplain?—Yes, that is so.

3949. I find that the salary of the Protestant clergymen is 300 l. a year?—That is so.

3950. And that the number of Protestant prisoners is 226?—Yes.

3951. That would give 1 l. 6 s. 6 d. for each Protestant prisoner?—Yes, and he has his house besides.

3952. That would make it about 1 l. 10 s. for each Protestant prisoner, and you have 40 l. for 49 Catholic prisoners; is that so?—Yes.

3953. That would give you 16 s. 4 d. for each prisoner, according to my calculation?—Yes, no doubt.

3954. I find that in Liverpool there are 570 Roman Catholic prisoners; you would not expect if you were chaplain of that gaol to be paid 1 l. per head for that number?—No, certainly not.

3955. I understand you to say that you would only expect as much as would maintain you as a gentleman, and enable you to attend and devote your services to the gaol?—Individually, I do not want anything, but I think that a Catholic priest devoting himself to a gaol, ought to be decently supported.

3956. And you do not go beyond that?—No.

3957. Taking Liverpool for instance; there are 469 Protestants in the gaol there, and the salary of the Protestant chaplain is 400 l. a year; there are 570 Roman Catholics, and the Roman Catholic priest's salary is but 300 l. a year; do you consider that a fair arrangement?—No, I do not.

3958. You have already stated in a former part of your evidence, that the very contrary is the course pursued in Ireland where the vast majority are Catholics, and where there are very few Protestants in gaol?—That is so.

3959. You

Rev. J. Collingridge.

9 May 1870.

3959. You think the same thing should be carried out in this country?—Either injustice is done here, or it is done there.

3960. Mr. Synan.] I suppose you would be surprised to find in Ireland that there is a Protestant chaplain paid even where there are no Protestant prisoners at all in the gaol?—I am told that is so.

3961. When you use the expression "Divine worship," you mean by that, general worship for all on the Sunday or any other day?—I mean worship celebrated by a priest for all the Catholics in the gaol.

3962. And of course when you refer to combined meeting, you refer to combined instruction, do you not?—I have not used the word "combined" at all.

3963. But if you did use it, you would do so in relation to instruction; you would prefer to instruct the prisoners generally, or by classes than individually?—Yes, certainly.

3964. Would it be any interference with the ordinary rules of the prison, or entail the employment of additional warders, if there were Divine service for the Roman Catholic prisoners once on Sunday at a different hour from the Protestant worship?—I do not see why it should be any interference.

3965. With respect to this remonstrance which you made with reference to reading the Bible by the Protestant schoolmaster, and his giving his Protestant interpretation of it, you, I suppose, construed the refusal as a refusal to deal with it either by a conscience clause in the rules or by putting an end to it altogether; you considered that it would involve one thing or the other, either having the Catholics retire or putting an end to the Protestant teaching?—I do not quite understand the question.

3966. If your remonstrance with respect to this teaching were complied with, how would it be complied with?—The only thing as it appears to me that would be satisfactory, would be for an order to be given to the schoolmater to say nothing at all about religious matters, and of course not to read the Protestant Bible; if the Bible were withdrawn as a school book, and if the Protestant schoolmaster was under orders not to introduce any religious subject, I think the Catholic prisoners might go to the school; I am very sorry to be obliged to forbid them.

3967. Or your request might be complied with by taking care that the Roman Catholics should be excluded when the religious teaching is given?—That might be done.

3968. It might therefore be complied with in either of two ways?—Yes.

3969. And a general refusal to comply with it at all, involves a general refusal to comply with it in either of the two ways?—They did not exactly refuse to comply, but they promised that they would make an alteration.

3970. But the authorities have not done so?—No, they have not.

3971. With respect to the fixing of the salary, you have been asked by the noble Lord whether it is from the special rules of the prison or from the peculiarity of the Catholic worship that you say a capitation tax is not the way in which the salary should be fixed; might it not be for both reasons?—Perhaps it might.

3972. And in fixing the salary do you think that the standard would involve not alone the number of people to be taught, but the services rendered in the teaching?—Of course, I think so.

3973. If the teaching in one case was of a more difficult or special character, and, therefore, took up more of one's time than in the other, the services rendered being greater, that would be an element in fixing the salary as well as the element of number?—Certainly.

3974. Mr. Fowler.] As I understand you, your complaint is that the Protestant Bible is placed in every cell?—The Protestant Bible, the Common Prayer Book, and a Protestant tract.

3975. I understand you object to the Bible being placed in the cell of a prisoner without knowing whether a Catholic or a Protestant prisoner may be brought into it?—I have nothing to say against it unless a Catholic prisoner is in the cell.

3976. But it would be your wish that when a Catholic prisoner is placed in a cell the Bible should be removed?—That the Protestant Bible should be removed, as the Catholic prisoners have the Douay Bible purchased for them by the justices.

3977. Mr. Guest.] You stated, in answer to a question put by the honourable Chairman, that you did not think it would require more than one warder to conduct 30 or 40 prisoners to worship; in case you were allowed to hold service for them; are you or are you not aware that the prisoners are forbidden to speak to each other at any time of the day?—Yes, I am very well aware of that.

3978. Do you think that one man can prevent 30 or 40 prisoners from speaking to each other when they are assembled together, or can protect the prison?—They are not together until they are in the room; they walk at intervals, and are separated from one another by a good distance.

3979. But when they are brought together, I suppose, they would be close to the other in their separate boxes?—They have not separate boxes in our prison. I think they were done away with a few years ago.

3980. I think they are there now; but, however, that may be, do you consider that one warder would be able to prevent 30 or 40 prisoners from speaking together?—If they choose to speak he cannot prevent them from doing so; but he can report them, and get them punished just as well as if there were 20 warders.

3981. Do you think that one man can keep his eyes on 40 prisoners?—He could keep his ears open and hear where the talking came from.

3982. Do you really consider that one warder would be sufficient to watch 30 or 40 prisoners at worship?—That is another question; the question was whether one would be sufficient to conduct them to the chapel. I did not understand it to mean to watch them while there.

3983. You consider that 30 or 40 prisoners could be brought to the chapel by one warder?—Yes, that is so.

3984. But do you think that one warder would be sufficient to watch those prisoners and to be present at the service?—I do not know but what he might; and I think that if there were 30 or 40 Catholics under one warder it would be much in the same proportion as it is now in the Protestant chapel. I am not sure, as I have never been into the chapel.

3985. You would not like to speak authoritatively tively upon that point?—No, I would not pretend to that.

3986. I think I understood you to say, in answer to a question which was asked you as to whether it would make any difference in the rules of the prison if the Protestant and Catholic worship were held at a different hour, that you did not see why it should make any difference?—There must be, of course, some addition to the rules; but the Protestants now, I believe, go to Divine worship at a quarter past seven, and not before, and I see no reason, for example, why the Catholics should not go at half-past six. Instead of being in their cells they could be at worship, and after they had finished the Protestants could go and have their worship; that would not interfere with any rule of the prison.

3987. But surely that would make an increase of the work for the warders, would it not?—It would make the difference of attending to the Catholics while they are there certainly.

3988. It would impose more labour upon the present staff of warders, would it not?—Yes, it would.

3989. You consider that no objection whatever?—I consider it very trifling. I do not think it ought to have any weight.

3990. You consider it is no more than the present staff of warders could accomplish?—I do not pretend to speak to that; but supposing you had to get a fresh warder, or two, or three, or four, or five, I do not think that ought to prevent the Catholics from having so great a benefit as Divine worship would prove to be to them.

3991. You also stated that you consider you do not get a fair amount of remuneration compared with what the Protestant chaplain gets. I suppose you are aware that the chaplain has no other duties besides those in the gaol?—I presume so.

3992. And I suppose that you would not consider that there was sufficient work for one gentlemen to attend to the Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol alone?—There is much more than sufficient as I am set to do the work.

Rev. I. Collingridge.
9 May 1870.

3993. But you are enabled to undertake other duties during the week besides the gaol?—My other duties are my principal employment; the gaol is my relaxation.

3994. With regard to the other duties that you perform during the week, you do not perform them for nothing, do you?—No.

3995. Then, I do not understand exactly upon what plea you propose an increase of salary in the gaol?—I have not asked for any increase or any salary at all, and I will not ask for it.

3996. But, speaking generally, you would not propose that the same sum should be given to the gentleman who came to minister to the Roman Catholic prisoners as is now given to the Protestant chaplain?—No, I think that would be too much.

3997. What do you consider, speaking roundly, would be a proper remuneration?—I think if the authorities continue to retain their present separate system, they ought to give a sufficient salary for the support of a gentleman.

3998. What would you say was sufficient for that purpose?—£. 150 or 200*l.* a year.

3999. Mr. Downing.] You have just stated to the Committee that your time is not occupied by 40 prisoners, and that, therefore, you could not expect to be paid as much as the Protestant chaplain. I will just refer you to the Cornwall County Prison; the number of Church of England prisoners is 65, and the salary of the Protestant chaplain is 200*l.* per annum; that is a very considerable sum compared with the number of prisoners, is it not?—Yes.

4000. And if you will then refer to the Dorset County Prison, you will find that for 73 prisoners of the Church of England, there is a salary allowed to the chaplain of 250*l.* per annum?—Yes.

4001. You would not require either of those sums, I believe?—No.

The Rev. JAMES NUGENT, called in; and Examined.

4002. Chairman.] YOU are stationed in Liverpool, are you not?—Yes, I am.

4003. You are the Roman Catholic chaplain to the Borough Gaol at Liverpool?—I am, and have been so since the 1st of January 1864.

4004. When were you appointed to that prison?—I was appointed by a full bench of magistrates at the end of October 1863.

4005. Who was your predecessor?—My predecessor was the Rev. Mr. Gibson.

4006. Under what circumstances did the Rev. Mr. Gibson attend the gaol?—He gave his services voluntarily, and was allowed to attend the prison whenever any prisoners required his services.

4007. Could he go at any time he wished himself, and make a voluntary visit to the prisoners?—The Catholic prisoners were very numerous; and as from the number of prisoners there was always a number of sick Catholics, of course he constantly visited the prison; but he had not such free access to the female side of the prison as to the male side.

4008. What is the average number of Catholic prisoners in the Borough Gaol?—Generally speaking there are over 500.

4009. What is the number of Protestant prisoners?—Somewhere about 400; if you set down the Catholic prisoners as 500, you may set down the Protestant prisoners as 400; that is generally speaking about the average.

Rev. J. Nugent.

4010. What is the estimate of the Catholic population of Liverpool?—The Catholic population of Liverpool is variously estimated; I have been a priest in Liverpool for about 22 years, and I consider that the lowest estimate of the Catholic population is 150,000, but it may vary from 175,000 to 180,000.

4011. It is a very large Catholic population, is it not?—Yes, it is.

4012. Could you give the Committee an idea of what class the Catholic population consists?—The Catholic population of Liverpool is chiefly composed of the labouring class, who are dependent upon casual labour; we have a large number of Roman Catholic shopkeepers, some few professional men, and some few Catholic merchants, but the number of those in good circumstances is very small indeed comparatively; I should mention that the Irish population of Liverpool, of the labouring class, was estimated by a gentleman who read a paper at a Social Science meeting, meeting, held in Liverpool in 1858, to be over 100,000.

Rev. J. Nugent.

9 May 1870.

4013. They are composed of a very poor class, and oftentimes liable not only to poverty but to temptations arising from poverty?—Certainly.

4014. In the Borough Gaol, there are women as well as men?—In the Borough Gaol I am sorry to say, the female Catholic prisoners exceed the number either of Catholic or Protestant male prisoners.

4015. With reference to the education and intellectual condition of those people; are they ignorant, or the contrary, as a rule?—Amongst the Catholic prisoners who come to the gaol, I may say that it is quite an exceptional case to find a person of any education; I have kept a very exact account of them, and it is quite an exceptional case to find a Catholic in the gaol who has been in any position of responsibility.

4016. The Catholic prisoners are generally of the very poorest and lowest class, are they not?—Yes; during the six years I have been there, at the present moment there is the third prisoner who has enjoyed any degree of education, who is employed upon the prison books.

4017. Are there factories in Liverpool?—There is no industrial employment for women; there are no factories; the only kind of factories are places for sack making, and the women, I am sorry to say, who are employed in that form of labour, generally speaking, fall into most degrading habits.

4018. Is it a remunerative employment?—A woman working in a bag manufactory, or in a marine store, picking cotton, or picking rags, will earn from 6 s. to 10 s. a week.

4019. At what time do you attend the gaol?—I attend the gaol every morning at 10 minutes to 10; my service is 10 minutes to 10, and I spend the whole of my mornings there, generally speaking, till half-past 12.

4020. On Sunday, what service do you perform?—On Sunday I have morning prayers, mass, and sermon at a quarter to nine, which is always finished at about five minutes to 10.

4021. Do you have the same again on Sunday afternoon?—I have afternoon service at a quarter to four, and then I give practical instruction to the prisoners, after the prayers.

4022. Is there any restriction or limit with reference to your attendance and freedom in discharging your duty?—I have perfect freedom in the prison.

4023. Are you recognised as one of the officers of the establishment?—I am recognised as one of the officers of the borough of Liverpool, and in the gaol printed returns my name is put down as one of their officers.

4024. Are you on terms of intimacy and friendship with the governor and chaplain of the prison?—We could not be upon more intimate terms, and there could not be a more intimate relation between us.

4025. Do you ever come into contact, in any way, with them?—Since I have entered the prison there has not been a shadow of misunderstanding between myself and the Protestant clergyman.

4026. Of course you have only to attend those who are registered as Catholics?—Our work is very easily and simply divided. Every Catholic prisoner has his registered number and badge of punishment on his right arm, and the Protestant on the left; over every Catholic cell there is a green label.

4027. Have you one of them with you?—I have (producing the same).

4028. Will you read what is on it?—This is the register number, "3523;" occupation, "labourer;" age, "22;" previously in the prison "twice." Where born, "County Mayo;" division "E," cell "No. 55;" dietary class, "1." Offence for which taken up, "drunk;" convicted on the 2nd of May; sentenced to seven days or 15 s. fine, and the expiration of his imprisonment May the 8th, this year. In reference to affording a clear understanding, as regards the two classes of prisoners, I have a list placed on my table every morning by the time I come out of the chapel in which there is the number of commitments of the previous day, and the discharges for the following day and the applications, from which I know exactly what my daily duty is.

4029. That is your daily work, I believe?—Yes.

4030. Then, inasmuch as the Protestant chaplain has only to attend to the Protestants, and you have only to attend to the Catholics, it is perfectly impossible that you could come into contact in any way?—Unless we wished to create a misunderstanding, but I think that is almost impossible, as we had known each other for years previously to my appointment, and we understand what our duty is. The Protestant chaplain never thinks of entering into the cell of one of my prisoners, and I never think of entering into the cell of one of his prisoners.

4031. But even supposing that there did not happen to be the same kind and friendly relation between you and him, yet from the fact of your duties being apart from his, there would be no chance of any collision, would there?—The system adopted in the borough of Liverpool, which is very simple, would work very satisfactorily I think, in any other prison in which it was adopted.

4032. Does the Dissenting minister visit the Borough Gaol?—No; the Dissenting prisoners have never raised any difficulty; they attend the Protestant service, and the Protestant clergyman always visits them.

4033. Did you ever hear a Dissenting prisoner raise an objection to allowing the Protestant clergyman to visit him, or to his attending the Protestant worship?—I never heard of any difficulty on that score.

4034. Could a Catholic consistently attend the Protestant worship?—He would not only actually deny his faith by so doing, but he would also be giving scandal to his companions by so doing, and they would look upon him as having denied his religion.

4035. Therefore there can be no analogy whatever with regard to religious ministrations between the Catholic and the Dissenter?—I could not enter a Protestant church and preach or perform any act without giving scandal to my people whereas the Dissenting minister and the Protestant clergyman, as I understand, sometimes interchange those kindnesses. I have never heard of any difficulty with the prisoners about that.

4036. The Protestant prisoners are of a higher class, I believe, than the Catholic prisoners?—They are; they are tradesmen and mechanics we must bear in mind that the reason there is such a large proportion of Catholics in Liverpool is, that from 1846 up to the turn of 185[illegible] ery large population was poured into Liverpool rom Ireland; that was not a well-to-do class, or trade's class, but the very poorest and most estitute; then again the criminal class in Ireand, as Liverpool increased in its docks and ommerce, found a better market for crime there. he poverty of Ireland did not afford the same arket, and the same facilities for crime, and ublic opinion is much stronger in Ireland as egards prostitution, and that kind of crime, than is in England, so that I could mention small owns in Ireland in which a whole street has been riven out, and they have come and settled in iverpool. Owing to the tide of emigration from reland, Liverpool is an exceptional case as reards the criminal class of Catholics.

[illegible]

4037. Was not the population that came to iverpool mostly a rural population, and one not dapted to settle in a city?—It was an agriultural population driven into a hive of comerce, with a large number of children, and nable to obtain employment.

4038. Before you were appointed, as you say n 1864, was mass allowed on the Sunday?—here was no service whatever.

4038*. When was mass first allowed on Sunay?—On Sunday, 24th January 1864.

4039. At what time after that were two services llowed upon the Sunday?—There was only one ervice at first, and any man who understands the ffect of solitary confinement will know that a risoner will make any sacrifice to get out of his ell.

4040. I wish to know what time after you ere appointed were two services allowed upon he Sunday?—I think it was about 1st October 866, two years after my appointment.

4041. And during that time when there was nly one Catholic service upon the Sunday is it he fact that any number of Catholics attended he second service of the Protestants on that day?—I stated in my report to the magistrates at the nnual gaol sessions, that 15 per cent. of the Caholic prisoners entered themselves as Protestants n order to escape the monotony of being conined in their cells, and the magistrates, I may ay in self-defence, wishing to reduce the number f Protestant criminals, at once insisted that I hould have two services.

4042. And since then have you found Catholic risoners enter themselves as Protestants?—Very ew, indeed, except to escape me.

4043. What do you mean by escaping you?—I have been identified with the poor and criminal lasses for, I suppose, 20 years, and if I have lone anything for them, or shown any kindness o them in the prison, they do not like facing me fterwards. The officers, and the prison authoriies, know that if a prisoner, who is in the habit f getting into the gaol enters himself as a Protesant, it is purposely to escape receiving the reuke which I should give him, or, perhaps, from ot wishing to hurt my feelings, knowing that if e does that, I have no chance of seeing him.

4044. What you mean is that they are either shamed of seeing you, or that they wish to hide hemselves from you for some reason or another?—Yes, that is so.

4045. Do you think that the fact of having no Catholic service in a gaol is a certain means of nducing Catholics to attend the Protestant worship?—I think that it would require a very high nd strong religious principle, as well as great firmness of character on our part, if any of ourselves were subjected to that monotony for twelve months, not to go into the chapel on the Sunday.

4046. Would you regard it then as an indirect and a practical means of proselytizing and breaking a man's own faith?—I do not think that any of those people ever become Protestants, but what they become is totally indifferent to all religion.

4047. Is not that a very unhappy result?—Certainly, and what is more, if a large number of Catholics were to attend the Protestant service I am quite certain that the discipline of the gaol would be very much interfered with.

4048. But with reference to the result, would it not be a result injurious to the individual and dangerous to society if any number of persons became indifferent to all notions of religion?—Certainly; I was going to say that as regards the discipline of the gaol, there has been a very marked difference since the Catholics and the Protestants have had a separate service. We use the same chapel, but at different times. The Protestant chaplain has frequently spoken to me about it, and so have the officers of the prison; they have said that the difference is very marked since we have had separate services.

4049. In what respect?—Those who understand prison life know the means of communication; the chapel is a telegraph office; a man can speak with his eyes or his hands. A man puts his hand upon his breast, and he can tell prisoners at the other side of the chapel that bacon is a shilling a pound in Ireland, and that therefore there must really be bad times.

4050. But you say that the general discipline of the prison has improved; are the Catholic prisoners pleased to know that the clergyman who attends to them is regarded with respect as an officer of the establishment?—Certainly.

4051. Do you think that that circumstance adds to his authority with the prisoners?—I do not think any one could have a more attentive or a more respectful congregation than I have.

4052. Do you think, from your own experience, that a clergyman who differs in persuasion from the prisoners can have much influence over them in effecting their improvement?—I do not think there can be any real reformation except through religion.

4053. And that religion conveyed through a minister of the person's own faith?—Certainly.

4054. You do not believe that you could have a very powerful influence over a Protestant prisoner, nor vice versâ, a Protestant minister over a Catholic prisoner?—Certainly not.

4055. And therefore if the object be to reform, that end must be attained through the exercise of religious influence, which can only be exercised through a man's own pastor?—Certainly.

4056. To go to another point; have you had much experience of refractory prisoners?—Since I have been in the prison, there has never been any Catholic prisoner, even the most outrageous, whom I believe I have not been able to subdue, and prevent from committing an outbreak.

4057. Have you any particular case that you could mention?—I have a single case illustrative of that, namely, the case of a man who had been 12 times in the prison, and who was always, up to the time of my appointment, entered as a Protestant; besides having been whipped, and had solitary confinement, he had had seven years transportation, six years penal servitude, and three years penal servitude, and when he came up up to the prison, he received some insult from a fellow-prisoner in the reception ward, which made him break out; he tore everything in his cell to pieces, broke his table, and threatened to have the life of the first person who entered his cell. As he had always been a Protestant, every one imagined that he was then a Protestant; and the chaplain and myself being in a room together when this news came, I suggested to the chaplain that he should go and see what could be done with him, and he said, "No, let us look at the religious register first." We did so, and to my surprise we found that he was entered as a Roman Catholic; I said, "I will go and see him, for I have nobody to care much about me," and the most powerful officer was about to go with me, but I said, "No, I will go and see him alone." I went in, and found that he was just going to strike me with the leg of the table. I said, "Oh, ———, you are not going to kill me, are you?" And he said, "No, your Reverence, I would not hurt you," and then he told me the ground of his complaint. I tried to persuade him, and he said, "Do not say anything to me to-day, but come to me in a couple of days." I believe that my visiting him, and instruction, were the means of working a complete change in that prisoner, for his conduct in the Millbank and other prisons, where he has been confined subsequently, has been most satisfactory.

Rev. J. Nugent.

9 May 1870.

4058. If you had happened to be of another religion, so that he had not confidence in you, do you think you would have had any influence with him?—I think that the man had heard of my character in dealing with the prisoners, and it disarmed him at once.

4059. With reference to the reformation of prisoners, do you find that the ministrations of clergymen, or your ministrations in the prison, have had a beneficial effect upon individuals?—You must bear in mind that the Liverpool prison is a very exceptional prison, as there are a great number of short sentences, and, under the recent Prisons Act, I cannot have the prisoners with me as formerly, as they are not allowed to attend daily prayers until they have been in the prison between two and three months, and the females until they have been in the prison 14 days; that is under the operation of a local regulation.

4060. Do you think that that is a good system?—The visiting justices, when they adopted the treadmill, thought that it would be a punishment to the prisoners to deprive them of prayers, and, of course, I was obliged to accede to that; but I think that there is a large class of prisoners who come to the prison for the first time, and have never come in contact at all with their religion; and my past experience is such, that I have often had men going down upon their knees and thanking me, and saying that I should never see their faces again in gaol; that they had learnt their religion for the first time within the walls of the prison.

4061. If the prisoners are not allowed to attend before the first three months are unexpired, will you just tell the Committee what they are deprived of during that time?—First of all, they have a guard bed; they have hard labour during six weeks; they must work themselves up by good marks into letter B.

4062. Are you not allowed to see them?—I have perfect access to them, and do see them.

4063. Are you able to speak to them in common?—I am allowed to see them twice upon the Sunday, and I can call them from the wheel if I wish; but my principle is not in any way to interfere with the prison discipline, for if I took a man off the wheel who was there for seven or 14 days, he would be constantly asking to see the priest.

4064. The prisoners are allowed to attend the services on Sunday mornings and afternoons, but they are not allowed to attend daily prayers during the first three months?—That is so. Male adult prisoners, sentenced to hard labour, do not attend until they reach the B class, and females at the expiration of 14 days.

4065. Do you think, without making any complaint against the justices, that that is a wise regulation?—For the instruction of the large ignorant class that we have to deal with I do not think it is, but there are other difficulties in the question. It was known that people who came up for seven days were constantly communicating by means of the chapel, and carrying messages from the outside, and it was thought that it would be better for the discipline of the prison that they should not attend prayers.

4066. At any rate they do attend the service on Sundays, do they not?—Yes.

4067. My question will now apply to those who have been some time in the prison; do you know instances in which the teaching of those people by you has led to beneficial results and individual improvement?—To a very large extent.

4068. Do you see the prisoners outside occasionally, after their release?—For the first three years that I was appointed to the prison I had an office and a paid clerk, and I attended every day, with the exception of Sunday, purposely to see discharged prisoners, and to try and deal with their children. I found that it was more than my resources would bear, as I had to find the means myself, to a great extent, so that I was obliged to give it up; but at the present moment it is known amongst the prisoners where they can see me in town every day, and I have them constantly coming to me upon their discharge; and I believe that I have assisted a very large number to do right.

4069. That is scarcely an answer to my question; do you know, of your own knowledge, many instances in which prisoners have been so improved that they have got on afterwards in life?—Yes.

4070. And that you believe to be the result of the spiritual teaching that they have received in the prison?—It is certainly on account of the instruction, and the assistance that they have received on their discharge. I have known, for example, when I have sent a man out of the country, that he has done well, and he has come back and brought his mother and sister.

4071. I am referring to Liverpool, and not to persons you send out of the country; have you found many instances of persons being really reformed?—In the course of my time, I may say I know a large number who are doing well in Liverpool.

4072. A fair proportion?—Yes.

4073. Do you imagine that those people would have been reformed if you had not the same facilities for giving them instruction as you have at the present moment?—I do not think that with the Irish character anything but the ministration of a priest would have had that effect upon them

4074. Wha

4074. What salary do you receive?—I received 300*l.* a year. Two years ago the visiting justices, without my asking for it (at least it was the suggestion of the governor) proposed that I should have a house rent free, with coals and gas; he said he did not see, as I had the heaviest portion of the work in the gaol to do, why I should be in a different position from himself and the chaplain, and the visiting justices very kindly gave me a house rent free, so that I am on the same footing as the Protestant chaplain.

4075. You did not ask for that?—I did not ask for it.

7076. It was a voluntary act of kindness on their part?—I had no idea of such a thing until a day or so before it was given.

4077. The prisoners are generally in your prison on short sentences, are they not?—A proportion of the prisoners are very short sentences. Last year 81 per cent. were for a month and under.

4078. Then the crimes must be generally of a light character, and not serious?—They are generally those crimes arising out of drunkenness, because the crime thermometer rises and falls just with labour; if labour is abundant, you find the gaols fill very quickly.

4079. There is more drink about?—Yes; in winter there is less crime than in summer; for in summer, as the people live in very low places, they sit out upon the door-steps and go about the streets; the open air is more comfortable than their homes, and they are much more subject to fall into crime on that account.

4080. Do you consider that drunkenness is the main cause of falling into crime?—I can say that almost nine out of every ten come into the gaol through drink, either directly or indirectly.

4081. Sir John Pakington.] Where is your house?—It is in connection with the gaol; it was one of the warder's cottages, and the visiting justices enlarged it.

4082. In fact, you reside in the gaol?—Previous to this I could get no house near the gaol. I lived four miles from the gaol, and I think for three years I had every morning to make my way to the gaol; and now I have a cottage close to the walls.

4083. At that time did you make a daily visit to the gaol?—Yes, every morning.

4084. But I presume you had not the same facilities that you have now?—From the first day I entered the gaol I had the same facilities as I have to-day.

4085. You used the expression, "Since we have had separate services;" you meant by that separate as between Protestant and Catholic?—Yes.

4086. When did that commence?—It commenced with my appointment from the 1st of January 1864, from that morning there have been separate services.

4087. But you had a Roman Catholic predecessor, had you not?—Yes, but he was not allowed to perform the services or read public prayers.

4088. What was the system then with regard to the spiritual instruction of Roman Catholic prisoners, as compared with the Protestant prisoners?—The Protestant clergyman assembled all the Protestants in the chapel, as he assembles them at present, and the Catholic priest could only see individuals.

4089. Do you mean that at that time the Roman Catholic prisoners were obliged to attend the Protestant worship?—They were not obliged, but as it is the solitary system which exists in the Borough gaol of Liverpool, a very large proportion of them in self defence attended it.

4090. In order to escape from their confinement?—Yes.

4091. I understand you now that the Roman Catholic and the Protestant services are both held separately, but both are permitted to make use of the same chapel?—Yes.

4092. What are the daily arrangements to facilitate the joint use of the chapel?—The same staff; the staff has not been increased in order to carry out the system; at first the warders complained to the then governor, saying "We shall have extra duty," the governor replied, "You may have different duty but you will not have extra time, and therefore it is immaterial whether you spend your time in the chapel or whether you spend your time in the wards of the gaol." The same officers have, for the most part, to attend the four services.

4093. What are the arrangements on a week-day?—On the week day the Protestant chapel service begins at nine o'clock, and mine begins at ten minutes to ten.

4094. The Roman Catholic prisoners in your gaol are the more numerous of the two, I suppose?—They are the more numerous of the two.

4095. During the time when the Protestant prisoners are in chapel, are the Roman Catholic prisoners at work?—They are at work.

4096. And, vice versâ, when the Roman Catholics go to chapel, the Protestant prisoners are at work?—That is so.

4097. Is there any practical difference found in that arrangement?—No practical difficulty so far, for supposing a man has to pick 5 lbs. of oakum, it is not that he must be always picking, but that he must do that amount of work in a given time.

4098. There has been no practical difficulty, you say?—There has been no practical difficulty so far.

4099. I presume from your residing in the gaol, and the number of Roman Catholic prisoners being so large, the whole of your professional services are devoted to the prison?—I devote the whole of my time to the prison. I consider that I have no other duty to perform but that. I do other things, but it is all indirectly connected with the prison; for instance, I have established one or two reformatories, and a large industrial school.

4100. You have no other professional appointment?—No; and the whole of my time is given to the prison.

4101. You spoke of a man who had been in prison 12 times, and if I understand you rightly, he had 12 times called himself a Protestant, and the 13th time he called himself a Roman Catholic?—He did so; the first time he came into the prison after a priest had been appointed.

4102-3. What do you think he was?—His parents were Roman Catholics, but he, like a large proportion of the people that I have to deal with, had never practised any religion, but a Catholic instinct forced him to avow himself a Catholic.

4104. He avowed it?—He avowed it, and went away from the prison a Catholic.

4105. If I understand you rightly, a regula-

Rev. J. Nugent. 9 May 1870.

tion special to Liverpool under their local Act was made, under which prisoners, as I understand you to say, were not allowed to attend prayers for three months after they had entered the gaol?—Until they had entered the class B., you can only work yourself into that class a few days short of three months; the female prisoners are not allowed out of their cells until they have been 14 days in the prison.

4106. As regards the male prisoners, that regulation, as I understand, does not apply to Sunday?—It does not.

4107. From the first the prisoner is allowed to attend Divine service on the Sunday, whether he be Catholic or Protestant?—From the very beginning.

4108. On weeks days, if I understand you rightly, under this local Act they are not allowed to attend Divine worship for the first three months?—That is so.

4109. What is your opinion, from your experience, of the effect of that restriction upon the character of Roman Catholic prisoners?—I consider that I did more good in that prison during the time that I gave daily instruction. Every morning I used to read prayers for about seven minutes, and talked to them about seven or eight minutes more upon some practical subject, and I believe that I did more good through that morning instruction than anything else; in fact, the prisoners acknowledged that they received more religious instruction during the time they were in the prison than they had ever done in their lives.

4110. You do not mean that you were daily able to give that time to each Roman Catholic male prisoner?—When we had the prisoners all together, of course, I could instruct them collectively, but it is impossible to visit them all individually; last year, in the borough prison, there were 10,530 prisoners altogether, and of those over 6,000 were Catholics.

4111. Is it the case that you do not disapprove of this restriction with regard to the three months, and that you have endeavoured to compensate the prisoners for the want of daily Divine worship during those three months by individual instruction?—That is not so.

4112. Then, will you be so good as to explain to the Committee what is the system that you intended to describe when you spoke of giving so many minutes to each Roman Catholic prisoner?—I did not intend to convey at all that I saw the prisoners individually for seven minutes since the new regulations have come into force.

4113. Will you explain to the Committee how, in the discharge of your duties as the Roman Catholic chaplain, you treat those men during the three months that they are not allowed to go to Divine worship on the week days?—There is scarcely anything done in compensation for the daily prayers that the prisoners have been deprived of; being deprived of the daily prayers is looked upon by the visiting justices more or less as a punishment, and necessary for carrying out the hard labour system; they considered that it was a luxury for them to attend daily prayers, and they have been deprived of that since the Prisons Act came into operation.

4114. Then, let me ask you what is your opinion, as a minister, with reference to the wisdom and propriety of that restriction?—I now personally disapprove of it, but the chairman of the visiting justices, asked the Protestant chaplain and myself that it should be tried, and the scheme was approved of by the Home Office; I think the Liverpool Borough Gaol is an exceptional case in that respect, and that it is not generally the case that the prisoners do not attend daily prayers.

4115. I believe I was right in my inference, from what you said, that that regulation applies to all religions?—Yes, to all creeds.

4116. You were asked by the honourable Chairman as to how far you had known cases of reformation in criminals after leaving the prison; is there in Liverpool any prisoners' relief society in action, with the view of taking care of the prisoners after they have finished their punishment?—According to the last Prisons Act there is a clause which empowers the visiting justices to grant a sum not exceeding 2 l. to any prisoner upon his discharge, and the magistrates in connection with the Borough Gaol have a private fund as well; the visiting justices attend every Friday, and if the chaplain or myself recommends any case they are prepared to listen to it, and, generally speaking, in fact, with very few exceptions, they grant whatever we recommend.

4117. In fact you have two sources of relief for them, one under an Act of Parliament, and the other derived from private funds?—Just so.

4118. And do you consider that the effect of the Act has been beneficial to the prisoner?—As regards the Borough Gaol of Liverpool, it has been very satisfactory.

4119. I presume that the efforts are directed in a great measure to providing honest employment?—To providing honest employment, and assisting some to leave the country, and to give others temporary assistance.

4120. I presume you have found those efforts to be of great assistance to your duties as a minister?—That section has been most useful to us.

4121. Mr. Synan.] Your experience is very great upon this subject, I suppose?—As a Catholic priest I have had considerable experience.

4122. How long a time does it range over, as far as Liverpool is concerned?—I have been in Liverpool, I think, at least 22 years.

4123. How long have you been, either voluntarily or since this late change of the law in 1864, in connection with the prison system at Liverpool?—I have been connected with the criminal classes. I may say, during the whole of my time in Liverpool, because I had, unfortunately, at one time, as a priest, the very worst and most degraded district in Liverpool, which then brought me into contact with the criminal classes, and I have been connected with movements for their amelioration during the whole of the time I have been in Liverpool, but I was never directly connected with the prison until 1864.

4124. Who was your predecessor?—My predecessor was the Rev. Henry Gibson.

4125. When your connection with the prison commenced it commenced at a salary of 300 l. a year?—It did.

4126. And you were placed substantially upon an equality with the Protestant chaplain?—I think there is no difference in our position in the gaol.

4127. You do not, I suppose, consider it any ground of inequality that the Protestant chaplain for for 323 prisoners gets a salary of 400 l. a year, and that you for 570 catholic prisoners get a salary of 300 l. a year?—I do not complain of it, as it was the Protestant chaplain who suggested that I should have 300 l. a year, and that I should begin as he began, and that my salary should gradually increase as his had increased; and I thought that a very fair and satisfactory arrangement.

4128. From what you know indirectly of the state of the prison, and the effect of the religious and moral instruction before 1864, under the old system, and of the effect of your status since 1864, do you consider that that alteration by the prison authorities of 1864 has been beneficial morally and religiously?—I think it has been a very great advantage, indeed, to the discipline of the gaol, and the moral condition of the prisoners.

4129. You have expressed your disapprobation of this special regulation with reference to depriving prisoners of daily prayers; how long has that system been tried?—I think it has been in existence over two years; but I am not quite prepared to be exact.

4130. I think you have given as a reason for its introduction, that prisoners newly introduced into the prison made use of telegraphic communication with previous prisoners in the chapel; was that so?—That was one reason; but it was thought that it would be more punitive if they were deprived of prayers.

4131. It was not as a complete means for the prevention of that telegraphic communication by signs that it was introduced?—It was not for that special purpose, because it is next to an impossibility to check the telegraphic system in the place. I look upon it as an impossibility in any prison to check communication.

4132. And, therefore, it being an impossibility to check communication, you would not think that the restriction would be justified upon that ground?—No, I do not.

4133. You stated to the Committee that the Protestant chaplain, before the regulations of 1864, assembled all the prisoners together to instruct them?—All the prisoners attended the chapel except those who positively refused, and a great number of Catholics did refuse, and they found it a very severe punishment, being condemned to be locked up in their cells from Saturday evening till Monday morning.

4134. Did he assemble them for instruction independently of the Protestant service in the chapel?—No, we have no collective instruction in the borough prison except in the chapel.

4135. I suppose this remaining in the cell is looked upon as a species of punishment?—Certainly; it is looked upon as the most painful form of punishment.

4136. In fact, I suppose only a degree less than the treadmill; I presume that would be the way in which the prisoners regard it?—I think that the solitary confinement is worse than the treadmill, because no matter how hard the labour is, as long as it is in association it is not so severe as being confined entirely in the cell without ever going out of it for 14 days or a month.

4137. Then it is true that prisoners do regard solitary confinement as a punishment, at least as severe as the treadmill?—Yes, even worse than the treadmill.

4138. Consequently if Catholic prisoners are confined in solitary cells while others are allowed to go to the Protestant service (I am not talking of your own prison), it would in fact not only be an injury, but a direct inducement to them to go to the Protestant chapel, would it not?—Yes, I think so.

4139. And if there was no Catholic service in the prison, it would be a greater inducement for the Roman Catholic prisoner to go to the Protestant chapel, would it not?—Certainly, in order to break the tedium of his confinement.

4140. What is the species of work which the Catholics are doing while the Protestants are at Divine service?—It just depends upon the classes in which they are; the kind of hard labour that we have is picking oakum, the treadmill, matmaking, ropemaking. Of course there is no distinction as regards the form of labour, no matter what their creed may be.

4141. The labour is in the cell, I presume?—No; a great proportion of the labour is on the treadmill.

4142. But the other labour is in the cell, is it not?—Yes.

4143. And the fact of the prisoners being at work, either associated on the treadmill, or privately in their cells picking oakum, does not render it at all impossible or more expensive to give a Divine service to each of the classes, both Protestant and Catholic, at different hours upon each day or upon Sundays?—No, the same officers do the duty; there has been no increase in the number of officers in the Liverpool Borough Prison, where there are the largest number of Catholic prisoners in England, on account of the two extra services.

4144. And no increase of the duties of those officers, only a change of their duties?—That is so, only a change of their duties; the hours are exactly the same.

4145. Is there a creed register kept in this prison?—There has been a creed register kept in the borough prison since 1858.

4146. There is no complaint upon that ground I believe?—I have nothing to complain of as regards the register; I have the same access to it, and it is kept in the same form for me as it is for the Protestant minister.

4147. You stated that the prisoners are of a very poor class, and a very uneducated class generally?—Yes, unfortunately, my prisoners are the most ignorant and uneducated portion of our body; they are people who are dependent upon accidental labour, and people who have been for a long time removed from religious influences.

4148. And the Irish population from which those prisoners come are what you have described as the dregs of the Irish population, who have been driven by peculiar circumstances from their own country?—They are people who had no means to emigrate to America, and therefore they must have been from the lowest strata, and just the kind of people who are only fitted for the ruder form of labour.

4149. I have only one more question to ask you: from your long experience among that Irish population of that uneducated class, do you think that the elevation of your status and the change of the law of 1864 has acted beneficially both morally and religiously upon them?—In my own opinion there can be no question at all about it as regards what has been done during the time.

4150. Sir John Trelawny.] How was the cost defrayed for the necessaries of Divine worship?—When I was appointed to the gaol it was necessary to make some alterations, as the same chapel is used for the two services. As a matter of fact, there has been the kindest relationship existing between myself and the chaplain, and we were asked to talk the matter over, and certain arrangements were made by which the expenses were paid from the same sources as my salary is, namely, from the corporation funds.

4151. My question relates to the necessaries for Divine worship?—Yes, I made an application for the necessary appliances for the due performance of the Roman Catholic worship; I stated the sum that I wanted, and that sum was given.

4152. What was the sum you applied for?—I asked for 60 l.

4153. Do you think that that would be a fair average sum for that purpose?—It would take more than that, but that I happened to be in an exceptional case; I had a number of things of my own which I had no difficulty in applying to the use of the gaol, but I think it would require, whenever the service was carried out fully, a sum of 100 l.

4154. Mr. Talbot.] I think I understand you to say that you have no complaint whatever to make against the authorities?—None whatever.

4155. If I recollect rightly, that arrangement which has been called extraordinary with regard to the prisoners not being allowed to attend daily prayers, applies to all classes of prisoners?—Exactly.

4156. Mr. Fowler.] You consider yourself an officer of the corporation, I presume; were you appointed by the corporation?—No, I was appointed by the borough magistrates, but my salary has to be found by the corporation; there was some little difficulty about that as the borough magistrates recommended 300 l. a year for my salary, and some of the corporation objected to that as being too much, and it was proposed that my salary should begin at 250 l. The question was referred then to counsel in London, but in the end it was settled unanimously by the corporation that my salary should be 300 l. a year.

4157. While being an officer of the corporation, you are appointed by the borough magistrates and not by the corporation?—That is so.

4158. I think I understood you to say that the Protestant clergyman agreed with you in deprecating that arrangement with reference to excluding the prisoners from the daily services?—We were asked by the justices not to make any objection to that arrangement, but to give it a trial; the visiting justices settle the rules of the prison, we have only to carry them out; if those rules are approved of by the Home Office, we must abide by them.

4159. It is a regulation introduced by the visiting justices and approved of by the Home Office, but which the Protestant chaplain and yourself would both prefer to be different?—We both of us would prefer it altered, but we felt that there would be a great difficulty in the way of working the treadmill, looking at the number of prisoners that would be required to attend the chapel; and I think it was partly for the facility of working the treadmill that the visiting justices introduced that regulation.

4160. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] What was the date of that regulation?—It has been in operation, I think, two or three years.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. SAMUEL GREG RATHBONE, called in; and Examined.

Mr. S. G. Rathbone.

12 May 1870.

4161. Chairman.] You reside in Liverpool, do you not?—I do.

4162. Are you Chairman of the Visiting Justices of Liverpool?—I have been so for five years, and am so still.

4163. Had you previously been connected with that body?—Yes; I have been a visiting justice for about 10 years to the borough prison.

4164. Was it with your sanction that the Catholic clergyman was appointed as one of the officers of the prison?—It was an appointment made, at a meeting of the whole bench, by a majority of the magistrates; I voted for it, certainly.

4165. Have you experienced anything since then which has caused you to regret that appointment?—Nothing; it has worked perfectly smoothly. The circumstances of the prison are such, that it is possible to define the respective duties of the Protestant and the Catholic chaplains with an amount of precision, which it would be almost impossible to do in any other institution than a prison; and, therefore, they can be defined with so much precision as to leave no pretext whatever for the two chaplains interfering with each other's duties, and to that cause I attribute the perfectly smooth working of our arrangements. We have had no instance of any difference between the chaplains since I have been in the prison.

4166. You do not mean to confine your observations to one prison; but you mean that in all prisons it is easy to define the duties of the respective chaplains?—Yes, in all prisons. I think it must be the fault of the visiting justices if difficulties arise, as in every prison where you have separate confinement it is so very easy to define their respective duties precisely, that no difficulty need arise.

4167. As a matter of fact, in the borough gaol of Liverpool, there has been no clashing whatever?—None whatever; the two chaplains are upon the most friendly terms, and always have been so.

4168. Will you tell the Committee what is the effect produced upon the prisoners by the appointment of a Catholic clergyman, as a recognised officer of the institution?—I think it is very favourable to the discipline of the prison in the first place.

4169. Could you say how far the discipline is affected by the ministrations and services of the Catholic priest?—I think that his appointment has had a favourable effect upon the prison, and especially upon the female side of it. In the cases of a great many of the women, their constitutions have been very much shaken by prolonged debauchery, and their nervous system is in a very excitable state, and therefore they are very much more troublesome to manage than the men, and very often in cases when neither the dread of punishment, nor any other arguments have been available, Mr. Nugent's influence has been found to be highly valuable.

4170. And his influence has been useful to the maintenance of discipline and order within the prison?—Certainly; he has always assisted us in every way in maintaining good order in the prison.

4171. Does the knowledge of the fact of his being a recognised confidential officer, as I may say, of the prison, produce any effect upon the prisoners?—As I have already stated, it produces a great effect upon a large per-centage of the prisoners who are under his charge, but I do not suppose that it produces any effect upon the Protestant prisoners.

4172. My observations are confined entirely to those of his own persuasion?—I think he exercises a decidedly favourable influence over the prisoners while they are in prison; and I think, what is infinitely of more importance, his influence survives very often after they have left the prison.

4173. Will you state to the Committee the reasons which justify you in forming that opinion?—I think that a great many of our prisoners from this large town of Liverpool have never been brought under any religious influences before they have been put into the prison, but that they have been entirely neglected, and the Catholic chaplain exercises a good deal of influence over them. He has also been very useful to us in aiding such prisoners on their discharge as are inclined to turn over a new leaf. If you are to do anything for prisoners upon their discharge, it is essential that you should have a report from somebody who is thoroughly in their confidence as to their disposition and intentions. Mr. Nugent has shown a good deal of tact in that that capacity; he has a great perception of character, he does not recommend hypocrites to us, and he has been of great assistance to us, as I stated, in enabling us to assist the prisoners who wished to turn over a new leaf when they left the prison.

Mr. S. G. Rathbone.
12 May 1870.

4174. From the experience which you have had of the operation of the system, would you be inclined to go back upon the old system, when the Catholic clergyman was merely permitted to visit the prison upon sufferance?—No, I decidedly approve of the present system; but I should also say that our prison is three miles from the town, and therefore any visiting under the old system must necessarily have been very irregular.

4175. Do you think it leads to the reformation of a prisoner to have religious instruction given by a person in whom the prisoner has confidence?—I think it does, and as I said before, however anxious the Protestant chaplain may be to do his duty, you can hardly reasonably expect that the Roman Catholic prisoners will communicate with him as to their future intentions on leaving the prison, in the same way as they will do to a minister of their own persuasion.

4176. Is it likely, from your knowledge of the prisoners in the borough gaol, that they would give their confidence to a clergyman not of their own persuasion?—I think that a large portion of them would not. A great many of them are Irish, and therefore they come in with a certain amount of distrust for the exhortations of the Protestant chaplain, and that would be a decided difficulty. I do not mean to say that it could not be overcome, but it would put him at a disadvantage as compared with the Roman Catholic minister.

4177. Do you think that it is consistent with reason and prudence to avail yourselves of the services of the clergymen who would have most influence over their minds and hearts?—Yes, certainly.

4178. And that they would have the best chance of reformation from his influence and instruction?—I think so, certainly.

4179. Mr. Synan.] You spoke of prisoners who, on account of being Irish, would not avail themselves so readily of the teaching of a Protestant clergyman; would the Protestant prisoners in your gaol avail themselves readily of the teaching of the Roman Catholic chaplain?—I did not say that they would not avail themselves of it in any instance; I merely said that there would be a certain amount of distrust of the Protestant minister.

4180. Would there not be the same amount of distrust upon the part of the Protestant prisoners as regards receiving the ministrations of a Catholic priest?—Certainly; especially in the case of the Irish I think the feeling of hostility between those of the Protestant and Roman Catholic religion is greater among the Irish than English.

4181. You stated something to the effect that the women, being more nervous, are more susceptible of religious impressions than the men, but, generally speaking, do you consider that the prisoners in your prison are susceptible of religious impression?—A large per-centage of them are; and women are naturally more susceptible of external religious impressions than men. Certainly, the women, as a rule, are susceptible to religious impressions, and a great per-centage also of the men; but it would be difficult to define the per-centage.

4182. And does the reception of such impressions tend to the discipline of the prison?—Certainly.

4183. And your experience is that after they leave the prison, those impressions have an effect upon them?—Yes; as regards a small per-centage, of course, because they are then exposed to fresh temptation.

4184. And that impression would be naturally increased by a knowledge of the status of the religious teacher who made the impression?—I think that a religious teacher who belongs to the same religion as the prisoner, has a decided advantage as compared to any other teacher.

4185. I am speaking of the status of the minister; suppose, cæteris paribus, two religious teachers of the same religious denomination to be in the same prison, and suppose that one had a status in the prison which the other had not, would the impressions conveyed to the prisoners by the gentleman who had a status in the prison be more effective than those conveyed by the one who had not; I am supposing that one was a permanent officer, and the other an occasional one?—I have no experience which enables me to answer that question; a great deal depends, I think, upon the personal character of the clergyman.

4186. I am supposing their characters to be the same; had you any knowledge of your prison before the change in 1864?—A very slight one; I was a very occasional visitor.

4187. But from that knowledge, slight or otherwise, that you had, do you think that the change in 1864 operated beneficially?—Decidedly I do.

4188. Lord Henley.] This is the gaol of which the Rev. Mr. Nugent was the Roman Catholic chaplain, is not that so?—Yes, and he is so still.

4189. I think he told the Committee that there were a great number of Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol?—The number of Catholic prisoners varies from 60 to 70 per cent. of the total commitments; it is about 64 per cent. as nearly as possible.

4190. The visiting justices are a committee of the body who have the management of the gaol?—They are.

4191. What is the nature of that body; is it quarter sessions, or town council, or what?—It is the gaol sessions, consisting of the whole bench for the borough, who appoint the visiting justices, who are 12 in number.

4192. Have you ever been a visiting justice of any other gaol?—No.

4193. You have never had experience of any gaol where the number of Roman Catholic prisoners was very few?—I know nothing of any prison but our own, except from very occasional visits.

4194. Are there any Catholic magistrates in the governing body of the gaol?—Yes, I think there are four or five Catholic magistrates, of whom one is a visiting justice.

4195. You stated, as I understood, that there was some opposition to the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain; was that opposition amongst the visiting justices or amongst the quarter session magistrates?—I am not aware that I said there was any opposition to it; if I remember rightly what took place before the magistrates magistrates, there were one or two magistrates who made a slight opposition.

4196. Do you think it was carried without an actual division?—I do not think that there was any opposition which carried it to a division.

4197. What opposition there was, was not in the committee of visiting justices, but in the main body of the quarter sessions, is that so?—It never was referred to the visiting justices; it was the decision of the whole bench.

4198. Was the appointment made by the whole bench?—Yes.

4199. Mr. Nugent was elected by the whole bench of magistrates?—Yes.

4200. Was there any opposition to him, or was he elected unanimously; do you recollect whether there was any competing candidate for the appointment?—If I recollect rightly there was only one application, but it is many years ago.

4201. He applied probably as having been recommended to the post by some authority in his diocese superior to himself?—My impression was that the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church arranged who should apply, and that there was only one applicant.

4202. There was no competition between various candidates?—There was no competition between various candidates. He was the only applicant, and, I believe, the Catholic authorities took considerable trouble, as they naturally would do, to secure a man who would limit his action to the proper sphere of his own duties.

4203. And he has carried out those duties with very great success?—With very great tact, and with very great zeal, and great judgment.

4204. The payment of the chaplain comes out of the borough rate, does it not?—It comes out of the same funds as the rest of the prison expenses.

4205. Does it come out of the public rate upon the town of Liverpool?—That is what it practically amounts to; it is never called a borough rate, as we have a large property in Liverpool from which funds are derived, but it comes practically from that.

4206. Are part of the expenses of the prison paid out of property belonging to the corporation?—The rating of Liverpool is such a complicated question, that I should not like to speak about it, but practically it is a burden upon the public rates.

4207. Mr. Guest.] Do you not think that there would be a difficulty in laying down a rule by which the Roman Catholic priest should be paid for his services in the prison as a permanent officer?—His salary is governed by the same rules which govern the salary of every other officer in the prison.

4208. In your own case, you have at Liverpool a majority of Catholics as prisoners, but I mean generally throughout the country, in prisons where there are only a few Catholics; do you not think that there would be a great difficulty in laying down any defined rule?—I have never thought about that subject, and should not like to speak about it. I can only speak from my own experience of my own town.

4209. Chairman.] Supposing there had happened to be 600 Protestants in that gaol, and only 300 Catholics, would you recommend paying the Catholic priest, and giving him authority as an officer of the prison?—I think I should after our experience in Liverpool.

4210. After the long experience you have had of the good working of the present system?—Yes.

4211. The same reasons that would govern you in approving of the present system would also influence you in approving of it in a modified form as to numbers?—Certainly; I think that the influence of a Roman Catholic chaplain in a prison will be in proportion to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners in that prison.

4212. Even if there were only a hundred Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison, would you still be of opinion that the Roman Catholics should have the benefit of the services of a Roman Catholic priest, or would you leave those hundred unprovided for, or would you think it fair that they should be taught, by or be under the influence of, a Protestant clergyman?—I am not prepared to express an opinion on the question of degree, because you might reduce it still more; you could not allow the prisoners of every denomination to have a permanent paid chaplain to attend upon them; the exact number at which you should stop is a thing which I am not able to give an opinion upon.

4213. Have you ever found that the Dissenters refuse the visits, or the services, or the worship of a clergyman of the Established Church?—It hardly ever occurs; I have hardly ever known such a case.

4214. I suppose you are aware that Catholics have even more than a conscientious objection to attend the Protestant worship?—I believe that is so.

4215. And, therefore, there is that marked difference between Dissenters, who do not refuse to go to Protestant worship, and Catholics who cannot conscientiously do so?—Certainly; but I understood your question to be as regards the appointment of a permanent officer, as compared with the occasional visits of a Catholic chaplain.

4216. With reference to status, which an honourable Member asked you a question about, is there not a difference between merely permitting a Catholic clergyman to attend, and recognising him as an officer of the prison who is paid for his services?—Do you mean in the relative amount of religious influence that he would exercise?

4217. I mean personal influence over his own flock, if I might call them such; does not it add to his authority that he should be recognised as an officer of the prison?—That is a very difficult question to answer.

4218. Supposing a clergyman is merely permitted under very serious restrictions to visit the prisoners, and to see them, I may say either singly or for not more than one hour in the day; is there not a very great difference between his influence under such circumstances, and his influence under the circumstances in which the Rev. Mr. Nugent is placed now?—I think that if his visits were "permitted," the fact that he was gratuitously taking a great deal of trouble to visit those prisoners would have an effect upon them quite as great as if he visited them in the position of a paid officer.

4219. Would it give him the same position in the prison in reference to the warders and other officers comprising more restricted permission on the one hand, with recognised position on the other?—I do not think that he would be so useful, simply because he would not be so often there; but that would entirely depend upon the rules to which his entrance was subject. I do not not think that an occasional visitor could be so often in the prison and discharge the duties so satisfactorily as Mr. Nugent discharges them.

Mr. S. G. Rathbone.

12 May 1870.

4220. You find no inconvenience whatever, but on the contrary, good resulting from Mr. Nugent being appointed an officer of the prison, and having his own distinct sphere?—We have found no inconvenience. Mr. Nugent's appointment has been, I should say, an unmixed good to the Catholic prisoners, and a very great good.

4221. Mr. Matthews.] You spoke of some Dissenters having objected to the ministrations of the clergymen of the Established Church; could you say to what body of Dissenters those persons belonged?—I could not say offhand, as the occurrence has been extremely rare. The prisoners, as a rule, are very anxious to go to prayer, as it is a great change from their solitary confinement, and of course they are very reluctant to allow their religious scruples to interfere with their attendance at prayers. They generally put them on one side if they have any.

4222. Did I rightly understand you to state that you could not remember any particular instance of that objection having been made by any Protestant dissenter?—I know that there have been such cases, but I could not give you the particulars offhand.

4223. Your knowledge does not enable you to say that that scruple exists in any particular sect?—One or two of the Jews have objected to working on Saturday; but that was an objection to working more than to attending prayers; but it has been exceedingly rare that any Dissenter has objected, or even made any difficulty whatever about attending the prayers of the Church of England.

4224. You would be of opinion that it is no part of the punishment of a prisoner that he should be deprived of the consolations of his own religion?—I think it is an improper way of punishing him, and an injudicious way in the interests of the State.

4225. So far as it is practicable, therefore, and consistent with the interest of the ratepayers, you would think it right that the State which confines them should provide those religious influences for them?—I think it is only right that the State should exercise a religious influence over them.

4226. Mr. Synan.] We have it before us in evidence from Mr. Nugent, that there is a rule of your prison which deprives female prisoners of daily prayers for a fortnight after their entrance, and male prisoners for three months; are you aware that that is the rule of your prison?—That is only on week days; and in the case of adult convicted prisoners sentenced to hard labour, I may state that the loss of time and disorder consequent on having a double daily service when all the prisoners attended daily prayers, was so great, that it was found inexpedient to allow all the prisoners to attend them. You have, according to the Prisons Act, to bring the prisoners into the chapel at such a distance from one another that they shall not be able to communicate with each other; and when you have 1,000 prisoners to deal with, the mere getting them in and out of chapel occupies such a time that it was found to interfere with the work of the prison; we therefore made a rule that they should earn the privilege of attending daily prayers by good conduct in the prison; and when they get up into the higher classes, they are then allowed to attend prayers daily. But all prisoners attend prayers on Sunday; and, generally speaking, also those under punishment in solitary confinement. I may add, that this arrangement was made with the sanction of both the Roman Catholic and the chaplain of the Established Church; and it has had a very good effect, in a religious point of view, as well as with regard to the discipline of the prison, because, instead of attendance at prayers being made a matter of routine, it is a privilege earned by good conduct.

4227. Am I to understand you to state that this good conduct is earned, not by prayers but by the absence of prayers?—I did not offer an opinion upon that point.

4228. Is not it the rule of the prison that good conduct for the first fortnight is to be earned by the females by not attending daily prayers for a fortnight on week days, and that good conduct is to be earned by the males by not attending the daily prayers for three months?—The rule is as I have stated it. The prisoner has to be in the gaol a certain time before he is allowed to attend daily prayers, and has to behave well during that period.

4229. He has to earn the reward of prayers by not praying for a certain time after he enters the prison; is not that so. You look upon it as a privilege, and he earns that privilege by not being allowed to attend daily prayers?—I should be most happy to send the rules of the prison up to the honourable Chairman, and then you would understand it more easily than my explanations would enable you to do.

4230. Do you think that that is a rule which ought to be persevered in?—I think that the taking of a large number of prisoners, the instant they are caught, to prayers, as a matter of daily routine, had a very bad religious influence upon the prisoners, and that the alteration of the rule has had a very good effect.

4231. You think the prisoners are better conducted since you have made this rule?—I think they are better conducted; and I think that they attend the prayers much more to their advantage when it is made a privilege instead of a routine.

4232. While giving that opinion, you decline to answer an abstract proposition (and I think very wisely) with reference to the effect of teaching by a clergyman with a status in the prison, as compared with that by one who gives his service voluntarily?—I do. I have had no experience to guide me in forming an opinion as to whether the influence of a Catholic minister would be greater as a paid officer of the prison, or as paying occasional visits.

4233. I will deal with it as a practical proposition; is a permanent paid officer with a status in a prison likely to devote more time to the religious and moral teaching of his people than one who is not in that position?—Certainly; because he has not other duties to distract him, or if he has they are much more limited.

4234. Naturally the impressions would follow the quantity of teaching, I suppose?—I am not prepared, as a magistrate, to answer such a question, as whether the impression following upon religious teaching is proportionate to the quantity given; it is an abstract question.

4235. Suppose the character of the moral teaching to be high, and suppose it to be permanent, would it produce, in your opinion, a greater effect than if it were low and if it were only only desultory?—I do not think that desultory teaching is often of much effect, and in either case I have not come prepared to answer such a question as that. Long sermons have not an effect proportionate to their length upon me, and I suppose that they have not upon the prisoners.

4236. In reply to a question from the honourable Chairman, you said that you would not give any opinion as to the number of prisoners that would warrant the permanent appointment of a Catholic chaplain. Did you ever hear that in Ireland, even where there were no Protestant prisoners in the goal, the services of a Protestant chaplain are paid for?—I am not acquainted with the rules of prison discipline in Ireland.

4237. Sir John Pakington.] You act as a visiting justice for the Liverpool Borough Prison?—I am chairman of it.

4238. How long have you been chairman of the visiting justices?—Since 1864.

4240. When was that local arrangement made?—This arrangement was made under the Prisons Act of 1865.

4241. Do you state to the Committee that, under the general Act of 1865, the prisoners are prevented from attending Divine worship during the first three months?—The Prison Act makes it compulsory upon the justices to allow all prisoners to attend Divine service on Sundays, unless there is some special ground to the contrary, but it leaves it to the discretion of the justices to say whether they shall attend the daily prayers, and according to the bye-laws which have been submitted to the prison inspectors, we do not allow all the prisoners to attend daily prayers; it is done under a bye-law.

4242. It is under a local regulation that the visiting justices restrict prisoners for the first three months of their confinement from attending Divine worship on week days?—We restrict, under our bye-laws, the male adult convicted prisoners sentenced to hard labour from attending daily prayers until they have earned the privilege by attaining a certain class. When they have attained that certain class they are allowed to attend daily prayers. That is a bye-law framed under the Prisons Act of 1865, which leaves that discretion to the justices.

4243. Then your bye-law is to the effect, not that the prisoners are restricted from attending the daily Divine worship for three months, but that they are restricted from attending it until they have worked themselves into a certain class, and I presume that the average time occupied in attaining that class would, for many prisoners, be about three months; would not that be so?—I have not brought the rules up, as I did not know that I was going to be examined until yesterday.

4244. The evidence that was given to us stated three months, and after your evidence that is the natural inference?—I think it is three months.

4245. How long ago did you make that bye-law?—It was passed in 1865 or 1866, I think.

4246. Then, in fact, you have had ample time to judge of the effect of the regulation; now, let me ask you what is your opinion of the good effect, or otherwise, of throwing an impediment in the way, and preventing prisoners from attending Divine worship?—I think that it has been decidedly favourable. In the first instance, if I may repeat what I stated before, the time occupied by taking so large a number of prisoners to and from prayers divided between two services would be so great that it would materially interfere with the hard labour of the prison, because, as you are aware, the prisoners must be brought in at such a distance from each other that they cannot communicate, and the marching the Catholics into service first of all, and then the marching of the Protestants in and out, would take up a very long time; but that was not the chief reason; it was this, when we found that prayers were made a mere matter of routine, and that if the prisoners just received into the prison were allowed to attend them, they were all staring at each other to see who the new comers were, and therefore it was a change made in the interests of religion as well as in the interests of discipline. In a prison like the borough prison the number of new prisoners sent in every day is very large, and, naturally, all the prisoners would be looking about to see if their friends were there, whereas now the prayers are much more effectual than they were before the change was made. My own impression is, that both Mr. Nugent and the Protestant chaplain would admit that the present system is favourable to the interests both of religion and discipline in the prison.

4247. The practical result of it, I apprehend, is, that during this early period of confinement, and, when the sentence is a short one, during the whole of that confinement, the prisoners are restrained from any prayers during the whole of the week?—They have the private ministrations of the chaplain in their own cells.

4248. Does the chaplain visit daily all those men who do not come to prayers?—Either he or the instructor visits them daily. I cannot say that the chaplains visit the whole of them; they visit a great many of them; but the intention in restraining them from going to public prayers is, that they should be attended to in their cells, where their attention is not distracted by all the new prisoners, who would otherwise take their attention away. We do not restrain them from prayers as a matter of fact.

4249. I presume in your answers to me you are speaking of convicted prisoners, not of those awaiting trial?—Certainly.

4250. Those convicted prisoners, I believe, are daily undergoing hard labour?—That is to say, if they are sentenced to hard labour.

4251. Are they taken away from hard labour at any given period of the day in order that the chaplain may see them?—The hard labour ceases in this way: in the case of prisoners sentenced to the treadmill, they work for a certain number of hours on the treadmill and a certain number of hours at industral work in their cells during all the term of their sentence, unless it exceeds three months, in which case, if well-behaved, they cease in time to do any work on the treadmill.

Mr. S. G. Rathbone.

12 May 1870.

4252. And then your chaplain would visit them?—He has an opportunity of visiting any prisoner in his cell, whether condemned to hard labour or not, at some period in the day.

4253. I understand that, from your experience, you think that bye-law works well, and you are not disposed to change it?—No; and I may mention that it was made under the distinct sanction of the law. Mr. Ewart was a member of the Committee which sat on the Prisons Bill of 1865, and it was he who introduced the distinction between attendance of the prisoners at daily prayers and at the Sunday services.

4254. Do you know any other prison in which a similar bye-law is in operation?—There are other prisons in which prisoners do not attend daily prayers, as I gathered from the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Lords, appointed in 1863, to consider prison discipline. I believe in Bristol all the prisoners did not attend daily prayers when that committee sat.

4255. Mr. Talbot.] I imagine your experience would be that a great proportion of those prisoners are persons who have never been in the habit of attending worship at all; persons of the lowest class of society?—A very large proportion of them, particularly the women; I should think that their religious education had been very much neglected.

4256. I suppose the view of the visiting justice would rather be that to take persons who have never been in the habit of attending religious worship at all, and then suddenly to compel them to attend daily is rather a strong change?—Yes.

4257. You think that it would be better to work upon them by degrees?—Yes, and that it is better to have a small number, so that the minister may specially address them instead of having so large a posse of the prisoners of all classes.

4258. Sir John Pakington.] Are prisoners committed for trial sent to the borough prison?—Yes, a large number of them; they are kept in Bridewell if they are only remanded for a day; but if they are awaiting trial for any length of time they come to the borough prison.

4259. With regard to prisoners who are in gaol awaiting their trial, do they attend daily worship?—Yes; if a prisoner is awaiting trial we endeavour to make the conditions of his imprisonment as easy as possible, as his guilt is not proved.

4260. They do attend daily service, do they not?—Yes, they do attend daily worship.

4261. Mr. Matthews.] Is the practical effect of this rule to keep away from the daily prayers on week days a certain per-centage of the prisoners at any time?—They do not attend when they first come.

4262. There is always a fresh crop of new prisoners coming in from day to day?—Yes.

4263. What per-centage of the prisoners in the gaol are shut out from daily prayers?—I could not answer that question offhand.

4264. There never arises a time when all the prisoners in your gaol attend daily prayers?—No, the whole of the prisoners never attend; it would be almost an impossibility for them to do so if you had a double service, a Protestant and a Catholic service.

4265. Can you tell me what number attend on the average at prayers on week days?—I can not tell that.

4266. On Sundays all prisoners attend, do they not?—Yes.

4267. What time is consumed in taking them to chapel and bringing them back?—I cannot tell you that; my impression is, that it is about an hour and a-half.

4268. If I do not misunderstand you, the effect of your evidence is, that it would be impracticable under any circumstances to let all the prisoners attend daily prayers on account of the time it would take?—It would be a very serious interference with the hard labour; it would in fact be converted into easy labour, by the reduction in the time devoted to labour.

4269. Quite independent of your argument of which I feel the force, with reference to the uselessness of the prayers to the prisoners who have just come in, you would feel desirous of adhering to that restriction on account of the discipline of the prison?—Yes; ours is a very large prison; and such a restriction as this applies to Liverpool more than to any other prison.

4270. The reason for my asking that question was, that I supposed there must come a time when all the prisoners would have worked themselves into the praying class; but is it the fact, that some of the prisoners in course of time do not come into the praying class?—No, that is not so; ultimately all of them are allowed to attend the prayers, and until then they are allowed the religious ministrations of the chaplain in their cells.

4271. Sir John Pakington.] That applies to the Protestant as well as to the Roman Catholic chaplain?—Yes.

4272. Mr. Synan.] An honourable Member asked you whether it might be convenient not to compel new comers to attend on account of their never having attended Divine worship, but do you make it permissive for those who wish to attend?—No; certainly not.

4273. There is a difference between compelling them to go, and permitting them to go?—Certainly; it is not permissive; they have no choice in the matter.

4274. Mr. Guest.] You stated to the Committee, that the influence of the Roman Catholic chaplain would be in proportion to the number of Roman Catholics in the prison; would you then think that the Roman Catholic priest should be paid in proportion to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners up to a certain point?—You could not pay him by head money in that way.

4275. Then, in a question of this kind, how would you propose to act with regard to paying the Roman Catholic priest, where there were only a few Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol?—I have never considered the point; it does not come before us in Liverpool, as we have such a very large number of Roman Catholics.

4276. Sir John Pakington.] May I ask whether the bye-law you have described respecting the attendance at the daily services, is made under the authority of these words in the 46th section of the 28th & 29th Vict. c. 126, relating to religious instruction in prisons: "Criminal prisoners shall attend Divine service on Sundays, and on other days when such service is performed, unless prevented by illness or other reasonable cause to be allowed by the gaoler, or unless their attendance is dispensed with by the visiting justices"?—No; there is something else in the Act you will find about daily prayers which is worded differently. There is a distinction drawn in in the Act between daily prayers and Divine worship; they mean by Divine worship the whole services of the Church; and when they come to daily prayers, you will find that the language is different. I am pretty certain that it is intentional, because Mr. Ewart told me the conversation which passed in the Committee that sat upon the Prisons Act.

Mr. S. G. Rathbone.

12 May 1870.

4277. I understand that, under a bye-law, the prisoners do not go to daily prayers? —Not all of them.

4278. The prisoners to whom we have referred?—The prisoners who have been recently admitted have to receive religious instruction in their cells instead of in the chapel; that is the only distinction.

4279. Chairman.] I wish to ask one question upon that point. If the chaplains disapproved of this restriction to which we now refer, would their opinion have weight with the justices if it were put before them. If they said, "This does not work well, and we recommend an alteration of it," would the justices be inclined to act upon that opinion?—They would consider the question, but they would not consider themselves bound, on the chaplain's opinion, to make any alteration which affected the discipline of the prison.

4280. The opinion would be received with respect by the visiting justices, would it not?—Anything coming from a clergyman would be received with respect.

4281. Are the prisoners generally anxious to attend Divine service?—They would much prefer attending daily prayers to working upon the treadmill, which is the option.

4282. Assuming that there is only one service in the Liverpool prison upon the Sunday, and that a Protestant service, do you not think that the Catholics would feel themselves very much aggrieved, and would be anxious to go to the Protestant service rather than to remain in their cells?—When we only had daily Protestant service in the prison, the Catholics used frequently to enter themselves as Protestants in order to attend the service, because they escaped labour by so doing. Above all, the great thing for the prisoners to escape from in a prison is solitary confinement; and therefore to be able to attend Divine service is a great relaxation, and is very often regarded more as a relaxation than as a religious duty.

4283. You would wish the Committee to know that you were not summoned from Liverpool, but that you were in London when you were requested to attend this Committee?—I was. I would wish, before I retire, to make this statement. It is an impression of my own (I am not speaking on behalf of my brother magistrates), that the example of the justices in appointing a Catholic chaplain to the borough gaol, has not been without its influence on the good order of the town. We have, as you are aware, a very large number of Irish Orangemen in Liverpool, and a large number of Irish Catholics; exactly that mixture which has been so fatal to the peace of many Irish towns; and yet we have been entirely free from any disturbances in Liverpool. At the last election, which turned a good deal upon a religious question, and in which interests ran very high, as was indicated by the proportion of electors who polled, there was not a single broken head or row of any kind; it has always been an opinion of my own that the example of the justices, who are very equally divided between Conservatives and Liberals, in dealing fairly in this matter, has not been without its effects upon the inhabitants of the town.

The Right Honourable the Earl of CARNARVON, attending by permission of the House of Lords; Examined.

4284. Chairman.] HAS your Lordship read the evidence of the Rev. Mr. Collingridge?—I have had an opportunity of looking through it; I can hardly say that I have studied it very much in detail, but I have read it sufficiently throughout to enable me to make comments upon any particular points. I should like to mention to the Committee, that while of course I can speak generally as to matters which have come under my own cognisance as chairman of the visiting Justices for the last four or five years, I should be hardly prepared to go into very minute detail. If the Committee really wish for any information upon the minutiæ of the working of the prison with respect to this particular question with which they are dealing, I have at hand the chaplain of the gaol, who is very competent, and would be very happy to give any evidence that the Committee might desire.

4285. We are rather anxious to have your Lordship's general opinion than to go into minute detail; but the Rev. Mr. Collingridge on the last meeting of the Committee, specified certain grounds of complaint, upon which we should be glad to have some information from your Lordship?—Mr. Collingridge seems to have laid four points particularly before the Committee, and I think perhaps you would find it more convenient to take them in detail.

4286. To take the first point, let me ask your Lordship, are the Catholic prisoners allowed to assemble for the purpose of religious instruction?—For ordinary secular instruction they are assembled with the other Protestant prisoners in the prison, being taught by the schoolmaster.

4287. But for religious instruction by the Catholic clergyman, are they allowed to assemble?—They are not.

4288. Could your Lordship explain the reasons which induced the justices to refuse permission upon that head?—This question of association has been, I think, more than once before us since I have been chairman of the visiting justices, which I have been now for four or five years; we have considered the matter carefully, and I think I may say, with every wish if possible to meet any reasonable demand on the part of Mr. Collingridge, but we came to the conclusion that, to put it very shortly, it really was a question of numbers, of expense, and of prison management; that the number of Roman Catholic prisoners was not sufficient in our opinion to justify us in pressing upon the court the expense which would have been required; that that expense would have been considerable, and that the changes which would have been requisite to secure the necessary prison discipline, would have been so considerable, as to have formed another considerable item of prison expenditure.

4289. Allow me to ask your Lordship what is the Right Hon Earl of Carnarvon.

12 May 1870.

the number of Catholic prisoners in the Winchester prison?—I saw it stated in the evidence of Mr. Collingridge to be an average of 45; but I should say, speaking from memory, that that was rather beyond the mark.

4290. Your Lordship will see it is 49 in the Return?—But you will observe that that is the number of prisoners taken upon a particular day, and there may have been some cause which may have induced an exceptional increase on that day. I am confident that 49 is above the average.

4291. Could you say whether there has not been a larger number upon any day than that?—To show the fluctuations in repect of numbers I ascertained on another occasion, and with reference to another subject, that upon the 23rd of August there were 57 Roman Catholic prisoners, which was the time when Mr. Collingridge made his application to us, and pressed upon that particular ground for various concessions; amongst others, associated worship. A month afterwards the number had sunk to 41, and a few days afterwards, if I remember rightly, it was 34 or 35.

4292. What number would your Lordship strike as an average, 40 or 45?—I should say as I can remember, from 40 to 43; 43 I should think would be the maximum average.

4293. Would your Lordship state what, in your opinion, would be the expense of assembling those 43 prisoners to receive instruction from the Catholic clergyman?— Expense is involved in providing another room.

4294. Is that the only way in which expense would be involved?—Besides that, of course, there would be a certain increase necessary to the staff of warders.

4295. Would your Lordship state why there should be an increase to the staff of warders to enable those 43 Catholics to assemble at any time to receive instruction?—The Committee must be aware, that as the prison is at present managed, the distribution of hours, as regards labour, recreation, meals, chapel instruction, and so forth, is all laid out upon a certain plan; if you dislocate that system in any one part, you have to remodel it altogether; if you remodel it and have two schools, or two chapels going on concurrently, you will require to have pro tanto a larger staff of officers.

4296. There is on week days a Protestant service of some kind, is there not?—There is every morning.

4297. Have you ever considered what expense it would involve to overcome the inconvenience which the Catholic clergyman alleged to have existed through his not being permitted to have a service in the morning?—Of course, I assume that the discipline of the prison and the hard labour is the first consideration, and that it would not be the wish of the Committee to disturb that in any degree.

4298. Certainly; but does not that consideration affect the Protestants as well as the Catholics?—I would say, assuming that, and assuming that chapel succeeds to breakfast, and that after chapel the hard labour of the day begins, it is quite obvious that the Roman Catholic prisoners, if they are to come into association for religious purposes, must do so previous to the breakfast hour.

4299. Is that an impossible arrangement?—Mr. Collingridge in his evidence, which I had the opportunity of looking through, suggested that the Roman Catholic prisoners should be brought into chapel at, I think, six o'clock. This would involve a change in the general breakfast hour, the time when the prisoners are obliged to rise, when the warders commence their duties; perhaps even when the prisoners go to bed, or when the warders are relieved; but I would point out that it would be impossible for me, without taking up the time of the Committee enormously, to go into such details upon this subject.

4300. Assuming that there was another room provided for those 45 prisoners, would there be any extraordinary difficulty to be overcome in making arrangements to allow those 43 prisoners to attend their service every morning?—There would be simply the difficulty of providing additional warders.

4301. And that would be the entire difficulty?—That would be the entire difficulty.

4302. Does your Lordship contemplate how many warders would be necessary for this new arrangement, provided that it was decided upon?—I do not think the number could be less than three or four.

4303. Do you attach importance to the attendance of the Protestants at their Protestant worship every morning?—Certainly.

4304. Would you apply the same observation to the Catholics as to the advantage of their attending the service of their church?—Unquestionably.

4305. Does your Lordship consider that the providing of two or three warders ought to be such a consideration as would prevent that object from being carried out?—In the abstract, not; but in the management of a prison establishment as of any other establishment, you have to look all round you to consider how any alteration will bear upon other parties, and how other interests are affected, and you have to decide what, upon the whole, seems fair and right and best for the whole establishment.

4306. May I ask your Lordship's opinion upon this point; do you think it fair and just and right that the Catholics should be debarred from a privilege or an advantage which their Protestant fellow prisoners enjoy?—I have only to point out to the Committee that if you concede the advantage to the Roman Catholics you must, upon every ground of equity, concede it also to other Dissenters, and I need not add to that that if two or three denominations in the prison claimed an equal amount of concession and expenditure, the cost of prison management, and the difficulties of it, must be enormously increased, if indeed you had not complete chaos and anarchy reigning everywhere.

4307. We will come to the matter of Dissenters by-and-bye if you will allow me to continue; I simply refer to Catholics for the time; is Catholic worship allowed upon a Sunday?—Associated worship is not allowed.

4308. Catholic prisoners are not allowed to assemble for Divine worship in the gaol on Sundays?—They are not.

4309. Is there work done upon the Sunday?—No.

4310. Then how could it be an interference with the work carried on, if Catholics were allowed to assemble for Divine worship upon the Sunday as the Protestants are; it would not interfere with work, there being no work done upon the Sunday?—I am not aware that there is any very strong reason against it, except that the the staff of warders is reduced on Sunday in order to give them the necessary recreation; and that if you allowed the use of the chapel to the Roman Catholics on that day, you would have to increase to that extent the staff of prison warders.

4311. Then your Lordship would appear to consider that the recreation of the warders is a serious consideration as against the right of the Catholics to attend Catholic worship on the Sunday; is that what I am to understand from your Lordship?—In using the word recreation, I ought to have said health. It is a matter of absolute necessity, if the prison is to be worked with anything like its present staff, that more work should not be thrown upon the present warders.

4312. You would require more warders to get rid of that inconvenience?—No doubt.

4313. Do you think it is fair that Catholics should be debarred from attending their church or their Divine worship on Sunday, while Protestants are allowed to attend their Divine worship?—I am afraid I can only say that the minority must submit to the inconveniences of being a minority. I should readily accept the view that in a large prison such as Liverpool, where you have an equal number of both denominations, or something like an equal number, it would be most expedient that every facility that can be given should be given to the Roman Catholics; but where their number is a fraction, an eighth, or a ninth of the whole, they must, in common with other denominations, submit to what is, on the whole, best for the general working of the system and of the prison.

4314. Do you think that it is on the whole best for the general working of the gaol that the Catholics should be debarred from the advantage of attending the worship of their church upon the Sunday?—I have already answered that question. I stated that I should, in the abstract, desire every one to attend his form of religious worship.

4315. And then I understand that if you could get over the difficulty of appointing two or three additional warders, you would think the Catholics ought to have this additional advantage?—But everybody who has had anything to do with the management of county affairs knows that it is a very serious thing to add to the expense of these already expensive establishments.

4316. Do you think that three warders would be enough to bring those prisoners to chapel, and to watch over them during their attendance?—I think that that argument is merely the old fallacy of the heap of sand; it is an addition here, and an addition there, and it is difficult to say that anyone of those additions is in itself objectionable.

4317. Would the cost of providing a room, that might be used either for instruction or associated worship, be very great?—Having reference to the general structure of the prison, I should say that it would be a very expensive affair.

4318. Could your Lordship give any estimate of your idea of the cost of providing such a room?—I could get it for you, but I should be afraid of giving it myself.

4319. If the Catholic clergyman did not object to using the chapel which is now used by the Protestants, would not a great deal of the difficulty be got rid of as to the structure, and providing another chapel?—I understand the honourable Chairman's question to apply to Sundays.

4320. I apply it entirely to Sundays?—Of course if the minister on the one hand had no objection to using the chapel, and the Court of Quarter Sessions on the other had no objection to granting the use of the chapel to him, the expense would be reduced to the increase in the staff of warders.

4321. It is within your Lordship's knowledge that Catholic prisoners do attend the Protestant chapel on the Sunday?—I am not aware that they do, as such; certainly not, I should say.

4322. If Mr. Collingridge stated that such was the fact, your Lordship would be inclined, I presume, to accept that as being so?—Of course if he said it deliberately, I must presume that he would have some ground for saying it; but I should require proof, for I am bound to say that having read through that evidence, I have found a good many inaccuracies as to facts in Mr. Collingridge's evidence.

4323. As regards this statement, for instance, of course Mr. Collingridge was never in the chapel at the time the service was going on, and received his statement from other persons; but assuming it is the case that Catholic prisoners do attend the Protestant service, does your Lordship think it fair that an inducement should be held out to them to attend Protestant worship by the fact of depriving them of any worship of their own on Sunday?—My answer to that is, that there is practically no such inducement weighing upon their minds.

4324. But if there be no Catholic service, and if there be, as there is, a Protestant service, do you not think that that opportunity for a prisoner to leave his cell for an hour would be quite sufficient to induce him to attend the worship of a religion other than his own?—There would be the inducement of a service in which he took no interest, and of an association which offered him no advantages, to be weighed against the inducement of an hour's congenial idleness in his own cell.

4325. Is not there something more than an hour's idleness; is there not an hour's irksomeness of solitary confinement?—That would be so if it was solitary confinement; but that is not so when out-of-door exercise enters into prison life as it does with us.

4326. Does the out-door exercise go on at the same time that the Protestant service is going on?—I am really not sure how that is; I believe that we have altered these regulations once or twice.

4327. But on the Sunday, is it not the fact that those who are not in attendance on Divine worship are in their cells?—I imagine so.

4328. You have no reason to think the contrary?—No.

4329. Do you think, from any experience you have had of prisoners, that a prisoner would be very glad to leave his cell in order to attend Divine worship?—I am afraid I think that the inducement is of the very smallest possible kind, if it exists at all.

4330. If your Lordship heard that many witnesses had stated they had been told so over and over again by prisoners, both when they were in gaol and when they were released, would you attach more weight to that opinion than you would have been hitherto likely to do?—It would depend depend upon what I considered the value of the particular testimony.

4331. I will put a case in point; we had the chairman of the visiting justices of Liverpool, Mr. Rathbone, before us; and if he expressed such an opinion, would you attach value to it? —I have a great idea of the value of Mr. Rathbone's opinion and knowledge.

4332. Would you accept such an opinion?—I should be sorry to accept even such an opinion without the power of cross-examination upon it.

4333. Does your Lordship know that Mr. Collingridge offered to pay the expense of this additional building, which it was said was required for the purpose of instructing the Catholic prisoners in common, or for Divine worship?—I read that statement with the greatest possible surprise; it may be so, and it may have escaped my recollection. I have no papers by me particularly to refer to, but I have not the faintest recollection of any such offer ever having been made to us. There was an offer made by Mr. Collingridge to the effect that if a room was provided by the visiting justices he would be happy to provide what I think he termed the necessary adjuncts of religious worship, but any proposal to build a room is one which I never heard of, as far as I can remember, before.

4334. Has your Lordship the correspondence that passed between yourself and Mr. Collingridge?—Yes, but I am afraid that the whole of it is not available at this moment. I happen to have that particular letter, but I have left it in the Library of the House of Lords, and I can send for it.

4335. Will your Lordship look over your correspondence and see if Mr. Collingridge did in any portion of that correspondence make that offer which might have escaped your attention? —I will endeavour to do it when I am in the country, a few days hence.

4336. Now, with reference to the books; Mr. Collingridge has made some statements which perhaps your Lordship may think it desirable to answer; I think he stated that there was a Protestant Bible, a book of Common Prayer, and a Protestant tract, in the Catholic prisoners' cells, and there was some reason given why those were allowed to remain there?—That was again a statement which I read with a great deal of surprise; not, I am sure, that it was made with any intention of stating what is untrue, but it is, to the best of my knowledge, absolutely inconsistent with the existing fact. Mr. Collingridge, in that evidence, three or four times repeated that a Protestant Bible, a Prayer Book and a tract were, as he expressed it "invariably" placed in the cells of all Roman Catholics. I was struck with the expression. The passage I allude to is at Question 3644. "These books" (that is to say, the Protestant Prayer Book and Bible, and a Protestant tract) "are invariably to be found in every cell, and I object to each and all of them." As a matter of fact, the Protestant Bible and Prayer Book are placed in the cell of every prisoner, without discrimination, for a reason which I can afterwards explain to the Committee. A tract is placed in the cell of all Protestant prisoners after they have passed their first month's imprisonment. But men who are there during their first month's imprisonment, or for a month only, are in the first class, and these first class men are excluded from the use of all books except the Bible and Prayer Book, but no Roman Catholic prisoner is allowed to have any tract in his cell. This change took place upon a representation being made, I think, to me as chairman of the visiting justices. I saw the justice of it at once, and orders were given by which no tract should ever be admitted into any Roman Catholic prisoner's cell.

4337. Could you say when that change was made? — I cannot speak exactly to the dates, but it was somewhere about 12 or 18 months since. I ought perhaps to state further, in reference to that, that every Roman Catholic prisoner has a Bible of the Douay version, and he is entitled to any books which the Roman Catholic minister may please to give him from the library, which is placed under the Roman Catholic minister's charge; and the Committee will observe, that we have given this privilege to Roman Catholic prisoners over the Protestants, that, whereas, we exclude Protestant prisoners of the first class from the use of any books, except the Bible and the Prayer Book, we give the Roman Catholic minister liberty to give to any prisoners, whether in the first or in other classes, any book in addition to the Douay version of the Bible. Perhaps the Committee would like, in explanation of that circumstance, to know why it is that without discrimination a Protestant Bible and a Prayer Book are in the cell of every prisoner, both Roman Catholic and Protestant. It has never, as far as I have known, been made much of a grievance, and probably for this very simple reason, that I do not think more than 5 or 6 per cent. of the Roman Catholic prisoners can really read with any facility, and therefore, whatever books are placed there, is not practically of great importance; but, as a matter of fact, the Bible and Prayer Book are treated as cell furniture. Our system is to divide the prisoners into classes; the men pass from one class to another by good conduct; as they pass from one class to another, so they are shifted from one cell to another, and there would therefore obviously be only two modes of dealing with the case; either you would attach a Bible and a Prayer Book to each prisoner or to the cell; if you attached them to the prisoner, and made him convey them with him as he went from cell to cell, it would lead perhaps to communication between one prisoner and another, and to the books being defaced, and to the difficulty of detecting the person who had defaced them. It has therefore been found simpler and better to keep these two books in the cells.

4338. Are Catholic books by any chance left in the cells of Protestant prisoners?—They ought never to be so; it would be a pure accident if they were.

4339. It would be against the rule, would it not?—It would be against the rule.

4340. Do you not think that it should be against rule also to allow such a book as the Book of Common Prayer to be in a Roman Catholic prisoner's cell?—I can only say that, individually, I should have no objection to attach the books to the prisoner rather than to the cell; but all such changes involve difficulties in the working, and tend to complicate the system, and it ultimately comes back to a question of expense.

4341. We will put it in another form; does your lordship think that it would be right to have a Roman Catholic book, as it were, forced upon a Protestant prisoner?—Certainly not.

4342. And, unless by accident, such a thing never never occurs, that is to say, a Catholic book is never forced upon the Protestant prisoner, by being left in his cell?—I can hardly see that leaving a book in his cell is quite equivalent to forcing it upon him, particularly if he cannot read or reads with great difficulty; but I will repeat what I said before, that if a Roman Catholic book finds its way into the cell of a Protestant prisoner, it is against the rule, and must be the result of an accident.

4343. Do you not think that it ought to be against the rules?—Certainly. Before leaving the case of the books, I should like to make an observation upon the answer to Question 3643, which is, "Do the Catholic prisoners have access to the Protestant books?" The answer is, "I believe they may. I do not mean that they are given them without my consent, but they are allowed leave to take them out of the library with my consent." I am rather at a loss to understand what the meaning of that answer can be, because no Protestant book, with the exception of the Prayer Book and the Bible, which, as I have described, are part of the cell furniture, ought, under any circumstances, to pass into the hands of the Roman Catholic prisoners. The chaplain is distinctly required to give none, and some two or three years ago we formed a library of Roman Catholic books, under the sole charge and administration of the Roman Catholic minister; he had full power to deliver them to whomsoever he pleased, and in whatever way he pleased.

4344. Mr. Dalrymple.] I asked an explanation of that answer at Question 3753. I asked, "When it is said that they can have Protestant books also, I conclude you mean books which are common to all?" and the answer was, "Books in the general library." He meant books that they all might read, I suppose?—I think, as a matter of fact, that very few Roman Catholic prisoners ever do have books out of the general library; they are almost uniformly supplied out of the Roman Catholic library, and I think that that is the best rule to go by, as it prevents mistakes and confusion.

4345. Does your Lordship wish to make any other reference to the subject of books before you go to the question of the school?—I notice nothing myself.

4346. With reference to the school, I think that Mr. Collingridge stated that the Protestant teacher expounded the Protestant Bible in a Protestant spirit, and, therefore, necessarily in an anti-Catholic spirit, and that Catholics were present during that examination. Do you think that that is desirable?—It is rather difficult to reply to an abstract question of that sort, and I must again fall back upon my old answer; that if you have several denominations in a prison, you must have some rule upon which you will proceed; there must be some who will be in a minority, and they must suffer the disadvantage of a minority. As you are aware, the schoolmaster instructs in the school, and the schoolmaster, no doubt, is a Protestant; but I ought to say that it is perfectly optional to every Roman Catholic to go to school or not, as he pleases. He is distinctly informed that there is no compulsion upon him, and no necessity for going, if he has any conscientious objection to doing so, which is again at variance with one of the answers which Mr. Collingridge made; and, in the next place, he may bring with him, and many do bring with them, Bibles of the Douay version; and lastly, perhaps, I ought to say that the amount of religious instruction which is given is much the smaller portion of that instruction.

4347. Taking all that as being perfectly true, and that the amount of religious instruction is, in point of time, small, and that a prisoner may or may not attend as he pleases, is the fact of his having in his hand his Douay version of the Bible a complete protection against the influence of a Protestant exposition of the Bible?—I do not suppose that anything that you could give would be a protection if there is a mala fides in the matter.

4348. Supposing that there is bona fides, and an honest intention of expounding the Scriptures in an honest and anti-Catholic spirit, is there a sufficient protection in the fact that a person happens to have in his hand a Douay version of the Scriptures?—I think protection in that sense means abstinence from the school.

4349. And is there not, on the other hand, an inducement to leave the cell to attend school, which may be considered as a relaxation?—To some prisoners, no doubt, there is an inducement to attend school, while to others there is not.

4350. At any rate, I can imagine that it is a pleasanter thing to attend school than to remain locked up in a cell?—It used not to be under our old system; it is now, I believe.

4351. At any rate, if the inducement were comparatively weak before, it is strengthened now, is it not?—Yes.

4352. Now, with reference to this matter of Dissenters to which your Lordship referred; is it not within your own knowledge that the great body of Dissenters do not object to the teaching of the Protestant clergyman, nor to attend the Protestant chapel?—I think, as far as my experience goes, that depends very much upon the chaplain.

4353. Upon whether the chaplain is popular, or an attractive preacher, or what?—I was not thinking of those qualities in the prison chaplain, but I was rather referring to this, that where the chaplain is a man of good sense and tact, he can satisfy Dissenters as well as Churchmen.

4354. But whatever his good sense, and whatever his tact and bona fides, do you think that the Protestant chaplain can satisfy the wants of a Roman Catholic in point of religious instruction?—I do not see that under our system he gives them any instruction whatever.

4355. Does not the Protestant chaplain give instruction every morning?—No Roman Catholic prisoner obtains the religious instruction he requires from the Protestant chaplain.

4356. Does your Lordship know that a Roman Catholic cannot, without practical apostacy, attend the worship of another church than his own?—I should be sorry to say that, from my personal knowledge of several devout Roman Catholics whom I have known in former days, but I am aware that that is the view entertained by a considerable number of persons.

4357. At any rate, you will take it for granted that that is a very general rule under which Roman Catholics act, and that that is their feeling and opinion?—I am quite willing, for the moment, to accept anything that you may state.

4358. Assuming that it is the case that a Roman Catholic prisoner cannot attend the Protestant worship without a practical departure from his church; is it a fair thing to put a Roman Catholic in a gaol where you have got him without liberty of action on his part in such a position as not to give him the option of attending his own service, and thereby induce him to attend the Protestant service?—I think the Committee is under some misapprehension; every Roman Catholic prisoner in the county prison in Hampshire has the full benefit of the religious services and instruction of his priest. The only restriction which is imposed upon him is, that that instruction shall not be given in association.

12 May 1870.

4359. Do you know that Roman Catholics attach much importance to attending Divine worship upon the Sunday?—I presume they do on Sundays as well as upon week days.

4360. Do you know that it is a matter of absolute conscientious obligation upon Roman Catholics outside the prison, to attend Divine service on every Sunday in the year?—It is very difficult to answer that question, from one's personal experiences, which are sometimes rather adverse to that proposition.

4361. If your Lordship will assume that such is the fact, do you think that they ought, in prison, to be deprived of that religious privilege?—Perhaps the best way of answering the question, which I think the honourable Chairman wants answered, would be for me to state how far we have endeavoured to meet in this matter the wishes of Mr. Collingridge with regard to religious instruction. But if I am told that it is incontrovertibly a matter of strict obligation upon every Roman Catholic to attend Divine worship in association upon the Sunday, I have no answer to make to that. As a matter of fact, the Roman Catholic prisoners cannot, under our system, attend Divine worship in association on Sunday, but we have gone to a considerable length to obviate that, as I shall be prepared to point out.

4362. Will you tell the Committee to what length you have gone?—We have authorised Mr. Collingridge, on the octaves of the three great festivals, Christmas, Easter, and Trinity, to administer the Holy Communion to all such prisoners as he may place upon his list, and we have, in fact, re-cast and re-modelled the prison arrangements to such an extent as to give every facility for that being done.

4363. Merely to have the Holy Communion administered to them upon these three great festivals in the year?—Yes; and besides that, he is perfectly free on Sundays, as well as on other days, to perform the services of his church in the different cells.

4364. Is it your opinion that there ought to be a certain amount of instruction, to fit the Catholic prisoners for a festival of such solemnity as you refer to; and are you not of opinion that the instruction, such as is ordinarily given by a clergyman to Catholics in association, would be very important as a means of preparation for that object?—I should have thought that the instruction necessary for preparing prisoners for the reception of the Holy Communion would be better administered in private than in association.

4365. Could you say what time would be required for preparing a prisoner for that solemn exercise?—I could not say what time any clergyman of any denomination would require; it must depend upon the person with whom he is dealing. But if you calculate the amount of time at the disposal of the Roman Catholic priest as against the time at the disposal of the chaplain, Mr. Collingridge has a greater amount of time at his command than the chaplain has.

4366. But has not the chaplain a right of assembling his flock in association, and of preaching to them all at the same time?—The chaplain has the advantage, and the great advantage, of instructing prisoners in association.

4367. Is not that a great advantage?—It is a great advantage.

4368. Does not it increase the power of the clergyman in instruction, and render it much more impressive, while it economises his time?—I do not know that it renders it more impressive; that must depend naturally upon the individual case. I should say the advantage is that it is an economy of labour.

4369. If it be an economy of labour, why would you not allow the Catholic chaplain to economise his time just as you would allow the Protestant chaplain to do so?—The difficulties are those which I have pointed out, arising from the number of the Roman Catholic prisoners, and expense; but we have endeavoured to meet Mr. Collingridge in another way, by allowing him to name an assistant, and whenever he is himself unable to take out the full time which is at his disposal, to allow the assistant to do it for him.

4370. That is, to instruct the prisoners singly?—Yes; to instruct the prisoners singly.

4371. But not to allow him to assemble them in common for the purpose of instruction, or for the purpose of Divine worship?—That is so.

4372. Now, with regard to salary, as a matter of fact, has Mr. Collingridge ever applied for salary?—I really could not say from personal knowledge. I am quite willing to accept Mr. Collingridge's statement that he has not done so; but I ought to say, in fairness to the court of quarter sessions, with whom Mr. Collingridge finds great fault, and from whom he says he can never expect any justice at any time or under any circumstances, that with regard to this matter, if I remember rightly, as soon as the recent Act was passed they proceeded immediately, having reference to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners who would be under his charge, to give him a salary which they considered sufficient; indeed, I think that Hampshire was one of the earliest counties that took any steps in the matter.

4373. But have you found in Mr. Collingridge's evidence, or in any correspondence that he has sent to your Lordship, that he attaches more importance to giving full religious instruction to the Catholic prisoners than he does to the acquisition of a salary, or to an increase of salary?—He has never contrasted the two in any way.

4374. Has your Lordship read the question in the evidence, where it is put to him, that he is more anxious for that religious instruction than he is about a salary?—I have no doubt that that is so; but I do not think, in fairness, if he has never breathed a syllable with regard to salary, that he ought to make it now a matter of complaint against us that the salary is not large enough.

4375. Sir John Pakington.] Your Lordship has just given evidence with regard to the books which are allowed in the cells; you have a certain number of Roman Catholics in the gaol, and you have a Roman Catholic minister; may I ask you whether you do not think that it would be be better, under those circumstances, to allow the Roman Catholic minister to decide what books shall be in the Roman Catholic cells, than to call a Protestant Bible and a Prayer Book prison furniture, and to place them in every cell?—I have no objection to the principle which is implied in that question, and individually I should not hold particularly to retaining the Bible and Prayer Book as cell furniture. I explained to the Committee the reason upon which I found that rule existing, and the certainty that a change of it would entail trouble and difficulty, and ultimately lead to some slight increase of expense.

4376. Such a change would meet Roman Catholic scruples, and, I presume, could not be productive of much expense or much interference?—I should be very happy to make such, and even a greater change if it completely satisfied Mr. Collingridge.

4377. Mr. Collingridge told us of a correspondence with your Lordship in the course of last autumn; will you be good enough to tell the Committee what were the principal subjects of that correspondence?—I can hardly speak with certainty as to what the contents of that correspondence were; I believe it related generally to increased facilities for religious instruction and to associated worship. Mr. Collingridge says that it contained an offer on his part to build a room. As I have already stated, I cannot remember anything of the kind.

4378. You cannot recollect?—No, I do not believe that it was ever made.

4379. My object in putting that question was to ask whether the correspondence related chiefly or in a large degree to the question of associated worship?—It formed a part, no doubt, of that correspondence.

4380. If I read rightly Mr. Collingridge's evidence, I think he told us that he had repeatedly applied to the visiting justices for permission to have Mass and associated worship, and that he had always been refused; is that within your Lordship's recollection?—I believe that Mr. Collingridge stated that, but that the statement is not quite accurate. If the Committee do not object to my reading a few paragraphs out of the visiting justices' report of the Michaelmas sessions 1869, in which this particular question was dealt with, they will see the form in which we left it to the court. Applications of various kinds had been during the course of the twelve months, as far as I recollect, made to the visiting justices, and they had granted all that they felt themselves at liberty to give, having reference to their own powers and to the understanding on which they hold those powers from the court; they subsequently referred the larger question of associated worship to the court. If I were to read to the Committee the terms upon which they made that reference it might save a good deal of trouble. I ought to say, in the first instance, that Mr. Collingridge had complained that the time at his disposal of an evening was not sufficient; and the visiting justices met him in the following way: originally the time at his disposal was from a quarter past 12 till half-past one, which they subsequently extended from a quarter past six to seven in the evening, and which they again extended, on a further representation, from a quarter past six to a quarter past eight, giving him now about three hours and a quarter in the day. The first part of the report was taken up with a recommendation of those extensions in point of time, which I need not read. The visiting justices then went on in these words: "Mr. Collingridge dwells with much force upon the difficulty with which he, whilst alone and unaided, undertakes the spiritual care of so many Roman Catholic prisoners as at present happen to be in confinement. The visiting justices do not deny that there is here some cause of complaint, but they doubt whether it is one entirely susceptible of redress. It might, however, in a great measure, be lessened by recognising his assistant, and by allowing him to act in aid of Mr. Collingridge at those times of the day or evening when religious teaching is permitted. In this manner it is reasonable to suppose that the entire time now granted to Mr. Collingridge for religious purposes would be utilised, and provided that the assistant's name is, upon the recommendation of the visiting justices, subject to the approval of the court, and that it is distinctly understood that he, as well as Mr. Collingridge, should be responsible to the visiting justices for a strict compliance with all regulations and conditions which they may think it right to lay down, they do not apprehend any serious objections to such a relaxation as would be involved in the change." I may mention upon that point that the court have agreed to the extension of time, and to the recognition of his assistant. "Thirdly, Mr. Collingridge urges, in very earnest language, the expediency and the justice of associating the Roman Catholic prisoners for religious worship, and, if the visiting justices do not misunderstand him, for religious instruction. This is a request which, in the opinion of the visiting justices, needs careful consideration before it can be conceded, and they feel it their duty to point out to the court some obvious consequences of it. It will be clear to the court, if Mr. Collingridge's request were granted, it would probably be by sanctioning Divine worship, or religious instruction, as the case may be, for the Roman Catholic prisoners at the same time that the other prisoners are in chapel or school. Mr. Collingridge, indeed, suggests to the visiting justices, as a precedent or guide, the practice of the military prisons and the convict establishments, where the prisoners of both denominations successively occupy a common chapel; and he might have quoted other instances, as for example, the borough prison at Liverpool, or the Manchester city gaol, where such is the practice. But in Liverpool the total number of prisoners averages nearly 900, of which the Roman Catholics scarcely fall short of 600; whilst in Manchester, out of 720 prisoners, not less than 270 are Roman Catholics. The case here is different, and the total numbers in that prison are not such as to allow of this further sub-division of the prisoners for the purpose of Divine worship and education without a serious disturbance of the existing classification, the hours of labour, and the general system of discipline. On the other hand, if associated worship or instruction be sanctioned at the same time that the other prisoners are in chapel or in school, it is clear that another room (which does not now exist), properly fitted up for Roman Catholic worship, must be provided, and that the staff of prison officers must be increased. These are questions which, however they may be decided, call for careful examination. The visiting justices will gladly enter upon such a consideration if it be the wish of the court; but they ought to point out that the principle upon which such an arrangement arrangement would, under similar circumstances, be made, is one quite applicable to other religious denominations as to Roman Catholics. There is in fact, in the opinion of the visiting justices, no reason why such denominations should not claim an equally exceptional accommodation with that now sought by Mr. Collingridge; but it will be obvious to the court that if such facilities for separate worship and instruction was extended to them, the administration of the prison on any fixed system of labour or discipline would become simply impossible. This is, in their opinion, a question of numbers not less than of expense, and they apprehend that such must also have been the view of the Legislature when the 26th & 27th Vict., c. 79, s. 3, was enacted. The visiting justices are far from saying that, if at any time, or for any reason, the Roman Catholic prisoners should so increase in numbers as to bear really a large proportion to the general body of the prisoners, it might not become the duty of this court to provide more complete religious accommodation for them; but whilst they hold their present proportions to the total numbers, it appears to the visiting justices that they must accept the inconvenience to which in such cases a minority is subject. With this statement of a question which is important, not only locally, but in its general bearings, the visiting justices will now leave the matter in the hands of the court." So the Committee will see that it is not strictly accurate to state that the visiting justices had ever refused Mr. Collingridge's application. They had stated the case to the court: there was nobody in the court who chose to take that question up, and the court preferred to leave the matter as it now stands. Since then the various extensions and concessions which I before stated with reference to the time, and with reference to the recognition of Mr. Collingridge's assistant, and as to the administration of the Holy Communion, with one or two other details, have been granted.

4381. If I rightly followed the extract which your Lordship has just read, the visiting justices in that Report alluded to the question of whether or not the precedent established at Liverpool and other places, of allowing Roman Catholics to have a sort of joint occupation of the chapel had been entertained: it was referred for consideration, but it has not since been taken up by the court, and there the matter rests without any decision; is not that so?—The court did not take it up at the time, and Mr. Collingridge subsequently addressed fresh applications to us. We brought those applications again before the court on a recent occasion, and obtained from the court those concessions which I have already specified, namely, the extension of time, and the recognition of his assistant, because we considered ourselves entitled of our own power to provide for the administration of the Holy Communion.

4382. Those were concessions, no doubt, showing, as far as they went, a desire on the part of the visiting justices, and I presume on the part of the court, a desire to meet fairly the requirements of the Roman Catholic chaplain; but I still understand your Lordship, that the important suggestion of the joint use of the chapel, for the purpose of associated worship by the Catholics as well as the Protestants, has not either been reconsidered or determined?—I myself understand that the court has for the present decided it in the negative, although not by any formal vote.

4383. They decided it by taking no action upon it?—I understood the decision of the court to be, that the changes which had been made, and which were proposed to be made, were sufficient to meet the grievance.

4384. May I ask whether it was intended by the visiting justices, in those passages which you have read upon the subject of the joint occupation of the chapel, to intimate to the court an opinion in favour of such joint occupation?—I think the intention of the visiting justices was to place the court in full possession of the facts of the case, and to make them acquainted with the general arguments on both sides, which might be urged in deciding that question; their object was that the court should not go blindfold into any decision, one way or the other.

4385. May I ask your Lordship's own opinion; would you approve of a joint occupation of the chapel?—I think the principle which is indicated in that report is a very reasonable one; that where there are a very large number of Roman Catholic prisoners, as there are in many of the midland county prisons, it is only reasonable and right to give them such accommodation; but where, upon the other hand, they amount to a fraction of the total number of the prisoners, the disturbance to the system may be so great, that as a minority they must be called upon to bear the inconvenience. Of course it would depend upon the circumstances of the different gaols; the disturbance to one system may not be so great as it is to another, and the inconvenience which one may not be called upon to bear may not be so great in the one case as in another.

4386. When you refer to disturbance, do you refer to what would take place upon a week day, or would there be a disturbance upon the Sunday?—The inconvenience is mainly, of course, upon the week days.

4387. I presume, from the answer which your Lordship has before given, that you would think a body of from 40 to 50 Christian prisoners ought to have the advantage of Divine worship upon the Sunday, if it can be reasonably provided for?—I think your estimate is very much beyond the mark.

4388. Your Lordship's own estimate was 43?—Forty-three I said was the maximum average; and I ought to say this, which is a point to be very much borne in mind with regard to the associated religious instruction of the Roman Catholic prisoners in Hampshire, that assuming that there are, say, from 40 to 43 Roman Catholic prisoners, there would probably not be eligible for such associated instruction more than one-half of that number. By our rules, which I think are very sound, no one in the first class, that is to say, during the first month's imprisonment, goes to school; school with us is now treated as a privilege, and that is the reason it is now considered an inducement to attend it; formerly it was not so; but in order to make it a privilege, we have been compelled to exclude all men during the first month of their imprisonment, and all those whose sentences are for 7, 14, 21 days, or anything within the month; therefore, practically, by the reductions which are so made, the number of prisoners who would be brought into associated instruction, would not be more than from 20 to 25, I think.

4389. But we were speaking of Divine service, not of associated instruction; would those observations apply to Divine service?—No, I presume they would not.

4390. I presume

4390. I presume if the joint occupation of the chapel were permitted, all arguments upon the ground of expense, so far as that is concerned, would vanish?—I think an expense would be necessary for an increase in the staff of the warders, and for whatever religious adjuncts might be required.

4391. Expense would be incurred by whatever increased staff might be required; I presume your Lordship would not deny that in such an establishment the staff should be adapted to the fair requirements of the establishment, whatever they may be?—Certainly.

4392. You spoke of the difficulty which might possibly arise in the event of further concession to the Roman Catholic prisoners with respect to Protestant Dissenters; have you ever found in Winchester any objection upon the part of Dissenters to attend Divine worship in the Protestant chapel?—There have been such cases.

4393. I presume those are infrequent cases?—They have not been frequent, which I attribute to the good feeling and judgment of our chaplain.

4394. Does your Lordship happen to remember what classes of Dissenters those were?—I think Baptists and Presbyterians.

4395. You have not above two or three of either denomination in the prison, I presume?—We have sometimes a considerable number of Presbyterian prisoners.

4396. Mr. Collingridge in his evidence expressed a strong opinion of the inadequacy of the salary of 40 l. a year; may I ask your Lordship if you can recollect upon what principle the court decided upon that amount of salary?—I should be sorry at this distance of time to say what the principle was, but I think I might point out to the Committee that, assuming capitation to be anything like a fair ground, upon such a scale the Roman Catholic priest would have nothing to complain of. There may be upon the average somewhere about from 40 to 43 prisoners, which is at the rate of about 1 l. per head, and there would be an average of about 300 Protestant prisoners, which, with a salary of 300 l. a year to the chaplain, would be as nearly as possible the same thing.

4397. Mr. Collingridge also stated a complaint upon a subject which has already been adverted to by the honourable Chairman, but not exactly with regard to the precise terms of Mr. Collingridge's complaint. The honourable Chairman has asked you about the system of instruction of Roman Catholics in the school. Mr. Collingridge stated to us that this was a subject of complaint as long as nine years ago, and that nine years ago, a promise was made by the visiting justices to remedy the grievance, but that from that day to this nothing further has been heard of that promise, and that it has been disregarded; does your Lordship remember anything about that?—It was long before my time, and it is the first time I ever heard of such a promise; it has never been brought under my notice, as far as I am aware, since I have been chairman of the visiting justices.

4398. Do you think that there is any fair ground of complaint at present in respect of the instruction of Roman Catholics in the school by the Protestant schoolmaster in the Protestant Bible?—I apprehend, as I said before, looking to the fact that the Roman Catholics are a small minority in the prison, and that some uniform rule is really necessary for the working of a large establishment, that the inconvenience and grievance is reduced to a minimum. No Roman Catholic prisoner is required to attend; it is explained to him that it is free for him to stay away. If he does go there he is equally free to bring his own Bible with him. The Protestant schoolmaster of course, so far as he deals with the Bible at all, must deal with that Bible to which he has always been accustomed. On the other hand, the religious instruction certainly does not occupy above 15 or 20 minutes out of the hour; the rest is entirely devoted to secular teaching.

4399. But if a Roman Catholic availed himself of any such permission, and stayed away altogether in order to avoid the Protestant Bible, he would stay away to his own injury in other respects, would he not?—No doubt he would; it is his misfortune to be one of the minority.

4400. Would there be any difficulty, either in principle or in practice, in establishing that with which we are all familiar, namely, a sort of conscience clause, to allow that at the request of the priest, the Roman Catholic prisoners might stay away from that part of the instruction?—It would involve a great deal of trouble, because you would have to be continually telling off particular men, unlocking the cells, passing them through the corridors, taking them through the schoolroom, and taking them back again. The confusion which all those sort of minute changes introduce into a system is almost inconceivable, and the right honourable Baronet knows very well from his experience in county matters, that there is never too large a margin of money for such refinements on a prison system.

4401. You think that although there would not in principle, yet that in practice there would be difficulty?—I know there would be difficulty in practice, and I do not think that the advantage would be tantamount.

4402. Mr. Talbot.] With regard to the working of this Act, which has been so much under discussion, I imagine your Lordship's interpretation of this Act was, that each prison authority was to decide according to the best of its judgment the way in which the Act was to be carried out?—Yes, I think so.

4403. If Parliament had desired that in every case of minority of this kind a special religious provision was to be made, it would have been better to mention that in the Act of Parliament, would it not?—I think Parliament considered it better to leave it to the discretion and good faith of the visiting justices, they being conversant with the local requirements, and being presumed to be acting fairly.

4404. The justices, either in the smaller body as visiting justices, or in the larger body at quarter sessions, consider themselves to be acting for the county?—No doubt they act for the county.

4405. Although not an elected body, they are to some extent a representative body?—Yes.

4406. And therefore they would be bound to take into account the feeling of the county for which they were acting?—Yes, undoubtedly.

4407. If the feeling was very strong against providing a Roman Catholic chaplain, or Roman Catholic services, it would not be altogether fair to charge them with bigotry and intolerance because they had not carried out the views of the Roman Catholics?—No, certainly not. If it is a question merely of detail, I consider that they are bound to carry out while they hold their office, the principles of the body which appoints them; but if it is a question of principle, they have to reconcile it with their conscience whether they will carry out their own pleasure or bend to that of the superior body.

12 May 1870.

4408. Are you aware whether the practice in various counties varies considerably?—No doubt it does so.

4409. In the county of Kent no payment is made to the Roman Catholic priest, the number being about the same as in your county; but, on the other hand, the provision for service which has been so much discussed this morning is allowed?—I have understood that it is.

4410. So that one body of magistrates takes one view of toleration, and another body takes another?—Yes, that is so.

4411. Ample liberty is given to them under the Act of Parliament; that is clearly the discretion that Parliament left to them?—Yes; Parliament left that liberty to them.

4412. Then, passing from that subject, I would ask your Lordship upon the subject of the pressure which has been hinted at as being put upon the Roman Catholic prisoners, by the ministrations of the chaplain of the Church of England; has your Lordship any reason to suppose that the chaplain in his instruction deals with controversial matters?—I believe that Mr. Rogers, our chaplain, both from the instructions which we have constantly given him, and from his own disposition, would be desirous to avoid anything like the faintest pressure upon the conscience of a person of another denomination.

4413. Mr. Matthews.] Is your Lordship aware what number of warders there are now employed in Winchester Gaol?—We have occasionally altered the staff, but I think the number of discipline warders is 16.

4414. Do you know how many warders are told off to conduct prisoners to chapel on Sundays?—A considerable number, from the necessity of the case. Under any circumstances the conducting of a number of prisoners, whether large or small, requires a certain number of warders.

4415. I wished to know what number it was?—There must be one warder to unlock the cells; there must be another warder half-way down the passage to watch the prisoners as they pass through; and a third to receive them at the door of the chapel. Besides that, there must be warders in proportion to the number of the prisoners, and to the arrangement of the room, to superintend them during Divine worship.

4416. How many would you have to watch them during the service on Sunday?—I should think, so far as mere supervision was concerned, one warder to about every 50 prisoners would be sufficient.

4417. So that, in order to enable the 40 or 43 Catholic prisoners to go to chapel on Sundays, four warders would be sufficient; three on the road to the chapel, and one in the chapel?—Yes.

4418. What number of warders are allowed to be absent on Sundays?—I am afraid I cannot answer you in detail. All I can say is this, that our staff is now reduced to the lowest point to which I should like to see it, and that with the harder work which has been lately thrown upon them, it has been absolutely necessary, as a matter of health, to give them some relaxation upon the Sunday as the most convenient day. I ought to mention that even the concessions which we have made to the Catholics of late as regards attendance in the evening, have contributed to impose additional work upon the warders.

4419. But I understand your reason for objecting to allow Roman Catholics to hear Mass upon the Sunday may be reduced to this: that the present staff of warders is insufficient for the purpose. I want to know to what extent that applies?—I stated that there were two objections. One was the fact that no room at this moment exists which would be suitable for this purpose, and that one would have to be provided, at a considerable expense; and, secondly, that you would have to increase your staff of warders; and whatever that increase was in money, it must be taken into account.

4420. I understood that the first objection was obviated by the joint use of the prison chapel?—Assuming that, it would be so.

4421. That left simply the objection of providing a sufficient staff of warders?—Yes.

4422. Do I understand your Lordship that there is any time upon the Sunday morning when there would not be four warders available?—I am satisfied you could not do it with the present staff.

4423. I should be glad to have the actual facts as regards the absence or presence of warders at a certain time?—In the prison it is necessary to divide and distribute your work amongst the existing staff, and it would be absolutely impossible for me, even if I had that knowledge, at this moment to explain how every warder was stationed in the particular parts of Winchester Gaol. All I can say is, that no more work could be placed upon the present warders without rendering an increase to their numbers necessary.

4424–5. At what hours does the Protestant service begin and end on Sundays?—It begins on Sunday mornings at 10 a.m., and on week days at seven.

4426. At what hour is it over?—Those are details to which I cannot pledge myself.

4427–8. But they are details on which your Lordship's judgment must rest, as the inconvenience to the warders is the sole matter upon which your Lordship is now basing your objection?—I must demur to that way of putting the question. I take it they are in chapel about an hour.

4429. Are all the warders present during this hour in the chapel?—Some are employed on one duty, and some on another.

4430. And are none of those men on leave of absence at this hour on Sundays?—I must decline to give an answer upon those minute details, because I could not give it with precision.

4431. Does not your Lordship's view of the inconvenience of the warders rest upon those details?—Yes; and no doubt my opinion was formed upon a knowledge of those details; but it is quite impossible for me, a couple of years afterwards, to give the details upon which it was formed. All I can give to the Committee is my general conclusion that, assuming the existing chapel to be used also for the Roman Catholic prisoners, and the difficulty consequently to be reduced to a mere question of warders, an increase in the staff of warders would become necessary. What amount of increase might be required would be a matter which, of course, the visiting justices, if they were carrying out the orders of the the court, would have to consider; and it would then become my object, as the chairman, to try and bring that increase down to the smallest possible amount, if it could be done, by simplifying the other arrangements, cutting off work here and reducing it there; but I am satisfied that no such fresh duties could be imposed without increasing the staff.

4432. Could your Lordship give the Committee the details upon which your judgment rests, that daily service upon week days would derange the economy of the prison?—Merely in this way, that the religious services in such a case must succeed each other. If they succeed each other you will find you will get into difficulty with regard to the subsequent distribution of your hours. You will have to begin your day's work a great deal sooner than you now begin it; you will have to get all your prisoners out of bed so much sooner; if in winter, you will have to light up the prison so much earlier; you will have to get all your warders out of bed so much sooner, and you will have gaps and intervals which will have to be made good some way or another. You will have a double amount of locking and unlocking of the cells; and you will have that which is the most troublesome thing of all, namely, a sort of cross division of the prisoners, some going to one part of the prison, and others going to another. These cross divisions are, no doubt, practicable in very large penal establishments, but in prisons of a moderate size, such as the Hampshire County Prison, they involve considerable difficulty.

4433. Does your Lordship happen to have with you a time table of the meals and the arrangement of the work, and so on?—No, I have not got that, but I have got a table which will, perhaps, show the Committee how very complicated the system is in a certain sense, and how very liable it may be to derangements, if you introduced small changes here and there, without considering the bearings of them upon the whole system. The prisoners are divided into five classes; the first class embraces the first month, and the total labour assigned to the prisoners is 10 hours per day. Of those 10 hours, eight hours a day are spent upon the treadmill or at the crank, and two hours are devoted to oakum picking; that is in the case of prisoners who are termed effectives. In the case of non-effectives the 10 hours labour is employed in rope picking, one hour of which has to be spent in the open air, the rest in the cells. Besides that, various provisions and regulations are laid down with regard to marks. A certain number of marks have to be gained as conditions for the passage of prisoners from the one class to another. Class 2 embraces the second and third months, until 55 marks are gained, and then there comes a total labour of nine hours, eight hours of which are to be spent upon the treadmill, and one hour in oakum picking for the effectives, and nine hours rope picking for the non-effectives, two of which are to be spent in the open air. Class 3 covers the 4th, 5th, and 6th months until 80 marks are gained. The total amount of labour is nine hours, six hours at the treadmill or crank, and three hours oakum picking; non-effectives nine hours oakum picking, two hours of which in the open air. The next class is as regards total labour nine hours for the effectives, four hours at the treadmill or crank, and five hours trade instruction, spade labour, or oakum picking; for the non-effectives, nine hours trade occupation, or if not employed at a trade, nine hours oakum picking. The remainder of the sentence is embraced in class 5; nine hours labour, of which three hours at the treadmill or crank, and the rest in trade instruction, fatigue and spade labour or oakum picking. That will show the Committee, I think, that there is a good deal of complication, and that a good deal of thought was needed in the first instance, in order to get those different classes, some of them being very different classes of work, and all of them doing very different amounts of work, into harmony with each other. That has been done, but any little change being introduced without first seeing the full scope and bearings of it would throw the whole machinery out of gear.

4434. I do not observe in that list any provision for daily prayer for Protestants; does that precede their daily labour, or is it included in it?—I think it precedes it entirely.

4435. Therefore while the Protestants are at their daily morning prayer, what are the Catholics doing?— I presume they are in their cells; the duration of the service is a quarter of an hour.

4436. Their work, of course, does not begin earlier than the Protestants? — Their work begins at the same time, according to the class they are in.

4437. Then the only difficulty in giving the quarter of an hour for prayers to the Roman Catholics would be, that it would come either just before or after the Protestant service?—But you have not merely the quarter of an hour's prayer, you have to get your prisoners in and out of the chapel, and into the cells; you have to allow for all that.

4438. Does breakfast as well as prayers precede the work?—Breakfast and prayers precede the work.

4439. For all prisoners alike?—It does.

4440. Does your Lordship see any difficulty in the Catholics being at prayers while the Protestants are at breakfast, and vice versâ?—Simply that if you have two systems going on concurrently, one system for a fraction in the gaol, and another system for the majority in the gaol, it leads to an enormous amount of trouble, confusion, and difficulty in working.

4441. Now with regard to the question of books, I understand the Catholic prisoners are provided with such books as Mr. Collingridge has mentioned?—That is so.

4442. When a Catholic prisoner leaves the cell, what becomes of the Catholic books he has had in his cell?—As far as I remember, I think they are collected by the schoolmaster, and handed back to Mr. Collingridge.

4443. Has your Lordship had any complaints that that entailed either trouble or expense?—I have had no complaints, because it is part of the schoolmaster's duty to do it.

4444. Would it entail any additional trouble or expense for the schoolmaster to see that the Protestant books were removed from the cells of Catholic prisoners?—It would entail a very considerable augmentation of trouble, because whereas there are but 40 or 43 Roman Catholic prisoners whose books have to be seen to, there are about 300 Protestant prisoners.

4445. But it would only be necessary to remove the Protestant books from the 40 cells which were to be occupied by the Catholic prisoners?—

12 May 1870.

prisoners?—Yes; but, as I said before, I am not at all sure that one change will not involve two or three more; when once you touch a part of a system like this, you can hardly limit the change to that which you lay down in this manner at the first blush.

4446. Limiting ourselves to that which suggests itself at the first blush, there does exist a machinery for removing the Catholics books which have been left behind by the Catholic prisoners?—No doubt.

4447. And would not the same machinery be applicable to the removing of the books which a Protestant has left in the cell?—No doubt we should have to use the same machinery, but I would not at all say that it would involve only the same amount of trouble which the existing system involves. Even if it did only that, it would involve a considerable amount of difficulty, as the removal of the books would involve a double removal; the removal of the books from the cell and the removal of the books to the cell when they were replaced.

4448. Are not the Catholic books removed from the Protestant cells as a mere matter of routine?—It is a matter of routine, but one requiring care.

4449. Is it in order that the Protestant prisoner may not come into contact with the Catholic books?—It is to confine the use of the Roman Catholic books to the Catholic prisoners.

4450. Mr. Synan.] Your Lordship has stated the inconveniences to which these prisoners are subjected as a misfortune arising from their being a small minority; does not that principle apply out of the prison to the Catholics of England as well as in the prison?—I submit that that is rather a large question, and it would take me some time to answer it.

4451. Does the fact of the Catholics of England out of prison, under the present educational system, being a small minority, impose upon them the inconvenience of remaining in a school where they receive Protestant instruction?—If the honourable Member is referring to primary education generally in the country, I must say that I think it would take me a very long time to discuss that point. I am prepared to explain anything the Committee may wish with reference to the Prisons Ministers Act, but not at this moment to embark on a discussion upon primary education.

4452. But supposing the minority out of the prison are not exposed to that inconvenience, taking that for granted, why should they be subject to that inconvenience in the prison by reason of their being a small minority?—I take it that the theory and the common sense of the question is this, that in a certain sense the persons who commit crimes and place themselves out of the protection of the law and of society, have really no claim whatever, strictly speaking, to religion, or to education, within the walls of a prison; but the State is disposed to take a more humane view of the case, and to depart from the letter of strict justice, and, as far as it can, to make provision for the reformation of those offenders, holding that that reformation may be best accomplished by religion and by education. But of course the State can only do this in a general sort of way; it cannot meet the case of every single denomination; nobody would suppose it reasonable to require that a salary should be set apart for a minister of every one of the 25 or 30 disssenting sects in England.

4453. I do not refer to the salary?—I mean, that no special provision can be made for these particular cases; you must be content to deal with it more or less in a rough and general way. Assuming that there is one religion which the State chooses to dispense, all you can do is, to lessen the hardship of those who have not the benefit of coming under that system. I do not mean to say, that there are not many utopias which might not be very much better, but I think, looking at things as they are, you must accept the system as it is, and simply try to work it.

4454. According to your Lordship's evidence, it follows from the fact of people being imprisoned, and that Government does not discharge to them the same duties they discharge to ordinary citizens, that they are subjected to these privations?—I think any minority in a country is always subject to some inconvenience.

4455. Is the object of imprisonment reform or punishment?—That, again, is a very large question, and you would find as many persons holding one view as the other.

4456. Supposing the object of imprisonment to be reformation, would not teaching of a religious and moral character, as well as what you call secular teaching, be a part of that system?—I do not think that any reasonable person will contend that the whole and sole object of a prison is the reform of the prisoners.

4457. Supposing that was the main object?—It is rather difficult to suppose it, because you ignore in that case one-half of the machinery and appliances, and in fact the raison d'être of the prison.

4458. No doubt some part of the prison discipline may be for one purpose, and some for another purpose, but is not one of the objects of imprisonment the reformation of the prisoner?—No doubt it is one of the objects.

4459. Is not religious and moral and secular teaching part of the system necessary to the attainment of that object?—No doubt; I am quite willing to admit all that.

4460. What objection could there be in such a case to introduce the Conscience Clause into the prison discipline, any more than to its introduction outside the prison?—I am afraid, as I think I have said before to my right honourable friend opposite, that it would be very difficult to introduce the Conscience Clause, and when you had got it, it would not produce the object you had in view. The class of persons in prisons is totally different from the class you have to deal with in public schools of primary education.

4461. With repect to Divine worship upon Sundays, Mr. Collingridge was asked, "Would it be any interference with the ordinary rules of the prison, or entail the employment of additional warders, if there were Divine service for the Roman Catholic prisoners once on Sunday, at a different hour from the Protestant worship;" and his answer was, "I do not see why it should be any interference;" your Lordship does not concur in that view, I believe?—I am afraid that my knowledge and experience of prison management in these respects is greater than Mr. Collingridge's, and I foresee that there would of necessity be an interference which would involve trouble and expense. That is all that I have stated, but I am perfectly clear upon that point.

4462. That

4462. That report which the visiting justices made to the court involved, first, that the religious worship for the Roman Catholics should be at the same time as for the Protestants, and, secondly, that another room should be fitted up at an additional expense; those were the two things which your report took for granted. How was it absolutely necessary, supposing there to be religious worship upon the Sunday for the Catholics, as well as for the Protestants, in the prison, that it should be held at the same time?—I do not think the honourable Member quite gathered the effect of the report. It was either that such associated worship must be at the same time, or that it must be at a different time. If it was at the same time there were certain objections to it, and if it was at a different time there were certain other objections.

4463. But of course it did not follow that the Catholic religious worship should be at the same time as the Protestant?—If the religious worship for Roman Catholic prisoners was to be at the same time, then clearly you must have a second room; but if at different times, then there were other difficulties which were stated.

4464. What number of the court do the visiting justices form?—The court is composed, I suppose, of over 100 members; from 100 to 150.

4465. And how many are the visiting justices?—The visiting justices are nine.

4466. I thought your Lordship stated, in reply to the Right honourable Baronet, that the court did substantially act upon that report; do you think that the court is open now to consider the matter upon your report?—I think the court, as I stated, has decided substantially what it intends to do, and that Mr. Collingridge is fully aware of that decision by a letter which, in fact, was written to him upon the subject lately.

4467. What is the court inclined to do?—That involves simply a repetition of what I have already stated.

4468. Do you consider the court of quarter sessions open to consider the matter?—I consider the court of quarter sessions is always open to consider any matter. Of course it is competent to the court to resume the consideration of this or of any other question that may be proposed to it by any member of the court.

4469. You stated that you gave additional facilities to the Rev. Mr. Collingridge, and to his assistant?—That is so.

4470. One of those facilities was, that you said he could have Divine worship in a particular cell upon the Sunday?—No; Mr. Collingridge, as a matter of fact, has always had, as far as I am aware, power to celebrate the rites of his church in the cell of any Roman Catholic prisoner at any time. The increase in the facilities that we have given him has been, as I endeavoured to explain, of a different kind.

4471. But taking it for granted, as it is upon the Minutes already, that it is an obligation upon a Roman Catholic to attend the service of his church upon the Sunday where he can; and that that service (taking it further for granted) can be only once performed upon the Sunday, if you distribute that over 49 prisoners in different cells, they could only have service on the Sunday once a year each according to that arrangement?—I must really decline to reply to that question, there are so many assumptions in it, that I do not quite see how I can answer it.

4472. I will put it particularly; the service of the Mass, which it is obligatory upon Roman Catholics to attend, is performed by the Roman Catholic priest once upon the Sunday; consequently, if the priest is confined to a cell, that service can only be performed for one prisoner?—As a matter of fact, Mr. Collingridge has performed it for a great deal more than for one single prisoner in the day. I understand your argument to be, that each Roman Catholic prisoner now can only have the service performed for his benefit once in the course of 12 months.

4473. I am confining myself now to the service of Mass upon the Sunday, which is performed by the priest once; if he is to be confined to a single cell to perform it, only one prisoner upon the Sunday can have the advantage of that service?—All I can say in answer to that is, that at one of the great festivals lately, which must have been at Christmas, Mr. Collingridge communicated, I think, no less than from 15 to 20 prisoners in one morning.

4474. I am not talking of the Communion, I am talking of the Mass, which is a different service from the administration of the Communion to a communicant?—I am not in a position to enter into these details. We are getting into a field of religious questions.

4475. Assuming what I state to be the fact, he could communicate as many as would take the Communion even at different times, if that were the question; but taking it for granted that my question was that the service of the Mass is to be performed once upon the Sunday, and that the chaplain is to be confined to a single cell to perform it, and to see only one prisoner, does not it follow, arithmetically, that only one prisoner can have that service upon the Sunday?—Assuming all these assumptions, of course I must say yes, but at the same time I must beg entirely to hold myself free from all the inferences that may be drawn from it.

4476. Does not that render it more necessary to have Divine associated worship upon the Sunday for the Catholic prisoners?—I should not argue it myself entirely upon those grounds.

4477. Supposing it is a matter that the Catholic prisoners think obligatory upon them, ought not you to judge of it in relation to them and to its effects upon them?—I am afraid that I have given my answers to that question in other forms so very often, that it is hardly worth while to trouble the Committee with it again.

4478. The Catholic prisoners remain in the cells both on the week days, when prayers are said for the Protestant prisoners, and also on Sundays, when service is performed for the Protestant prisoners, do they not?—I believe that they are in their cells at those times.

4479. It has been stated to us by the chaplains, Mr. Collingridge and Mr. Nugent, of the Liverpool prison, that they consider this solitary confinement is a punishment even worse than the associated labour of the treadmill; do you coincide in that opinion?—If it is meant to say that a prisoner dreads this solitary confinement for one single quarter of an hour in the day during the time that the Protestants are in the chapel, more than he does the treadmill or any other form of prison punishment, I think there is some great mistake. I do not agree with that statement.

4480. Or upon the Sundays, during the hour and a half of the Divine worship of the Protestants?—I should think, looking to the class of prisoners, they would not be inclined to exchange the hours of confinement in their cell during the time of the Protestant service for an hour of the treadmill.

12 May 1870.

4481. Supposing that they felt it to be a relaxation to attend, do you not think that that would be an inducement to attend the Protestant worship upon the Sunday if they had not a service of their own?—No doubt; but if that was a strong inducement upon their minds they would declare themselves Protestants, and attend the service.

4482. Regarding the salary paid to this gentleman, you think that taking it upon the capitation principle, it is equivalent to the salary paid to the Protestant chaplain?—I said that there was no very great incongruity.

4483. There are 226 Church of England prisoners, and the salary of the chaplain is 300 l. a year?—I beg the honourable Member's pardon; when he says there are 226 members of the Church of England in the prison, I would remark that may have been taken upon a day which was favourable to the Roman Catholics, and which was exceptionally unfavourable to the Protestants. I think that the only evidence which is worth anything in such a case is an average; and I am quite satisfied that in this case the proportions of 226 to 49 are utterly unfounded as averages of the two denominations.

4484. Does your Lordship think that the average for the Church of England prisoners is higher than 226?—I should think the average is certainly higher than 226, and I am satisfied that the number of 49 for the Roman Catholics is very much above the average.

4485. The Rev. Mr. Collingridge has stated that his attendance upon the prioners has necessitated the employment of an assistant, and that he is paid by voluntary contributions?—That is very likely.

4486. Would that be any reason why a capitation tax should not be the principle upon which the salary ought to be fixed?—I must decline to give any opinion with reference to the principle upon which salaries are fixed; it is a large and a different question, and I would rather defer all answers to that upon the present occasion.

4487. Sir John Trelawny.] In the case of a regiment consisting of 800 men, 400 Catholics and 400 Protestants, you would be disposed to give equal advantages to both Catholics and Protestants, would you not?—Assuming that there were no special technical objections, with which I am not familiar, I should say upon broad grounds, that I should be desirous of giving equal advantages to each.

4488. Viscount Enfield.] Does your Lordship think that if the provisions of the Prison Ministers Act, many of which are only permissive at the present moment, were made compulsory, there would be any danger to the good management of county prisons generally?—I think that my private inclination would be rather to leave those provisions voluntary than to make them compulsory.

4489. Might I ask your Lordship why you arrive at that conclusion?—Everybody forms his opinion upon these matters more or less from his own personal observation and experience, and such observation and experience as I have had induce me to think that, upon the whole, the general spirit of the legislation has been fairly carried out; I have studied the working of prisons and of this particular branch of their administration in the Midland Counties, where these differences in the religious denominations of the prisoners are perhaps most apparent, and I have never seen, as far as I could make out, that there was any difficulty or any real injustice committed in those cases where the Roman Catholics formed a large and appreciable proportion of the prisoners. Where, upon the other hand, the numbers sink very much into the character of a fraction, in those cases it seems to me desirable to leave the matter to the good sense and the right feeling of the justices. I do not mean to say that, in occasional instances, the justices may not go wrong like everybody else, but, looking at things broadly, I should say that the Act has worked pretty fairly from what I myself have seen. Of course that is only from my own personal experience, and then I have only had the opportunity of judging from particular gaols.

4490. I think you will admit, from the mere fact of this Committee having been appointed by the House of Commons, that the Roman Catholics in England have some grievance upon the working of the Prison Ministers Act?—No doubt the appointment of this Committee implies that they think they have a grievance, and that the House of Commons was sufficiently satisfied upon that view to appoint a Committee of inquiry. The Committee will get whatever facts they can, and the more facts they can produce the better for everybody.

4491. Would it not remove the grievance if any action which was to be taken was, after due deliberation, made compulsory by Act of Parliament, and not left to the visiting justices, although they might act with the best and most liberal notions?—I have no very strong objections of principle to making the Act obligatory, provided that the practical objections which may crop up in the course of the discussion are not greater than the advantages which you hope to secure from compulsion.

4492. I think the practical objections would simply be with regard to making certain alterations as to the warders, and granting to the Roman Catholic chaplain a fair stipend for his services?—I hardly know how you could lay down principles in an Act of Parliament which should fix the stipend of the minister.

4493. You might take it upon a capitation grant?—Will you not have to take the same figures in all cases? If you had to deal with some of the large prisons, such as Liverpool, where you have 600 Roman Catholic prisoners, and you place the capitation grant at 1 l. per head the Roman Catholic priest would become entitled to 600 l. a year; whereas, if you put it at 10 s. a head, in Hampshire, for example, we should pay him 20 l. instead of 40 l.

4494. But I think I gather that, speaking from your experience, you would have no objection to see the Act made compulsory, instead of voluntary, as it is at present?—I would rather put it in this way, that I should entertain no objection to fairly considering and discussing the question.

4495. Mr. Guest.] Is it not the case that in the Hants county prison most of the Roman Catholic prisoners do not belong to the county proper?—Certainly. A very large majority of the Roman Catholic prisoners in our prison would have to be assigned to the army and navy, and and to Irish tramps, many of whom are under very short sentences.

4496. Does not the county of Hants charge the expense of the maintenance of prisoners from the army and navy to the Government?—We get our Government quota, like everybody else.

4497. If I rightly understand you, the county is allowed to charge the expense of the maintenance of those prisoners to Government; and then you stated that if the Roman Catholic prisoners were allowed to have a service in the gaol it would be necessary to increase the staff; I want to ask you whether that would not be an inducement to the county to refuse the reception of those army and navy prisoners?—No, I think not; there are other considerations which come in.

4498. With regard to that portion of the evidence of Mr. Collingridge, in which he mentions the case of a certain Peter Crim, was that case brought under your notice as a visiting justice?—I saw that there had been a reference to it. I think the case came before me, but I have forgotten the details; at all events, they are not sufficiently fresh in my mind to enable me to speak about them.

4499. Mr. Collingridge published the whole of the correspondence between himself and the visiting justices?—That was a correspondence which passed between myself and my predecessor, Lord Henry Cholmondeley, many years ago. I will not say who was right or who was wrong; but I will only say that a good many of Mr. Collingridge's facts were impugned. But since then so great a change has taken place generally in the whole system of management, that it probably would not apply to anything which now exists.

4500. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] I think you told the Committee that your only reason against granting associated religious worship to the Roman Catholic prisoners, was upon the ground of increase of expense and possible confusion of the gaol arrangements?—What I meant to explain was, that the main and substantial objections, as it seemed to me, consisted in the expense of first providing a room; and, secondly, in the incidental expenses which would arise from an increase in the staff.

4501. Speaking of the grievances which the Roman Catholic prisoners allege themselves to feel, do you not think that if it were known to the Roman Catholic body that, in a prison similar to yours, such, for instance, as the Kent County Prison, associated worship for the Roman Catholic prisoners was permitted, without injuring the discipline of the prison, they might feel it a hardship that, in a prison such as yours, where there were a similar number of prisoners, no such arrangement was attempted to be made?—There are disciplines and disciplines, and that which is comparatively easy in one prison, is much less so in another. There has never been any indisposition on the part of the visiting justices in Hants to consider this matter. The difficulty on the whole of granting associated worship has seemed to them to be considerable; but they have referred the whole matter, as I stated to the Committee, very much to the court.

4502. If the discipline could be so regulated, and provisions inserted in the Act of Parliament which would ensure equal dealing with the Roman Catholic prisoners in all prisons, do you not think that that would be a public advantage?—Probably, if all the conditions which you have stated and implied were fulfilled. It would, of course, be satisfactory that anything which is a grievance in the mind of a very large and powerful body should be removed.

4503. And with regard to the ultimate reformation of prisoners, do you not think that that would be more likely to be effected in the case of prisoners of any denomination if they found themselves treated upon terms of equality with those of other denominations, while the contrary might be the case under the reverse circumstances?—I think that that is assuming too high a standard of thought and mind in the class of prisoners who come into our gaols.

4504. With regard to the difficulty which your Lordship stated about inserting provisions for the salary in the Act of Parliament, would it not be possible to get over that difficulty by inserting the minimum and maximum salary; to say that no more than a certain amount should be given if a certain number were confined in the prison, and that no less than a certain sum should be given for a certain larger number?—I merely stated that, as one of the objections which were lying, as it were, upon the surface.

4505. With regard to the books, you told the Committee that you had an average of 41 or 43 Roman Catholic prisoners in your prison; would it be impossible to appropriate a certain number of cells entirely to the Roman Catholic prisoners in which it should not be necessary to have the Protestant books placed?—It would be quite impossible under our system.

4506. Is there no separation in your prison between Protestant and Roman Catholic prisoners?—No local separation.

4507. I suppose you could not give the Committee the details of the arrangement which would render it impossible?—The different classes are allocated in certain adjoining cells and corridors, and we have always considered it to be a principle, which by the way, was indorsed most strongly by so high an authority as Sir Walter Crofton, and a principle of the very first moment, that that local classification should be preserved. With a system of classes and marks such as ours, if you strike out the element of local arrangement, you run, as I have found by experience, very great danger of confusion of all sorts and kinds.

4508. That is to say, to put it in few words, the classification being according to the length of time a prisoner has been in the prison, a religious classification would be impossible?—You would have cross divisions, which would be very inconvenient.

4509. I think I may take it, that according to the report which your Lordship read of the visiting justices, they have never specially recommended the court to grant the request of Father Collingridge about associated worship?—They have not.

4510. Is it probable that any court of quarter sessions would grant any such request if, having been previously preferred to the visiting justices, it was not recommended by them?—I am not prepared to say what would be the action of the court in such a case.

4511. Is it the habit of the court of quarter sessions in Hampshire generally to defer to the opinion of the visiting justices, and adopt the reports which they present from the gaol?—I have found them personally to myself extremely considerate, and disposed to accept any reasoning that I might offer; but I defeated my predecessor on a question of prison discipline, and carried the court with me, therefore I think it shows that the court does not always go with the visiting justices of the time.

4512. Do you think that, without the interference of Parliament, there is any probability of the prison authorities of your prison giving further concessions to the Roman Catholics?—I think that the court are disposed to give all concessions which seem to them reasonable in themselves, or that may be required by the lapse of time and the change of circumstances; and I have no reason whatever for thinking that they would refuse anything which seemed to them right.

4513. Do you think that the salary should be apportioned, rather with respect to the time the prison minister has to employ in the prison, than to the actual number of the prisoners of his persuasion who may be confined therein?—The two questions seem to run into one another very much. Of course if there are a very large number of Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison the time he ought to devote to them would be so much larger. It is difficult to lay down any abstract principle upon that subject; probably it will be fairest to adjust the salary with reference to the two considerations. Of course the difficulty is to lay down a rule uniformly for all gaols, which may vary very largely indeed in their individual details.

4514. We have been told very often in the course of the proceedings of this Committee, that the Roman Catholic prisoners require from their priest more special and frequent individual instruction than the Protestant prisoners?—I have heard that complaint made, but I have been at a loss to understand it. I do not see why one should require more instruction than the other.

4515. The Rev. Mr. Collingridge informed us that he believed that one reason why the justices had proposed that a salary should be given was, that they should be able to say that they had done so. I presume I may take it that that is not admitted by the justices?—I think it was a most unfounded assertion, and without one particle of justice in it.

4516. Viscount Enfield.] You stated that you had had a good deal of experience in the Midland Counties; what prisons did you refer to?—I must have misled my noble friend if I used those words; what I meant was, not that I had any experience in the administration of those prisons, but simply that it had been my practice to visit a great many prisons there, and to inquire into the manner and principles upon which they are administered.

4517. Not as a visiting justice?—Not as a visiting justice.

4518. Mr. Fowler.] Your knowledge as a visiting justice would be confined to Hants, would it not?—My knowledge would be confined to Hants.

4519. Mr. Matthews.] Have you fixed any number of prisoners in your mind as the number at which the privilege of associated worship might begin?—I am not prepared to name any actual figure.

The Rev. Charles Eyre, called in; and Examined.

Rev. C. Eyre.

4520. Chairman.] You reside in Wakefield, in Yorkshire, do you not?—I do.

4521. How long have you been connected with the prison in that town?—I was for about six months a substitute for the late Roman Catholic prison minister, and after that I was appointed in October 1869 to succeed the late chaplain.

4522. In what respect were you appointed?—As the prison minister.

4523. Is that the title you receive?—That is the title according to the Act of Parliament. I am sometimes addressed by that title, and at other times as the Roman Catholic chaplain.

4524. You were appointed in October 1869; by whom were you appointed?—By the board of quarter sessions, in October 1869.

4525. What is the average number of Catholic prisoners in that gaol?—I believe the average number at present would be about 250. According to the last returns sent up to Parliament in July, there were 328, but the number fluctuates very much; sometimes 20 or 30, or 40 prisoners, Catholics and Protestants, go in or leave the prison in one day.

4526. Do you happen to receive prisoners from other districts and gaols?—Not from other gaols, except the lock-ups of the towns; this is the West Riding House of Correction.

4527. Have you had any from Middlesex?—Yes, we have had some; about 240, I think. Some of them have left; 75 left a short time ago for Hull, and others are to leave as their time finishes.

4528. What are the hours that you attend on week days and Sundays, and what is the nature of your duties on those days?—On week days I have service from eight to nine o'clock, counting the time the prisoners take to go into the chapel and to leave it.

4529. What do you mean by service?—The service consists of morning prayers and a chapter from the Bible to begin with, and religious instruction and exhortation during the rest of the time.

4530. Is that in the chapel?—Yes.

4531. What chapel is that; is that specially the Catholic chapel, or is it common to both denominations?—It is the chapel that is used by the Protestant female prisoners, and by the male and female Catholic prisoners.

4532. The women are, of course, in a different part of the building?—The women are in a gallery at the end of the chapel.

4533. You do not live in the prison, do you?—I do not. I have a list of the prisoners under punishment given to me every day, and I visit them first, and then I visit the hospitals, and then others who are very ignorant about their religion, who, perhaps, do not know a prayer or have any idea of God; or, in fact, any idea at all with regard to religious matters.

4534. Do you visit those prisoners in their cells?—Yes; I have keys of the cells of the large prison; there are four prisons altogether.

4535. You have free access to the Catholic prisoners, have you not?—Yes, free access; I go whenever I like.

4536. You have free access to those prisoners whether they are under punishment or otherwise?—Yes, at any time of the day.

4537. What

4537. What duties do you perform on Sundays?—On Sundays we have Divine service for an hour and a half.

4538. Have you a second service on Sundays?—No, we have only one service.

4539. Is there only one Protestant service upon the Sunday?—That is all; I omitted to state that, during the week, we have a service for the Catholics just the same length of time as for the Protestants. The prisoners have morning prayers or religious service, whatever we may call it, in the morning every other day, in this way, that one day the women and part of the men attend, and the other day the men in another prison; that is, speaking of the Catholics.

4540. Then there is no inequality between the service of the Catholics and of the Protestants on week days?—None whatever.

4541. In that respect there is perfect fairness shown to you?—Yes.

4542. You spoke with reference to the ignorance of the prisoners; will you just say what class they are composed of?—They are principally of the poor labouring class, men who have never any fixed abode; they work sometimes in one town and sometimes in another.

4543. I believe the town of Wakefield contributes very few prisoners to the gaol?—Very few.

4544. You visit the prisoners under punishment not only in the ordinary cells but in the dark cells, do you not?—Yes.

4545. Is the visit of the Catholic clergyman of importance to a man who is under confinement in a dark cell?—Yes; because the state of the man's mind at that time is disturbed. Very often the punishment has such an effect upon him (sometimes being confined with what we call the sleeves, namely, a jacket with the sleeves strapped in), that it is found necessary to give notice to the chaplain and to the doctor of the punishment which is inflicted upon him for some prison offence.

4546. For serious prison offences, a man is confined in a dark cell, is he not?—He is.

4547. And is he in such a state of mind generally, when suffering from that punishment, that the visit of the clergyman is of very great importance to him?—Yes, it is of very great importance to the prisoner; and the priest is expected frequently to visit such prisoners under that punishment.

4548. You have stated that there is one Protestant service upon the Sunday, and one Catholic service; supposing there was only a Protestant service, and no Catholic service, do you think from your knowledge of Catholic prisoners that they would be inclined to attend the Protestant service?—Yes, I think so; because the solitude during the Sunday, when they are not able to work, is so oppressive, especially for those who are not able to read, that it would be a great temptation to them, and a great inducement to attend.

4549. Is it not a serious obligation upon Catholics outside the prison, to attend religious worship upon the Sunday?—Certainly, a most serious obligation.

4550. And is it not one which, as a rule, is observed by nearly all persons within the pale of the church?—Yes, all those who really observe the laws of the church.

4551. Is it an obligation?—It is one of the strictest obligations.

4552. It is one of the strictest obligations imposed upon a Catholic?—It is.

4553. And one which he cannot ignore, unless he ceases practically to be a member of the church?—That is so.

4554. Do you think then that the deprivation of the facility of attending his worship on the Sunday is a very serious grievance to a Catholic?—Yes, a very serious grievance.

4555. Are you on very good terms with all the officers of the prison?—Upon most excellent terms.

4556. With the chaplains?—With the chaplains we work harmoniously together, and assist each other.

4557. And never interfere with each other's duty?—Never; I do not see that any interference can be complained of, and there is no difficulty in avoiding any interference.

4558. In fact none exists; there is the most perfect harmony between you and all the other officers of the prison?—Yes.

4559. Is the fact that you are a recognised officer of the prison, of great use to you in your ministrations?—I should say that it is of very great use, because if it were otherwise, it might render my work with the prisoners somewhat difficult; as an example, if a Catholic prisoner, when he asked to see me, were to receive a sneering answer, or anything of that kind, it would deter him from asking again.

4560. Supposing there was no regular chaplain, and supposing the prisoners had only the right to see the clergyman when they specially asked for him; do you think that they might be deterred from making such application by the manner and tone of the officer?—Yes, I think so.

4561. Whereas, on the other hand, when the Roman Catholic chaplain is a regular officer of the prison he has a right to see them, and there is no interference whatever?—Having power from the magistrates, from his position to see the prisoners according to the regulations of the prison, the officers and others have simply got to obey, and they never attempt to make any difficulty at all.

4562. You have no complaint whatever to make, either of the officers or magistrates, or chaplains, or any persons connected with the prison?—I have had no complaint at all to make since I have been in the prison.

4563. What is the salary you receive?—£.150.

4564. Do you think, from your own experience, that there is a fair proportion of the prisoners open to religious influence, and therefore susceptible of improvement?—Yes; I should think that there are about two-thirds of them. Of course there is a certain number whom it is impossible to reform.

4565. Has it come to your knowledge that men who have been in prison have been improved in consequence of a Catholic clergyman being there?—We have had very many examples of such men who have been frequently in prison before, and who have certainly not come back again, but who have changed their course of life from the advice and direction which they have received in prison.

4566. From the fact of their not having come back again, you regard that as a sign of improvement?—Some, I know, have been improved by it; and, with regard to the others that I do not see again, I conclude they are doing better.

Rev. C. Eyre.

12 May 1870.

4567. Did you ever know of a Dissenter objecting, in any way, to receiving the visits of a Protestant clergyman, or to going to the Church-of-England worship?—I never heard of such a case amongst prisoners, because I never speak to the Protestant prisoners; but the feeling I observe outside the prison is, that it makes little or no difference.

4568. In that respect they differ altogether from the Catholics, do they not?—Perfectly.

4569. There can be no analogy drawn between them in that respect?—Not the slightest.

4570. A Catholic cannot, I may say, without practical apostacy, go to the worship of another faith?—Certainly not.

4571. Whereas a Dissenter may be married in an Established Church and attend the Church of England worship without any sacrifice of principle?—That is so.

4572. Mr. Matthews.] Did I then rightly understand you to say that you had free access to all the cells with a key of your own?—In the new prison, where about 800 prisoners are kept, I have the key of the cells; but of the women's prison, and of another prison called the E prison, where the men work out in the various mat making and other occupations, I have not the key. I might have one if I asked for one.

4573. In that prison, where you have the key of the cells, do you see the prisoners without the presence of a warder?—Yes, I go in and out whenever I like.

4574. And you have heard no complaints from the visiting justices of any inconvenience?—Not the least.

4575. Mr. Fowler.] Is your time exclusively taken up with your duties to the prison?—Exclusively.

4576. You have no other charge?—I have no other charge; I may help or do a little to assist others, but that is merely voluntary work.

4577. That is your sole duty there?—That is so.

JOHN FRANCIS MAGUIRE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain JAMES ANTHONY GARDNER, called in; and Examined.

Captain J. A. Gardner.

16 May 1870.

4578. Chairman.] WHAT position do you hold in Bristol?—I am Governor of the common gaol for the City and County of Bristol.

4579. There are two gaols in Bristol, are there not?—There is the Bridewell and mine, which is the gaol for the City and County of Bristol.

4580. How long have you been governor of that gaol?—For the last 32 years.

4581. What is the number of Catholic prisoners at this moment in the gaol?—Six.

4582. What has been the number for the last 12 months?—We have seldom had more than three or four.

4583. Have you ever had a larger number than six Catholic prisoners?—I do not think I have; I have looked particularly at the register, which I have with me now.

4584. You have never had more than six at a time?—I should not like to say that we have not, but I believe we have not had more than three or four usually.

4585. Under what circumstances does the Catholic clergyman visit your prison?—Whenever he is sent for at the request of a prisoner.

4586. You do not allow him to visit at any other time?—We should not refuse him if he came.

4587. What is the rule?—According to the rule, the Catholic ministers must be permitted.

4588. Do you mean that they must be permitted by the justices?—They must be permitted under the 47th Rule of the Prisons Act.

4589. You mean that they must be recognised by permission to come to the prison?—Exactly so. I have the rule, which is as follows: "If any prisoner is of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church, and no minister has been appointed to attend at the prison on prisoners of that persuasion, the visiting justices shall permit a minister of such persuasion, to be approved of by them, to visit such prisoner, at proper and reasonable times, under such restrictions as may be imposed by the visiting justices, to guard against the introduction of improper persons, and prevent improper communications, unless such prisoner expressly objects to see such minister."

4590. Do you read that as meaning on the special application of a prisoner?—No; I should admit the Roman Catholic priest without his being "permitted," but I should take the advice of the visiting justices if it occurred frequently for any length of time.

4591. Did you ever tell the Catholic clergyman that he would be allowed to visit the gaol at other times than when he was specially sent for?—No.

4592. Why did you not inform him that he might attend if you thought that the clergyman might be permitted to visit the gaol at other times than when he was sent for?—I did not consider it to be my duty to do so; many other Roman Catholic clergymen have been admitted from time to time without any trouble, and if Mr. Myers had come to me 20 times following, he would have been admitted.

4593. Has any other Roman Catholic clergyman visited the prison during the time that Mr. Myers has been there?—Yes, several have; I think four.

4594. Has that been so of late?—Not of late years.

4595. Of late years Mr. Myers has been the clergyman who has visited the prison, has he not?—He has come either three or four times to the gaol in four years, but I would add, that he never visited a prisoner a second time. He might have come in as often as he liked to see one prisoner.

4596. Do you mean that he was never sent for twice?—We never sent for him twice for the same prisoner, but he could come as often as he liked.

4597. Did you inform him that after he had come to see a prisoner he might come afterwards as often as he liked?—No; I did not think that it was my duty; we thought that when he had seen a prisoner once he would consider that prisoner as being handed over to him; and I may say that it was a disappointment to us that he did not come oftener.

4598. Did you inform Mr. Myers that he had permission to visit a second or a third time without special invitation?—We did not.

4599. Do you think it is possible that he might not have known that he had that permission when he had no such intimation made to him?—I should have thought myself that he must have known it from the fact of his having been sent for once.

4600. Might not you reason thus, that from the fact of his having been sent for once, and not having gone a second time to see the prisoner, he might be under the idea that he had no right or privilege to go when he pleased?—I should have thought he must have known that he would have been admitted.

Captain J. A. Gardner.
16 May 1870.

4601. But was any intimation given to him that he had the power of making a second visit?—No; we do not speak to our chaplain in that sort of way; we have an idea that every one ought to know the rules of the gaol, and that when he had been there once he might come as often as he liked.

4602. Of course you do not recognise Mr. Myers as the chaplain?—We do not.

4603. Is there any rule authorising a Catholic priest to make a second visit, although he has not been specially sent for?—There is no rule at all with reference to that.

4604. Then how is it that you imagined that the Catholic priest ought to know the rule if the rule did not exist?—I should expect that if I sent once for a surgeon when I was ill, he ought to continue to visit me until I was well.

4605. Do you think there is any analogy between the case of a surgeon visiting a patient and the case of a Catholic priest visiting a prisoner?—I should think that Mr. Myers must have known that he could visit the prison more frequently.

4606. I think you stated to the Committee that there are six Catholic prisoners in the gaol at the present moment?—There are.

4607. How many Protestant prisoners are there?—We may have at the present time about 122.

4608. How many Dissenters have you, or do the Dissenters enter as Protestants?—The greater proportion of the prisoners, about nine-tenths, are Church of England prisoners; there is no doubt about it.

4609. Do the Dissenters generally enter themselves as Dissenters, or as members of the Church of England?—As Dissenters, whatever they may be. This is their book (producing the same); the Roman Catholics are marked in red ink.

4610. Now with reference to the Dissenters; first of all, what service have you on Sunday?—We have two services, one for males and the other for females.

4611. Is that service attended by the Dissenters?—Yes it is.

4612. Have they any objection to go to the Protestant service?—None.

4613. Do they ever express any objection?—I never knew of an objection being expressed.

4614. Do they ever object to receive the visits of a Protestant clergyman?—The Dissenters have never made the slightest objection.

4615. Do the Dissenters attend regularly as a matter of course upon the Sunday?—They do.

4616. Have they ever asked for a clergyman of their own persuasion?—They have upon one or two occasions.

4617. Then it is very rarely that they have asked for a clergyman of their own persuasion?—They have done so.

4618. What course have you taken in consequence of that application?—I have sent for a minister of that persuasion.

4619. Did they persevere in requesting the services of that clergyman?—No.

4620. Then I may take it that with these very rare exceptions, the Dissenters are quite content with the ministrations of the Protestant clergyman, and are quite content to go to the Protestant service upon the Sunday?—They are.

4621. With reference to the Catholic prisoners, do they attend the Protestant service on Sunday?—Some of them do, and some of them do not.

4622. Will you tell the Committee what proportion of those six Catholic prisoners that are now in the gaol do?—There are four, I think, who do not attend the service.

4623. And two who do?—I am not quite sure about that; I have only brought up the return out of two wards, to show you the impossibility of Roman Catholic prisoners being forced to attend our chapel against their inclination.

4624. Do they go voluntarily?—They do; there is one man named John Lloyd, an untried prisoner, who is reported as absent from chapel, because he is a Roman Catholic. There is another in the No. 9 Ward, who is reported as being at chapel.

4625. The fact is that a certain number go to chapel, and a certain number do not go to chapel?—That is so.

4626. Has it been the case with the Catholic prisoners during the last half dozen years that a certain number have gone and a certain number have not?—Yes, I should say that the greater number have gone, even after our telling them that they could see a priest of their own persuasion. One of those prisoners is in the gaol at the present time.

4627. Where are those Catholic prisoners who do not attend service upon the Sunday, while the service is going on?—They are in their cells, with a warder in the corridor, as though the whole prison was locked up; they are in the cells with their own books.

4628. What did you mean by saying that you told them that they could see their own clergyman if they did not wish to go to the Protestant service; will you apply your observations to the Sunday?—There is a man in the gaol at the present time for three months; I have known him for a very long time, as he has been in the gaol before, and a fortnight or three weeks ago (before I knew about this evidence) I asked him whether he would not prefer to see the priest, and he said, "No; I am perfectly willing to go to the chapel; I have entered myself as a Roman Catholic, and perhaps I am one, but I do not care where I go to."

4629. If you had had Catholic worship in the gaol, do you think he would have gone to it?—Not that one man.

4630. Do you give him as a typical case, or as an exceptional case?—I give him as an exceptional case, but there is another man at the present time whose case I can mention.

4631. Did Lloyd know that there was no Catholic service upon the Sunday?—He knew it perfectly well.

4632. What did you mean by telling him that he could see a Catholic clergyman; when could he have seen him?—Whenever he thought proper; I am not bound to tell a prisoner that, but I do so for their advantage; I have put words into their mouths and have told them that they could see the Catholic priest if they wished, but they have not accepted him.

4633. Is it permitted to the Catholic clergyman to hold worship on the Sunday in your gaol?—I should not allow him to do so unless the magistrates sanctioned it.

4634. At any rate the magistrates do not sanction it?—They have never been asked to do so.

4635. From your knowledge of the magistrates do do you think if that application were made, it would be assented to?—Certainly I do.

4636. You think that if there is any application made in future, there will be no difficulty in getting it acceded to?—I think with our magistrates you would find there was no difficulty; that is my opinion, and I venture to express it; I am certain of that from their always having done all they could to further the views of one person and another; I know they would not object to anything of the sort.

4637. To what statements in the evidence before the Committee do you object?—I object to nearly the whole of the evidence of the Rev. Mr. Myers.

4638. He is the clergyman who has attended the gaol for some time past?—Yes.

4639. Will you state to the Committee your objections to his evidence, taking them one by one?—My first objection is to his answer to Question 2929. In the first place, Mr. Myers has confounded the Bristol bridewell with the common gaol of the city and county of Bristol; therefore, I will put the matter right by saying that the gaol referred to is not the city bridewell, but the common gaol and house of correction for the city and county of Bristol, of which I am the governor, and have been for the last 32 years. That error, no doubt, arises from the fact that in the official return the names of the two prisons are misplaced, the figures under the head of "City Bridewell" referring to the "House of Correction," and vice versâ. My next objection is to his answer to Question 2940.

4640. The witness is asked "Is it" (that is, the creed register) "furnished to you when you go to the prison;" and the answer is "No;" what do you say as to that?—My clerk offered to furnish any information, but refused access to the register, the Rev. Mr. Myers not being an officially appointed or permanent visitor to the gaol; that is my answer to that.

4641. At any rate, Mr. Myers was not furnished with a list?—No, he was not.

4642. What is your next objection? — My next objection is to his answer to Question 2941.

4643. He is asked, "Do you think, by law, that you, as the permitted priest, ought to see it;" he says, "I did not think so;" what objection do you make to that?—Mr. Myers was not entitled to see the register according to Rule 47 of the Prisons Act.

4644. Mr. O'Reilly.] You seem to agree with him in that view?—He was never permitted or appointed, or we should have been only too pleased to allow him to see the list.

4645. Chairman.] What is your next point?—Question 2942. The question is, "First let me ask you, does any Catholic clergyman ever visit the prisoners in the gaol;" and he says "No." I say that other Roman Catholic clergymen have done so.

4646. Since when?—For years past.

4647. Within the last three years have other clergymen attended the prison?—Yes.

4648. Have they done so within the last 2½ years?—I could not tell the Committee that. If you will permit me, I will read this statement that I have prepared, and you will be satisfied, I think, upon that point. I know we have had three or four Catholic clergymen visiting the gaol, but I could not say when the last occasion was; it is not so very long ago.

4649. Have they visited within the last two years?—I should say not.

4650. What is the next point that you object to?—In Question 2943, Mr. Myers is asked, "So that, in the case of a prisoner requiring the assistance of a clergyman, you are the Catholic priest sent for?" the answer is, "Yes, the prison comes within my district by arrangement made between the Catholic clergymen. When I took the district I wrote to the governor of the prison, requesting that if there were any sick calls to the prison, he would address them to the Rev. F. Myers, St. Joseph's."

4651. Have you any reason to deny the accuracy of that statement?—I deny ever having received any letter from him in my life; certainly I have not. If I had received such a letter I should have sent a reply, and the reverend gentleman would have had it.

4652. Is it not possible that the reverend gentleman might have sent the letter, imagining that it would reach your hands, and it did not?—It would certainly reach my hands if it came to the gaol, and if it had miscarried it would have been returned to him through the post.

4653. Is it not possible that the letter might have miscarried altogether?—At any rate I never heard of it, and I have not had the letter.

4654. Have you any reason to say that that gentleman stated that which was not the fact?—I should be very sorry to accuse any gentleman of doing so.

4655. You simply say that you did not receive the letter?—I did not receive the letter. I never saw his handwriting.

4656. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Have you ever, when a prisoner wished to see a Catholic clergyman, addressed a letter to Mr. Myers?—My clerk has.

4657. Why did he address it to Mr. Myers?—Because he is the nearest clergyman. We have written to other clergymen and brought them to the gaol.

4658. Had not your clerk some communication, on your behalf, with the Rev. Mr. Myers, which caused him to address those letters to him?—None at all.

4659. Chairman.] Will you state your next objection?—It occurs at Question 2944. Mr. Myers is asked: "Do you think that that" (the 4th Section of the Prisons Act) "would confer the right upon you (you being the clergyman permitted to visit that prison) to obtain from the authorities of the prison a list of the prisoners of your denomination;" and the answer is, "I suppose so, but I did not read it in that way; I did not understand that so." As regards that, I should say that I offered to furnish Mr. Myers with a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners, but have never considered him as officially appointed to visit the prison.

4660. Mr. O'Reilly.] What part of Mr. Myers' answer do you object to; do you deny that he did not read it in the way he states?—I certainly offered to furnish him with a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners.

4661. Chairman.] Did you say that your clerk did not give it him?—The clerk did not.

4662. You afterwards did it?—We did not give him a list; we offered him one, but he has never called for it.

4663. What is your next objection?—To No. 2947.

4664. This is the case of visiting a man named Dwyer.

Captain J.A. Gardner.

16 May 1870.

Dwyer. Mr. Myers is asked: "Would you tell the Committee the circumstances under which you visited that man. The answer is: "The mother came to me and told me that her son was dying of typhus fever, and that she had been sent for, and that she had asked for a priest to be sent for;" what objection do you make to that? —Directly it was ascertained that the prisoner was in a dangerous state, and suffering from gastric (not typhus) fever, his mother was sent for to visit him, and the Rev. Mr. Myers was also written to the same evening.

4665. Have you a copy of that letter?—No; we do not keep copies of such letters.

4666. It was the same evening that you found he was in a dangerous condition?—Yes.

4667. The answer to 2948 is: "The mother is a Catholic. Then the day after that I received a notice from the clerk, requesting me to go to the gaol and visit the prisoner, Thomas Dwyer. I went the same day that I received the letter, and I found the prisoner in the infirmary; he was delirious; he could make no recognition whatever; he could not speak a word, so that I could do nothing whatever for him;" do you agree with that?— That is correct. On the 17th of September the prisoner complained of debility, and was removed to the infirmary, not being considered sufficiently unwell to require removal before. He died of gastric fever on the 26th of September 1867.

4668. Is it the fact that he was delirious when the clergyman came to him?—Yes, and when the mother was there.

4669. Was it the fact that the clergyman came, as he says, upon the day that that letter was written to him by the clerk?—Yes; the delirium came on so very suddenly.

4670. But is it the fact that the case was serious before the delirium supervened?—No.

4671. Would you tell the Committee when he was first taken ill?—I have the surgeon's journal here; it appears that he was committed on 13th February 1867; he was a summary convict; he was removed to the infirmary on the 17th of September, and died on the 26th September 1867.

4672. You say that the prisoner was taken ill on the 17th of the month?—No, I do not know when he was taken ill; this is merely a register of when he was committed, and the day of his death.

4673. Do you know what day the priest visited him, and when the man died afterwards?—This is an extract from our chaplain's journal, under the date of Tuesday, 24th September: "Dwyer in the infirmary, still unconscious, and visited yesterday by desire of his friends by the Roman Catholic priest."

4674. That was on the Tuesday when he was unconscious?—He was. It says that he was "visited yesterday;" that entry was made on the 24th, so that he must have been visited on the 23rd.

4675. He was delirious on the Monday?—Yes.

4676. And unconscious on the 24th?—Yes.

4677. Why was not the clergyman sent for on the 22nd?—The 22nd was on the Sunday; Mr. Myers says that he visited him on the Saturday, but this entry shows that he did not visit him until the Monday.

4678. Why did he visit him upon the Saturday, as he says he did in his evidence; had he been invited to visit him on the Saturday?—He did not visit him upon the Saturday; the date of his visit was Monday, 23rd September 1867; he did not come to see him again; Dwyer died on Thursday, 26th September 1867.

4679. Was he not delirious when Mr. Myers called upon the Monday?—Quite so.

4680. That was when he was sent for?—Yes.

4681. Have you anything more to say in reference to the case of Dwyer?—Nothing more than this, I have said first of all, that the Roman Catholic prisoners know that they may see a minister of their own persuasion if they wish. I had many conversations with Dwyer between the 13th February, the date of his committal, and 26th September, the day on which he died, during which period he never made any request to be visited by a Roman Catholic priest. The prisoner was delirious when his mother visited him, and was consequently unable to do or say as was described by the mother to the Rev. Mr. Myers.

4682. What occurrence are you referring to?—That which Mr. Myers describes in 2950; he says, that when the mother went into the prisoner's room, he sat up in bed and clasped her round the neck, and said, "Oh mother, why did you not send for the priest?" The chief warder, who was present at the time of the visit, states that nothing of the kind occurred. Then again, I may say that I never saw the mother until after the prisoner's death, and consequently could not have made use of the expression, "Very well, woman, you shall have what you wish." It is an expression that was never made use of by me. I should never speak like that to any one. The day after the prisoner's death, the mother being a poor woman, I gave her 2 l. 2 s. towards defraying the funeral expenses. I just state that, because it is the fact, and the Rev. Mr. Myers knew it.

4683. Was Dwyer one of those who attended the Protestant service on the Sunday?—Never.

4684. What is your next point?—Question 2951 is, "Was it the governor or a warder who said that?" And the answer is, "The governor was present." I have only to say that I was not present.

4685. You recognise the fact that the clergyman merely states what the mother told him?—I quite understand that. My next point is, with regard to the case of Mary Sullivan, commencing at 2956. The person referred to as "Mary Sullivan" was Mary Hennesey, and not Mary Sullivan at all. She was committed on 3rd, January 1868, in a bad state of health, suffering from complicated liver disease. She signed the usual paper (which I have in my possession), declaring her persuasion to be that of a Baptist; but, thinking it possible from her having given an Irish name, and being quite a stranger to us, that she might have told a story as to her religion, as the Rev. F. Myers happened to be on the premises, I requested him to visit her, merely to ascertain whether she was a Roman Catholic or not. Mr. Myers did so, and we were afterwards thoroughly convinced that she had entered her persuasion correctly, from the fact of her saying that she was not a Roman Catholic, and refusing to see the priest again. She said, "I have entered my name as a Baptist and I am a Baptist, and I refuse to see the Catholic priest again." I told Mr. Myers that before he left the prison. In addition to that, that, I would say that I believe she was certainly a Baptist, and I have her name here registered as a Baptist on the day of her admission. Mr. Myers' evidence says that she died while he was on the premises. She did not die until 10 o'clock at night, and it was between two and three when Mr. Myers was speaking to me upon the premises.

4686. You are speaking of a person named Mary Hennesey, and Mr. Myers was speaking of a person named Mary Sullivan?—Mr. Myers has made a mistake there, just the same as he did about the gaol and the bridewell.

4687. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Did she ever recover consciousness after Mr. Myers saw her?—Yes; up to within a few minutes of her death. I saw that myself.

4688. And she stated that she was a Baptist?—She did.

4689. Did you ever tell Mr. Myers that this woman, whatever her name was, was dead?—I did not.

4690. You had no conversation with him about it?—No; it did not concern him, as she was not a Roman Catholic. I have only seen him once since, to speak to.

4691. You are perfectly certain that it is the same woman, only that the name was wrongly given by Mr. Myers?—I am quite certain it is the same.

4692. Chairman.] What is your next point?—I object to No. 2958; the Witness is asked: "Is it the fact that when you did see any prisoners who were dangerously ill, they were actually in their last moments?" and the answer is, "This is just an example." Now, I say that I am not aware of other cases of which this might be taken as an example. The boy Morse, whom the Rev. Mr. Myers on this occasion came specially to visit at the request of the boy's mother, was in perfect health, and was a Wesleyan, and his father was also a Wesleyan.

4693. The clergyman did not say that he saw him or gave him any instruction?—No, the boy refused to see him. His mother called, I think, upon the Catholic clergyman and requested him to go and visit her son; upon which I asked the boy, knowing that he was a Wesleyan, whether he would like to see the Roman Catholic priest, and he declared that he would not see him.

4694. But there is nothing in the evidence of Mr. Myers to show that he treated him as one of his persuasion?—No; but Mr. Myers said that I never sent for him to visit a prisoner, except in the last stage of life, while, during the whole time that he has visited the gaol we have only had one death, and this boy he alludes to is alive now. We have only had three deaths amongst the Roman Catholics during the last 22 years.

4695. The woman Hennesey was not conscious during the time when Mr. Myers was there, was she?—She certainly was up to within five or ten minutes of her death.

4696. Did she speak to him?—Yes, at any rate I presume she did; I was not present, but she spoke to me afterwards.

4697. The clergyman says in his evidence that she was unable to speak; she did not speak to him it appears?—Perhaps it was that she was a Baptist, and therefore declined to speak to him.

4698. You said she did speak to him?—I presumed she did, because she spoke to me afterwards.

4699. The clergyman says that she did not?—Then I could not say she did.

4700. She was in her last moments, was she not?—Yes, but she was not a Roman Catholic; so we did not send for the priest on her account.

4701. Was there anybody in the gaol who imagined that she was a Roman Catholic?—No one but myself.

4702. Did you tell him what you thought this woman was?—I told him that she had given an Irish name, and that I had reason to disbelieve her statements; and in order to further her views, if she was a Roman Catholic, I thought I would take the opportunity of sending for Mr. Myers. Then, with regard to the statement made in 2959, I should remark that the prisoner Hennesey did not die whilst Mr. Myers was on the premises, but was able to tell the warder, after he left the cell and before he left the prison (I remember the warder running down to tell me while I was speaking to the clergyman) that she was not a Roman Catholic, and did not wish to see the priest. I find that she was visited by the surgeon at eight o'clock in the evening, and died two hours after that, which would be about eight hours after Mr. Myers had left.

4703. Mr. Myers said that the woman was unconscious, and that she could not speak to him?—He may have thought that she was unconscious, from the fact of her not wishing to speak to him on account of her being a Baptist; but I saw her after that; we did not think it likely that she would die that night.

4704. Supposing the woman was conscious, and did not speak to the clergyman when she was in her last moments, is not the answer he gave quite consistent with facts?—No; she was a Baptist, and I had no right to send him up to her; I will take the blame upon myself for having done so; but she was not a Roman Catholic, and Mr. Myers ought not to have mentioned her death at all. The only Roman Catholic who has died since he has been at the prison was the boy "Dwyer;" we had only had two deaths in the 22 years before.

4705. This woman Hennesey died?—But she was not a Roman Catholic.

4706. But he visited her?—But according to his account she did not speak to him; and I am certain of this, that whilst Mr. Myers and myself were talking together, between No. 9 and the lodge gates, a female warder ran down, and said "The prisoner Hennesey protests that she is a Baptist, and declares that she will not see the priest again." I went up to her, and she was very angry indeed; but I said "Never mind, we have erred upon the right side."

4707. Was that communication made to Mr. Myers?—No; I found I had committed an error, and I said I would not do it again.

4708. You told the clergyman that this woman was a Catholic, did you not?—No, I told him I thought so.

4709. He thought she was, did he not?—No; it was merely her name that caused me to suspect it. We have never found out the names of her relations, or where she came from.

4710. What do you wish to refer to next?—To Question 2960.

4711. That is, "Did you ever make any application to the authorities in any way to be allowed to visit the prisoner without being specially sent for?" and the answer is, "No formal application; it would not be fair to say that I have ever made a formal application." And then, in answer to

Captain J.A. Gardner.

16 May 1870.

Question 2961, he says, "I will tell the Committee what I have done, seeing that my visiting these prisoners was so precarious, and that they might die without having the last rites of the Church, I had a conversation with Mr. Gardner, the governor, and I said, 'You never send to me except to see dead or dying prisoners;' and I said, 'Would it not be better to have me appointed chaplain by the visiting justices?' and he said 'No:' I said 'Why not?' and he said, 'There are not a sufficient number of Catholics to warrant a Catholic priest being appointed, and if the matter was brought before the justices they would never consent to it; and secondly, there is no need of it; you shall see the prisoners whenever you choose; when you come here you shall see them all;'" what remark have you to make with regard to that?—In answer to that I can say this: I recollect Mr. Myers asking if the visiting justices would appoint him to visit the prison, not as the appointed chaplain, but merely as the visiting priest; to which I replied that I could not answer that question; but I have been asked a similar question since I have been in this room, and I say that I do not think that the magistrates would object to his appointment.

4712. They would not object now?—I do not think that they would have objected to it at that time, from what I have found since.

4713. You do not think that they would object to the Roman Catholic prisoners having a service upon the Sunday?—I do not think they would object. Our visiting justices are very kindly disposed towards them. Mr. Myers did not say to me, "You never send for me except to see dead or dying prisoners;" he never made use of such an expression; and I would add that he was always too courteous to express himself in such a way. In his answer to Question 3127 he contradicts himself.

4714. Do you accurately remember every word of the conversations which have occurred between you?—I have only seen Mr. Myers three times in my life to speak to. I will venture to say that, during that time our conversation did not last five minutes altogether.

4715. Will you venture to say that you would bear in your mind every item of a conversation that lasted even as short a time as three or four minutes?—I should, because I have been always very particular as to what I have said to him.

4716. You have referred to Question 3171; Mr. Myers is there asked, "Were any of those 14 prisoners persons in health, or were they all persons in whose cases you were sent for on account of sickness?" and the answer is, "There were only two on account of sickness"?—If that was so, then how could they have been all in the last stage of life; and one of those, even, was not a Roman Catholic?

4717. As I understand, Mr. Myers means that, in cases of that kind, you send when the prisoners are in an extreme condition?—Directly a prisoner wishes to see a Roman Catholic priest a letter is sent the very same day.

4718. Would you not take it that the Rev. Mr. Myers referred to sick persons when he made that statement to you, and not to persons in health?—But we have only had one Roman Catholic prisoner sick, and that one died; therefore he must have seen many others who were not sick.

4719. But if his observation merely referred to sick people, was not he right when he said that he was only sent for to see persons in that condition?—No, because only one of them was sick, and the other was not a Roman Catholic at all.

4720. What is the next matter to which you wish to refer?—In answer to Question 2962, Mr. Myers says: "I said, 'How am I to know who the Catholic prisoners are?' and he said, 'That is your matter. I am not allowed to let you look at the list; but,' he said, 'I will tell you what I will do; I will give authority to my clerk to copy out the names for you, so that when you come again he will give you a list.' About a month afterwards I went and asked especially to see the governor, when I reminded him of his promise and of his offer. He took me to the office, and asked me to read the rules and regulations, and pointed out one to the effect that no prisoner shall see any minister other than a minister of the Established Church, except he or she shall have expressly requested permission to do so; so he said, 'You see that I can do nothing in the matter, though I am very willing to do everything I can for you; and unless the prisoners send for you each time, I shall not have power to let you see them.'" As regards that, the only way in which that statement is incorrect is, that on that occasion Mr. Myers came to see the prisoner Morse, and did not come specially to have that conversation with me; I was in the office at the time, and it was then that we had a little conversation about the visiting justices. I then pointed out Rule 47 to him, and told him that I would do everything in my power to forward his views.

4721. Would you give the Committee any case in which there is a substantial difference between you and Mr. Myers?—I can give nothing more than these little inaccuracies. In No. 2968 there are no names or dates given; if there were, I might be able perhaps to answer his statements; but I can inform the Committee that the Rev. Mr. Dykes, the Rev. Mr. Hoskins and others, have visited the gaol, as well as Mr. Myers.

4722. Mr. Downing.] What is the inconsistency in that statement?—It is stated that no other Roman Catholic clergyman has visited the gaol but Mr. Myers.

4723. That is to say, since he was there?—They have visited there since he has been there.

4724. What has your statement to do with Mr. Myers' answer?—I wish merely to show that other gentlemen have been in the habit of visiting the gaol, as well as himself.

4725. Will you read any part of the answer to which you will say that is a contradiction, because it does not appear to me to be so?—That has not been the case for the last two years. Then as regards the questions from 2975 to 2983, I may say that no Roman Catholic prisoner has ever been required to attend the service in the chapel of the gaol against his will or desire.

4726. Chairman.] What do you complain of there?—We have never asked the prisoners to attend; we allow them to ask us.

4727. You simply say that some do attend and some do not?—Some attend and some do not.

4728. What is your next objection?—As regards No. 2984, if any prisoner made the statement contained in that answer, it is incorrect. Then as regards Question 3011, the prisoners are not locked in their cells the whole day; the Roman Catholic prisoners are only in their their cells with their own books during the time of service.

4729. Mr. O'Reilly.] Are the Catholic prisoners taken out for exercise on Sundays?—Yes, they are. There is a mistake in Question 3090. Our cells are not certified, nor are they warmed. Then with regard to Question 3099, I should state that I have never known prisoners register themselves as Protestants when they were Catholics, but I have frequently known prisoners who have expected to be sentenced to penal servitude, declare themselves Roman Catholics for the purpose of being sent to Millbank Prison, where they send all Roman Catholics.

4730. Chairman.] Do you know as a fact that at Millbank Prison there is a clergyman who performs the duties of the Catholic chaplain?—Yes, I am quite aware of that.

4731. And who has service in the morning, and service in the afternoon on Sundays?—Yes, and so they have in most of the convict depôts; but I fancy the reason why prisoners wish to go there is, that it is a more comfortable prison than most of them. Then with regard to Question 3106, all prisoners are treated alike in this gaol, and I cannot help adding that our books and records, which I produce, show that no difference whatever can be made in the prisoners' work.

4732. Is not Mr. Myers only speaking of what is the opinion expressed by prisoners, not of anything within his own knowledge?—That, I believe, is so.

4733. You say that the prisoners are all treated alike?—It is perfectly impossible, with our discipline, for them to go wrong.

4734. Is it not quite possible that a prisoner might form a different idea?—He could not; we have no task labour whatever throughout the prison, in any shape or way. The prisoners all work separately.

4735. But Mr. Myers himself is not acquainted with the routine of the prison?—He is not.

4736. In Question 3108 Mr. Myers was asked, "You do not think yourself that there would be any possibility of a difference of treatment being shown to the Catholic prisoners?" and the answer was "No; as far as I know there is great fairness shown to the Catholic prisoners;" you have no complaint to make of that answer?—None. The next correction I wish to make is this: in Question 3126, speaking of the sentences, he states, "Some of them are there for five years, three years, 12 months, and six months, and all those who have been committed for trial, and are awaiting their trials, are sent there." We have no five years or three years' prisoners; they are all short terms, from two months up to 12 and 18 months.

4737. What is the longest term?—Eighteen months. Then, in No. 3171, I have said that his reply to that confirms my remarks on Question 2958.

4738. That question is, "Were any of those 14 prisoners persons in health, or were they all persons in whose cases you were sent for on account of sickness?" His answer was, "There were only two on account of sickness." Therefore, when Mr. Myers referred to the sick and dying, it was only to those two cases he referred?—Pray, excuse me. I had not sent for him to see the woman, Hennesey; she was a Baptist.

4739. But you asked him when he was in the prison, to see her?—Yes, in case there might have been a mistake. Then my next point is, as to No. 3187. The books are not subjected to the approval of the governor; books for Protestant prisoners are approved of by the chaplain, and books for prisoners of other persuasions by the visiting justices. Then, with regard to 3189: all prisoners committed for trial are sent to my gaol.

4740. Mr. Downing.] Have you got a register of the deaths?—Yes I have (producing the same).

4741. Will you just point my attention to the death of Mary Hennesey?—It is No. 981. She was committed January 3rd 1868. She was an untried prisoner at first, and was convicted January 8th 1868, and sentenced for three calendar months. She died January 20th 1868. A coroner's jury held an inquest on the body, and the verdict of the jury was, "Death from liver disease, with other disease." The prisoner had no friends, and was buried January 20th 1868.

4742. Is there any burial service for prisoners?—Yes.

4743. Who attended upon that occasion?—The clergyman appointed to the cemetery to do the duty.

4744. What is his name?—I cannot think of his name.

4745. Is he a Protestant chaplain?—He is.

4746. Does he attend upon all burials except the Roman Catholic burials?—Either he does, or the Rev. Mr. Eland, of St. John's Church, Bedminster.

4747. Do you remember whether you had any woman in the gaol of the name of Mary Sullivan?—No 4748. Are you quite sure?—Yes, not at that time; we know that a Mary Sullivan has been there for very many years, off and on.

4749. Is she dead?—No.

4750. When was she last in your prison?—I cannot remember; but that is a very common name in the gaol. I think we had one very recently.

4751. I think there is one in May, previously?—Perhaps there may have been.

4752. That was very long, previously?—That was a year before.

4753. You had a copy of that evidence of Mr. Myers, had you not?—I had.

4754. Did you make any communication to the Chairman, or to any person connected with this Committee?—I wrote to Mr. Eales to say that I should like to contradict a part of the evidence, which I thought it was my duty to do, as it alluded to me more than it did to the prisoners.

4755. You keep copies of all your letters, do you not?—We do of all official letters, but I have not a copy of that letter; we did not consider that an official letter at all. (The clerk to the Committee produced and read the letter referred to.)

4756. You felt that you would be under the painful necessity, in every essential particular, of contradicting the evidence of Mr. Myers?—I thought that many things which he said were detrimental to the discipline of our prison, and I thought it would have appeared very odd if I had sat down quietly without saying a word.

4757. You have stated that the Rev. Mr. Myers ought to have had an answer if he had applied to you by letter, and that he would have got such a reply from you if he had applied?—I think so.

Captain J.A. Gardner.

16 May 1870.

4758. Would you take upon yourself to say that no letter was received in the gaol from Mr. Myers?—I never heard of one, and never saw one.

4759. You have taken upon yourself to contradict the evidence mostly with regard to seeing that boy, Dwyer, upon the Saturday?—Yes, I do.

4760. Why do you take upon yourself to say that he was not there upon the Saturday?—Because our books show that he was there upon the Monday.

4761. And could not he have visited the gaol without having his name entered in the books?—He could not.

4762. Is the name of every person visiting the gaol entered at the time?—No.

4763. Why would the name of Mr. Myers appear if it is not the invariable rule to have the name of every person visiting the gaol entered?—It is merely entered here in the chaplain's journal that the prisoner had been visited by the Roman Catholic clergyman the day before.

4764. The chaplain makes the entry, then?—He made an entry in his journal.

4765. Do I understand you to say that the Protestant chaplain makes an entry of the visits of the Catholic chaplain?—It is not his duty to do it, but he mentioned it in this case.

4766. Is that the reason why you contradict Mr. Myers, because there is not an entry in the chaplain's journal on the Saturday?—That is the only evidence I have; this is the daily entry, and I believe it is true.

4767. You take upon yourself, merely because it does not appear upon that book among the entries of the Saturday, that the Rev. Mr. Myers visited the gaol, to say that he did not do so?—I certainly should say that he did not. I think Mr. Myers may possibly have made a mistake in the day, as I frequently do myself.

4768. Do you not think it is more likely that the Protestant chaplain did not make an entry of his visit?—No, I do not think that, because this is a daily entry.

4769. Was it you that directed the clerk to send notice to the Rev. Mr. Myers of the illness of the youth?—No; the clerk would do that without seeing me.

4770. Did he do it?—I think so; but certainly not as regards the woman; there was no notice sent to Mr. Myers about her until I spoke to him while he was on the premises.

4771. As regards the boy?—The mother called to see him, before we wrote, on the Sunday.

4772. Mr. Myers says, "The day after that I received a notice from the clerk"?—Yes, that is quite right.

4773. Did you direct the clerk to send that notice?—I did not; it was a matter of duty and would be done off-hand by the clerk.

4774. There is no entry of his having been sent to?—None whatever.

4775. You have said that the books supplied to the Catholic prisoners were approved of by the visiting justices?—Yes, they should be; but if the Roman Catholic chaplain sent in any books, we would admit them directly, and if a friend brought a book down, we should put it by and show it to the visiting justices, and they would admit it at once, 4776. Mr. Synan.] Have you a Creed Register?—Yes, we have.

4777. Did you refuse Mr. Myers access to it?—My clerk did.

4778. Why was that?—Because he was not an appointed or permitted clergyman under the 47th rule of the Prisons Act.

4779. Is he invited to attend by the prison authorities?—He is not.

4780. Does not your clerk invite him to attend particular prisoners by letter?— If a prisoner wishes to see the priest, then we send a request at once to him or to some other clergyman.

4781. Have you read the Act of Parliament?—Yes, I have.

4782. The Act of Parliament says, "Permitted to visit the prisoner"; did you think that he came under those words?—I did not think that he was permitted under that Act; if he were permitted he would never find any difficulty in visiting the Bristol gaol; not the slightest.

4783. Did you refuse him that access to the Creed Register upon the authority of the visiting justices?—No, upon my own authority.

4784. Not upon the strict rule?—Yes, upon the rule. I pointed out the rule to him myself. I thought I was doing right.

4785. You told your clerk to give him a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners, did you not?—Yes, I did.

4786. Did you give him that list?—He could have always had it if he had come there.

4787. Did your clerk send it?—No, we did not send it.

4788. Did your clerk give it him?—No, the list is always there, and he can see it.

4789. I am glad to hear from you that it is your opinion that the visiting justices would not refuse service upon Sundays if it were applied for; where do the Catholic prisoners remain on Sundays while the Protestant service is going on?—In their cells.

4790. How long does the service take?—About an hour and a quarter.

4791. Do some of the Catholic prisoners attend the Protestant service?—Some of them do.

4792. Do you think prisoners consider it a relaxation to leave their cells and go to the chapel?—No, I think they do not.

4793. Do you think they would prefer going to the chapel to remaining in their cells?—No, I think they would not, because our chapel is colder than the cells.

4794. Do you think they would not care for the society?—No; because they would not see anybody in the chapel, because they are not even in sight of one another, either going to or returning from the chapel, or during the service.

4795. Where do they sit during the service?—Every prisoner is in a separate seat.

4796. Can the prisoners see each other?—No, they are in separate seats, boxed off, with a passage at the back, so that if any one of the prisoners is poorly, we can take him out without any of the other prisoners hearing or seeing.

4797. You do not agree with this evidence which has been given before this Committee, that the prisoners prefer attending the service in the chapel to remaining in their cells, even though their cells are warm; but you tell the Committee that their cells are cold?—I do not agree with that opinion, and moreover our chapel is colder than the cells; it is so cold that some arrangement has been suggested for remedying that defect.

4798. Supposing that there were two services, Roman Catholic and Protestant upon the Sunday, at different hours, do you think there would be any additional expense incurred in in carrying out that plan in your prison?—Our warders are paid to do their duty, therefore it would all go into their day's work, so I do not think that that would entail any more expense upon the city of Bristol than is requisite at the present time.

4799. Mr. Talbot.] The number of Roman Catholic prisoners you state is generally about four or five?—Yes, it is generally about four or five, but we have six at the present time.

4800. It is a very small number, compared with the whole number of your prisoners?—It is a very small number compared to the whole number.

4801. No denial has been given to any prisoner who has applied to see the priest?—None whatever.

4802. And you imagine that if the priest applied for service for those prisoners, that application would not be refused?—I should not be justified in saying that it would not be refused, but I am pretty sure there would be no difficulty about it; I might say that there is less inconvenience attending the visits of the Roman Catholic priests to our gaol than to any other gaol in England; we have never wished to keep them out.

4803. Mr. Guest.] Mr. Myers, in his evidence, was asked this question: "Have you ever been told that prisoners have desired to see you, and that, nevertheless, you have not been sent for? A. Yes, I have." Then he is asked "By whom; will you just state to the Committee the circumstances of any such case?" To which he replied, "I can certainly remember two cases, if not three, of prisoners who have come to me after they have been released, and said, 'Oh, father, why did not you come to see me in the prison?' and I said, 'I did not know you were there; why did you not send for me?' and they have said 'Oh, I did frequently, but I was always told that the priest would be coming round, and when he was in the prison that I should see him';" can you remember any cases at all where the priest has been applied for and prisoners have made a complaint of his not having been sent for?—I do not remember any such complaint.

4804. You consider that statement is without foundation?—I am certain, in my own mind, that whenever a prisoner has made a request to see a priest, we have sent that very day to the priest.

4805. And so far from not sending to the priest, do I understand you to state that you have, on one or two occasions, invited the prisoners to send for the priest?—I have upon one or two occasions, some of them recently.

4806. Then Mr. Myers stated that certain Roman Catholics had registered themselves as Protestants, and that they had done so under the impression that they would be persecuted if they represented themselves as being Roman Catholics, and when asked by whom they thought they would be persecuted, they said by the warders; have you ever known any cases of warders endeavouring to persecute or impose upon the Roman Catholic prisoners?—No; they could not do it; I can give the Committee some figures which will show how that could not have been the case. Since the 1st of January 1870, prisoners have received various sums of money amounting to 11 l. 1 s. 6 d.; of that sum the Roman Catholics received 2 l. 9 s. 10 d., instead of about 2 l., so that they received more than their actual proportion; then I might mention that there was a Roman Catholic child discharged the other day, to whom I made a present of 5 l. out of my own purse, and we had a Jew discharged the other day, I gave him 5 l. out of my own purse; that shows we make no difference at all on account of a man's creed.

4807. Was the Jew an ordinary prisoner, or was he a debtor, or what?—The Jew was a debtor, but the child was the child of a Roman Catholic prisoner in the gaol.

4808. What age was that child?—About eight or nine months old; I tied the 5 l. note round the child's neck and sent it off to the school.

4809. Did you send the mother off with it?—No, the mother was a penal servitude prisoner.

4810. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] The Jew debtor was an exceptional case, I suppose?—No, I have given some hundreds of pounds away to the debtors.

4811. Not all to Jews?—Not all to Jews; but we never made any difference between the prisoners; we relieved them without any reference to their creed.

4812. I need hardly ask you whether you have always been on very good terms with Mr. Myers?—I am now, and I wish to be so, for the purpose of furthering his views.

4813. You do not contradict his statement upon that head?—Certainly not.

4814. Is a wish on the part of a prisoner to see the priest immediately conveyed to you?—Yes, it would come down in red ink on the back of one of these reports.

4815. You do not think that any warder could prevent such a request from coming to you, or suppress such a request from being communicated to the Roman Catholic priest?—No, I do not; I see all the prisoners every day and ask them if they have any complaints to make, and if a prisoner had asked the day before to see a priest and it was not down upon the back of this report, the warder would be suspended.

4816. You do not see the Catholic priest very often, do you?—I do not.

4817. He does not visit the prison very often?—He does not.

4818. And therefore, probably some of the small mistakes which may appear in his evidence would arise from his want of communication with you, and from his not having such a knowledge of the details of the prison as he would have if regularly appointed as an officer of the prison?—There is no doubt that some of them have arisen from his not having a larger acquaintance with the gaol.

4819. But if there was a Roman Catholic chaplain coming and going to the gaol, and visiting it upon terms of equality with the Protestant chaplain, those mistakes would be less likely to arise, would they not?—They would be less likely to arise as he would be in possession of the code of rules.

4820. And you would personally have no objections to such a system being adopted?—None at all.

4821. If the Roman Catholic chaplain was a prison officer, would you feel that he was placed upon better terms as regards his relations to the prison?—I should treat him with just the same respect as I do our chaplain, and should further his views just as much as I do those of the Protestant chaplain.

4822. You do not think that any difficulty would arise as regards the discipline of the Captain J. A. Gardner.

16 May 1870.

prison?—No, he would have to attend at such an hour as would not clash with the work of the prison.

4823. And you would see no difficulty in arranging it so with the Roman Catholic priest?—None whatever.

4824. If the reverend gentleman was accurate in his statement that he would suit his hour to the requirements of the prison discipline, that would facilitate your arrangements, would it not?—Quite so.

4825. Mr. O'Reilly.] Am I right in understanding that according to your view now, the Reverend Mr. Myers, not being the regularly appointed clergyman to visit the prison, is not entitled according to the 4th section of the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 79, to be furnished with a list of the prisoners who are declared to belong to his church or persuasion?—The Register is the only thing that we refuse to show him; we should be justified in giving a list to anybody who applied for one.

4826. Do you conceive that it is your duty under the 4th section of the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 79, to furnish Mr. Myers with a list from time to time of all the prisoners in your gaol who are declared to belong to the church or persuasion of which he is the minister?—I do not consider it my duty, but I have no objection to do it. I should object to show him that book; that would be the register from which we should make the list.

4827. You conceive that you are not now obliged to do it, but if he was the regularly appointed minister would it not be your duty under this Act to do it?—Yes, or anything else that might be required.

4828. Mr. Downing.] You used the expression with regard to giving money, that "We" did not make any distinction; what did you mean by "We;" I understood you to say that it was money out of your own pocket?—A good deal of it is my own money, but the gaol authorities empower me to give every prisoner who comes within a certain rule a certain sum of money, and also out of the borough funds I am empowered to give a prisoner a sum not exceeding 2 l.

4829. I understood you to state that you gave 5 l. to a child; that was your own money?—Yes.

4830. Did I not understand you to say that the mother was sentenced to penal servitude?—Yes.

4831. What has become of that child?—The child is kept at school, I believe, by Mr. Alderman Ford.

4832. At what school?—I think at a Roman Catholic school, but I do not know where.

4833. Who is Mr Alderman Ford?—He is a kind-hearted Roman Catholic gentleman, and knowing that this child was the child of Roman Catholic parents, I told him that if he knew anywhere that I could send the child to, or any place where I could get it into, I should not mind giving the child 5 l., or something of that sort.

The Rev. VINCENT ZANETTI, called in; and Examined.

Rev. V. Zanetti.

4834. Chairman.] YOU are the Catholic clergyman attending the Millbank Penitentiary, are you not?—I am.

4835. For what time have you been attending that prison?—For six years and a-half.

4836. Have you visited Tothill Fields Prison at any time?—I visited Tothill Fields and Millbank Prisons, beginning with the year 1853, for about seven years.

4837. Then may I say that your prison experience extends more or less over about 17 years?—About 17 years I have been in the habit of visiting prisons, Tothill Fields and Millbank.

4838. What is your position in Millbank Penitentiary?—I am termed the Roman Catholic priest in Millbank. I am a salaried officer of the prison, and I attend to the spiritual concerns of the Roman Catholic prisoners confined in that prison.

4839. When do you visit that prison?—I visit the prison every day; my time is completely taken up by that prison; I do not attend to any other work whatsoever.

4840 How many hours a day do you attend upon the week days?—I go there every morning regularly at half-past eight, and not unfrequently stay until half-past four; I generally spend, on the average, from five to six hours a day, five hours at least, in the prison.

4841. Do you visit the prison also on the Sunday?—I visit it also upon the Sunday, and I have four services.

4842. Why are four services necessary upon the Sunday?—There are male and female prisoners, and they each have two services, so that it is necessary for me to hold four services upon the Sunday.

4843. What services have you on weekdays?—Upon weekdays I have two services of 20 minutes each, which consists of morning prayers and catechetical instruction, and the service is accompanied with the singing of hymns.

4844. You have an afternoon service on Sunday?—We have two morning services and two afternoon services.

4845. Do you visit the prisoners in their cells?—I frequently visit the prisoners in their cells; I am furnished with keys of all parts of the prison where Roman Catholic male prisoners are incarcerated, and I am at liberty to go to them at any hour of the day; and to the female of Catholic prisoners, accompanied by a matron.

4846. What mark have you by which to recognise the cell in which a Catholic is incarcerated?—Over the cells of the Catholic prisoners are large printed letters, R. C., and the absence of that ticket indicates that the inmate of that cell is not a Roman Catholic.

4847. Of course you only visit your own people?—I never think of going to any prisoners, except those who are Roman Catholics.

4848. Do you visit prisoners under punishment?—I always visit prisoners under punishment, and, in fact, it is considered a very serious duty, and one which we can never neglect, to visit prisoners under punishment.

4849. Whether refractory or otherwise?—Whether refractory or confined in the dark cells.

4850. Do you consider it necessary that prisoners so circumstanced should be visited occasionally by a clergyman?—I think it is of great importance that prisoners under punishment should be regularly visited by their clergymen, as they generally become very violent under punishment, and sometimes desperate. The visits of the priest have a great tendency to soothe soothe down that irritation, to induce them to accept with patience their punishment, and to show them the reasonableness of it, as far as can be done under such circumstances. And likewise it is necessary to give them a little comfort, as far as we can, for prisoners under such circumstances are inclined to be desponding, and to make away with themselves. They give way sometimes to great despondency and dejection, which succeeds to their irritation; so that it is a matter of very vital importance that they should be visited regularly.

4851. And a few words from a clergyman are found to have a great effect upon them?—Yes, I have known prisoners who were very violent to have been soothed almost directly when they saw the priest, for they have great respect for the priest; and although they may not listen to his admonitions, as might be desired, they are very glad to see him, and his ministrations will have a beneficial effect upon them.

4852. Of what punishment are you speaking?—I am talking principally of prisoners in the refractory cells, and in the dark cells.

4853. And you say that a few words of kindness and consolation addressed to them by their clergymen have a great effect upon their minds?—Undoubtedly.

4854. Do you think that if the Catholic prisoners were addressed by the Protestant chaplain under the same circumstances the same effect could be produced upon their minds?—I do not think that the same effect could be produced. I think that a prisoner should be visited by a clergyman in whom he has confidence, otherwise no good can be produced.

4855. Of course, you apply the same observation to the Protestant prisoner and his clergyman as to the Catholic prisoner and his clergyman?—The same observation applies to both.

4856. Has your advice under such circumstances been of practical use to those men?—I am quite sure of that.

4857. Do you attach importance to teaching prisoners in association?—I attach the greatest importance to teaching prisoners in common for many reasons. In the first place, to teach prisoners in common is a great economy in point of time, both for the priest and for the prisoners; time is saved to a considerable amount; and, secondly, the strength of the priest is economised. To oblige a priest to instruct 20 or 30, or any great number of prisoners singly, is a very great hardship, and no one could go through it very long without suffering great physical pain; and, secondly, I think that when the priest addresses a number together, he is more inspired to speak with energy. I think a large number rather inspires a person to be eloquent, if I may use the term; to be impressive, at any rate.

4858. He is likely, under those circumstances, to produce more effect upon his auditory?—Yes, I think that when persons are together there is a sort of sympathy one with another; and where there is a large multitude there is an effect produced which would not be produced if persons were addressed singly, or in very small numbers.

4859. Could you form an idea of the result of the religious instruction which prisoners receive in Millbank; does it lead, in your experience, to practical reformation?—The spiritual instruction which is given in Millbank, as far as my experience goes, tends very much to the improvement of prisoners and to their correction. I cannot say that it produces all the effect that might be expected, because prisoners are often hardened men; and the same discourse which might move others would not so easily move or correct them; but I have proved that considerable benefit has resulted from such ministrations. I would add that one of the great effects that I have seen in the Catholic prisoners of whom I have had the charge is this, that they become more respectful to authority, and more obedient to the orders given them, and that they become more patient under the punishment inflicted upon them, when they have a priest to reason with them, and show them the reasonableness of the punishment that is inflicted upon them; and, lastly, they become more diligent in their work, because they are more cheerful. Moreover, fewer old convicts return to the prison among the Catholic prisoners; the number has been considerably diminished in the last three years.

4860. Do you altogether lose sight of the prisoners, or lose all knowledge of them, when they leave Millbank?—No, I do not lose sight of the prisoners when they leave our prison. I make a catalogue of the prisoners so leaving, and I attach to this catalogue notes, stating what their conduct has been in Millbank, and what progress they have made in their religious education. These notes are of very great assistance to the clergyman in the Public Works Prisons, where these prisoners are sent. Generally I have a good account of the prisoners whom I have sent, at least, such an account as to make me believe that considerable fruit has been produced.

4861. Then you would not be inclined to attach any credit to the assertion that there was no appreciable result from religious instruction in the prison?—I should by no means, from my own experience.

4862. You state that there is only a small number of Catholic prisoners recommitted?—I did not precisely state that. I said that the number of reconvicted prisoners, or old convicts, had diminished. The number who enter the prison is no criterion of the improvement of the prison; but it is a criterion to know that the number of reconvicted prisoners is becoming fewer.

4863. Do I understand that, not only is the object of your teaching to endeavour to reform the individual prisoners, but at the same time to endeavour to maintain the order and discipline of the prison, as far as you can?—My object is to urge the prisoners to observe the rules, and to obey those who are placed lawfully over them.

4864. Are all facilities given to you for your ministration in that prison?—Every facility is given to me that I could reasonably require.

4865. You have no cause to complain whatsoever?—I have no cause to complain, in any way.

4866. With reference to your position and status, does that give you confidence in the discharge of your duties?—I have no doubt that my status does render my work more easy, because a clergyman who has got a status is really more respected by the subordinate officers; they do not regard him as an intruder, or as a person who is giving trouble or adding to their work, but they accept it as part of the work of the prison.

4867. You speak now as one who has had experience of both systems, where the clergyman is is merely tolerated and where he is considered as a recognised officer, and you express to the Committee your opinion based upon that experience?—I do.

Rev. V. Zanetti. 16 May 1870.

4868. Are you on good terms with the officials of the prison?—I am on excellent terms with all the officials of the prison.

4869. How do you stand with regard to the Protestant chaplain?—I have a very cordial understanding with the chaplain. We have never had the slightest disagreement, nor the slightest misunderstanding.

4870. Is it possible for you to come into collision?—I do not think it is, unless we are determined to quarrel, as we each have our separate work to do; he attends to his and I attend to mine.

4871. Even if there were a desire to disagree, there are no means of gratifying such a desire?—No, it would be so contrary to the discipline of the prison, that it would be at once stopped.

4872. Are you on good terms with the governor and the director?—I am on good terms with the governor and the director. I have never had one unpleasant word with the governor, or the deputy-governor, or the director, since I have been in the prison, and I am always treated with the greatest courtesy by them.

4873. Are the inferior officers respectful towards you?—They are quite respectful.

4874. In fact, they recognise you as a superior officer of the prison?—They do.

4875. You have, I believe, a spiritual instructor to assist you?—I have.

4876. With reference to religious worship in the prison, is it conducted with befitting solemnity upon the Sunday?—It is conducted with sufficient solemnity certainly for a prison. There are morning prayers, and then Mass, and then Communion, when it is given, and prayers of Thanksgiving after the Communion. The service is accompanied by music; there is a very efficient choir in Millbank.

4877. The prisoners sing, I suppose?—The prisoners sing. I consider that music has a very great effect upon the prisoners.

4878. Would you say a soothing and elevating effect?—A soothing and elevating effect; very often their reminiscences of a better life may be revived by the strains they hear. I have heard of prisoners who have been so touched and moved by the music that they have heard, that they have been led to think seriously of their reformation.

4879. A question has arisen upon which you might be able to give the Committee some information, namely, with reference to altar furniture and its cost; the Committee have had different estimates given to them, some as low as 50 l., and some as high as 150 l.; could you give the Committee some information upon that point?—I do not wonder that different estimates have been made by various witnesses, because each one will have his own notion about the quality of the vestments and of the church furniture; some will think it necessary to have a high quality, and others would take a low estimate of what the vestments and furniture of the prison chapel should be, and that may account for the difference of opinion. Secondly, it very seldom happens that a priest has to furnish his own altar altogether in a chapel, and it is not, therefore, generally a practical question with the priest. He generally finds, when he comes to a church, that the altar is furnished, and that he has only to purchase a few articles to replace those which may have deteriorated, so it may easily happen that a priest would really not know what estimate to give. But in order to obtain a practical estimate of the cost, I made an application by letter recently to an eminent firm, Messrs. Burns and Oates, of Portman-street, Portman-square, and also to Mr. Brangwyn, 26, Baker-street, who sells the same class of articles, to this effect: "You will oblige me by informing me, by messenger whom I will send to-morrow (Monday), for what sum you will supply all the altar furniture, vestments, and linen necessary for (1) Mass and (2) Benediction service. The altar itself and tabernacle will be made where they are required. I require the estimate for Divine worship in a prison, so you will please to take into your estimate only what is essential for the services named, and that of the simplest quality consistent with durability." I have had two returns of estimates, one from Messrs. Burns and Oates, and the other from Mr. Brangwyn. The furniture, vestments, and linen, such as I have described, Messrs. Burns and Oates would supply to a prison chapel for 56 l. 10 s.; they considered that those vestments and that furniture would be plain, yet substantial. The price of a somewhat better quality would be 75 l. 16 s.; Mr. Brangwyn estimates the vestments, furniture, &c., at 70 l.; 47 l. for vestments and the requisites for Mass, and for the Benediction service 23 l., making a total of 70 l.

4880. That is for the simplest articles?—Yes, consistently with durability.

4881. Would you say that 100 l. would be an extravagant estimate?—I should not at all think that it would be an extravagant estimate, because the qualities of altar furniture, vestments, and the other things differ very much indeed. Having seen what this furniture is and its quality, I put some questions to the Rev. Mr. Bond, who is at present at Tothill Fields, to ascertain what quality of vestments and furniture were supplied at Tothill Fields, and from what he tells me I should say that you could not get that furniture and those vestments and the rest under from 100 l. to 150 l., because they are of very superior quality, far superior to what would be furnished by Mr. Burns for 56 l. 10 s., but I do not think that it is necessary to get such expensive furniture and vestments for a prison. I think the vestments and furniture which would be furnished by Messrs. Burns and Oates for 56 l. 10 s., or by Mr. Brangwyn for 70 l. would be sufficiently good for a prison. This estimate does not, of course, include the altar, which could be made by a common carpenter.

4882. Lord Henley.] Does that include the cups which are required to be made of pure silver?—It includes the chalice, the cup of which is of silver; we cannot celebrate Mass without a dispensation from the bishop, unless the cup of the chalice, at least, be of silver; but all the rest may be of inferior metal.

4883. Chairman.] What would you say yourself would be a fair average, from all the information you have received; would you say that 60 l. or 70 l. would be a fair average?—Yes.

4884. Do those estimates of 70 l. from Mr. Brangwyn, and 56 l. 10 s. from Messrs. Burns & Oates, include the second service on the Sunday? They do.

4885. You

4885. You were at Millbank under the former system, were you not, under which the Catholic clergyman was merely permitted to attend?—Yes; at that time we had one service on the Sunday afternoon for the male prisoners, and one service on the Sunday afternoon for the female prisoners, consisting of prayers and a discourse; during the week, once we visited privately the female prisoners, and once the male prisoners.

4886. At that time, what was the average number of female prisoners in the gaol?—We had no access to the register then as now, so that I cannot say; but taking the average number of female prisoners in Millbank, I should think that there might be from 80 to 100 female prisoners in the prison at that time.

4887. How many of those were at that time in the habit of attending the Catholic worship?—The number varied very much; I never remember to have given the service to more than about 25.

4888. What was the smallest number you have seen?—I have not myself seen so small a number as I find from a letter I have in my hand, which states that there were sometimes only four female prisoners attending the service for several Sundays.

4889. Did they attend the Protestant worship?—All the rest of them attended the Protestant worship; with respect to the men, I suppose the average number of Catholic male prisoners at that time would be about the same as it is now, namely, about 350; of those 350 about half attended the afternoon prayers on Sunday, and the other half went to the Protestant church. With regard to the visits we made during the week, I saw, during the week, an average of about 10 female prisoners only, and about three or four men.

4890. Continuing to refer to the Sunday for a moment, could you give any reason why so very few women attended the Catholic service, and why they attended the Protestant service?—Because they did not wish to be locked up in their cells, and wanted a little excitement; it is always a certain amount of excitement for a prisoner to get out of his cell, and to be where others are; if they do not speak to one another, at least to be in company with others is a relief to them; so they naturally went to the Protestant service for this object, and to escape the tedium of their cells.

4891. Are you of opinion that the want of a Catholic service is, generally speaking, a motive which greatly influences Catholic prisoners in attending the Protestant worship?—Undoubtedly; and it is very perplexing for the priest who attends them, for if they go to the Protestant chapel, which they will do, we do not know what to do with them; they are acting against their conscience; they are in bad faith, and we can do nothing with them spiritually.

4892. In Millbank prison at present, have they Dissenting ministers of their own persuasion?—Formerly they had not; there were only two services, the Protestant and the Roman Catholic service for several years past, but lately Millbank has become a military prison; I do not know if it is to be exclusively a military prison, but it seems as if it were, and since the military have come there, which is since February last, I think there has been a Presbyterian service. That I believe has been permitted as it is permitted in the army; there is a regular Presbyterian service and chaplain in the army.

4893. From your experience as a prison chaplain, do you find that Protestant Dissenters have any objection to going to the Church of England service?—I do not think that formerly at Millbank the officials made any distinction. I think all that were not Catholics were regarded as Protestants, and went to the Church of England service.

4894. You yourself may not have seen them attend, but so far as your experience goes, do you know that Protestant Dissenters do attend the Church of England worship?—They do, and they make no difficulty whatsoever about it; so far as I know I have never heard of such a difficulty.

4895. You would say that a Catholic cannot attend the Protestant worship?—He cannot.

4896. So that the case is quite distinct as regards Catholic and Protestant Dissenters, with reference to attending the Church of England service?—Certainly.

4897. When you and your brother clergymen attended the Millbank prison before the present system was adopted, how were you and they treated by the warders; was the manner of the warders towards you the same as it is now?—We were generally treated with respect, but we were looked upon as if we were intruders, and there was not the same spirit towards us as exists at the present time.

4898. Now with reference to the cost of adding one or two warders to the staff, do you think that a certain number of warders in the prison more or less should be a consideration as regards the right of a Catholic to go to his own worship on the Sunday?—It seems to me to be no consideration at all; the first thing to determine is, is it expedient, or advantageous, or necessary, that the Catholics should have their worship, and if it is, then warders should be provided. It seems to me ridiculous to make a difficulty about the number of warders, they should be provided if there are not sufficient.

4899. If the same system of fairness which is now carried out in Millbank were carried out in all prisons in England, do you think that any inconvenience would arise to the prison discipline, or do you not think, upon the contrary, that great good would result to the prison?—I feel sure that there would be no difficulty with regard to the discipline, but, on the contrary, that the discipline of the prison would be improved, because the priest would have greater opportunities to instruct the prisoners in respect of their duty to the officers of the gaol. In that way the discipline of the prison would be rather enforced than enfeebled.

4900. Mr. O'Reilly.] The honourable Chairman asked you some questions of opinion with regard to the conduct of the Protestant Dissenters in the prison; have you had any experience yourself with reference to the Protestant Dissenters in the prison, or have you anything to say to them?—I have nothing personally to say to them, but I have heard others mention this, that they have no difficulty whatsoever in attending the Church service. I never interfere with the Dissenters, or any other Protestant prisoners, consequently I do not know in Millbank, from my personal experience, whether they have any objection or not. I never ask any question of, or speak to any prisoner, unless he is designated by the letters "R. C." over his cell, to be a Roman Catholic, nor does the Protestant chaplain ever speak to a prisoner who is a Roman Catholic, so that that by keeping a complete separation one from the other, as far as the religion of the prisoners is concerned, we go on in peace and comfort. What I stated was from my general information only.

Rev. V. Zanetti.

4901. Am I right in thinking that you would not wish to express any opinion with regard to the Protestant Dissenters being willing to attend any other service or not, but you being like myself, a Roman Catholic, would speak for yourself?—If I were allowed, I should be content to speak merely for myself.

4902. Mr. Synan.] You have spoken about the services; what service of the Catholic church is it obligatory upon Roman Catholics to attend upon the Sunday?—Mass upon the Sunday is a matter of obligation, and any Catholic who should be able to hear Mass and should neglect to do so, without very grave inconvenience, would be guilty of a serious transgression.

4903. Suppose that service was obliged to be performed in the private cell of a prisoner, could that obligation be complied with?—It is utterly impossible that Mass could be celebrated by a priest in a succession of calls on the Sunday.

4904. Therefore, the obligation could not be complied with?—No; the priest is only allowed to celebrate Mass once without special permission. I have permission to celebrate Mass twice, but in a general way it is only allowed once.

4905. In order to make compliance with that obligation possible, it is absolutely necessary that the service should be associated?—Yes, it is essentially necessary. Our service does not consist of prayers and exhortations only, but of Mass; and without Mass we do not think that we have sanctified the Sunday.

4906. Sir John Trelawny.] Protestant Dissenters might go to the Church of England service in order to escape the tedium of their cells, might they not?—They might, but I have had no experience of them. I have never communicated in any way withany Protestant prisoners, whether Church of England or Dissenters.

4907. Probably Unitarians might not care to go to the Church of England service, from any extraordinarily close similarity of their views to the chaplain's doctrines?—It may be so.

4908. In short you have no actual knowledge?—I have no actual knowledge from my own personal experience.

4909. Mr. Talbot.] With regard to the Millbank Penitentiary, it is entirely a Government prison, is it not?—Entirely a Government prison.

4910. For males and females?—For males and females.

4911. Do prisoners go there for the beginning of their sentence?—They do; it is a probationary prison. There are two probationary convict prisons in London, Pentonville and Millbank; Pentonville has only Protestant prisoners in it; there are no prisoners in Pentonville, except those who do not belong to the Roman Catholic Church, and Millbank has Catholics and Protestants indiscriminately.

4912. How long do they remain in Millbank usually?—Usually nine months, but the term varies very much. It has been found sometimes that there has not been sufficient room in the public works prisons, so that prisoners have been delayed a little, and some of the prisoners have therefore been a year under probation at Millbank, and have not yet been sent away, but nine months is usually the time for their detention at Millbank.

4913. Then from Millbank they are passed over to Portland or to some of the public works prisons?—They are passed on to the public works prisons on certain principles. The able-bodied men are sent to Portland or Portsmouth, and those that are rather delicate are sent to Dartmoor, and those that are confirmed invalids are sent to Woking or Parkhurst.

4914. Then, usually speaking, it is a long time before the prisoners who have been under your care are released from prison?—It is a long time. Having, however, been six and a-half years in Millbank, I have had some experience in regard to a certain number of convicts who have had shorter sentences, and so I have been able to speak with reference to the return of old convicts.

4915. I suppose there would only be a very small per-centage of those prisoners who could have returned, for if they were all long-sentenced prisoners, and you have been there only 6½ years, it would have been impossible for many of them to have come back under your care. You will quite understand that I am not attempting to throw any discredit upon the effects of religious teaching, but I simply want to know what experience you have had in that respect?—I have had experience of five and seven years' prisoners, who, if they have conducted themselves well in prison, will have received such a diminution of their sentences as to come under my experience, if they be reconvicted.

4916. You stated that you had had experience in Tothill Fields Prison?—I have been in the habit of visiting the two prisons from the year 1853.

4917. You spoke of the obligation upon all members of your church to attend Mass upon the Sunday. I am afraid that that is not an obligation which is regarded by all Roman Catholics?—It is regarded by all conscientious Catholics as a very serious obligation.

4918. But the question is, who are conscientious Catholics. Should you call all prisoners conscientious Catholics?—I should not call all prisoners, by any means, conscientious Catholics; but they are perfectly well aware, and they are so instructed, that it is a serious duty imposed upon them, whether they be convicts or whatever they are, to attend Mass upon the Sunday. They are informed that it is a duty incumbent on them to attend Mass, and that if they neglect it, it is at the peril of their own souls.

4919. But many of those who you say would consider it an obligation to attend Mass upon the Sunday, would be persons who, up to the time when they came into the prison, had not been in the habit of attending Mass: those persons are generally hardened offenders, are they not?—Yes, they are.

4920. The class of hardened offenders out of the prison are not in the habit of attending Mass?—They are not.

4921. This obligation is, therefore, something which is only brought to their minds for the first time, or brought back again, when they come to the prison?—Quite so; we have to instruct them in their duty or remind them of it.

4922. It is not the hardship that they would feel on coming into the prison, if they could not attend the service, but it is something that you would wish them to do?—It is a hardship that they would feel very much if they were informed by the priest that it was their duty to attend Mass, though they had not attended it before, and were at the same time debarred from doing so.

4923. Those persons, when they had been living out of the prison, had not attended to the duties of religion?—Yes, even such prisoners.

4924. And you mean that all ought to consider it an obligation upon them, whether they do so or not?—They ought to consider it as an obligation, and they do so when they are instructed in the prison. Many of those men are very ignorant, and oftentimes wicked through ignorance, but when they are duly informed by the priest what their obligations are with reference to the human and Divine law, they begin to have some conscience; and if they are told that they ought to go to Mass, and that it is a serious violation of the law of the Catholic Church to neglect it, they feel it a pain if they are not allowed to go; they see that the Protestants have a worship, and they consider it a hardship if they have not their service.

4925. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] With regard to visiting the prisoners, you are upon a footing of equality with the Protestant minister, are you not?—Quite so; and I think that there is as great respect, consideration, and kindness shown to me as there is to the Protestant chaplain.

4926. Mr. O'Reilly.] With regard to this obligation of hearing Mass upon Sundays, is it not the case that it is the same as any other obligation, such as not stealing, which we who hold the same religion consider it equally binding, although those who have come in as prisoners have neglected that obligation just as much as they have neglected the commandment not to steal?—Just so.

4927. Mr. Downing.] Did you, in the gaol that we are now speaking of, ever find a Roman Catholic prisoner who was ignorant of the fact that it was an obligation upon him to attend Mass upon the Sunday?—There are some who are very ignorant indeed, who have scarcely ever attended a church when they were out of the prison, and who are not therefore so well acquainted with that obligation; but the number of such is few; most of the Catholic prisoners, bad as they are, are sufficiently acquainted with their duty, in respect of hearing Mass, to consider it a violation of the law of the Catholic Church if they do not attend. I may say that the bulk of the prisoners do know that it is their duty to attend Mass.

4928. My question is, have you ever found one single Catholic prisoner, I do not care how hardened he was, that did not know that it was an obligation upon him that he should attend Mass?—I have not turned my attention to that particular point in the instruction of prisoners. I should think that there might be some cases, although not many.

4929. You cannot say from your own knowledge that there has been one case of that kind?—I could not say that.

4930. Mr. Synan.] You were asked by an honourable Member about the prisoners being instructed; do people of themselves acquire naturally a knowledge of moral or religious principles, or are they instructed in them?—We are all instructed in what our duty is to God and man.

4931. Do people generally, no matter whether they are prisoners or not prisoners, all need instruction with regard to their religious duties and obligations?—Yes, they do.

4932. My honourable friend asked you whether this obligation did not spring from instruction; does not the knowledge of all moral obligations and religious principles spring from instruction?—There are certain principles that spring from a knowledge of our obligations and duties to God with which we are all pretty well acquainted, and with which we get acquainted without any positive instruction; but there are other things which do not depend so much upon natural law as upon positive law, such as hearing Mass upon the Sunday. We are not taught by our conscience that we are obliged to hear Mass upon the Sunday. The Church says we are to do so, and that it must be done in order to sanctify the Sunday. Therefore it will be necessary to instruct every man in that obligation, as it is not contained in the natural law, but is simply a law of the Church.

4933. But is it not necessary to instruct the conscience in moral principles as well as to instruct people in the positive laws and in obedience to those positive laws?—No doubt it is a duty to instruct them in both.

4934. Chairman.] Though prisoners might not be conscientious, would they nevertheless feel it as a grievance if they were not placed upon an equality with those who differed from them in religion?—They would feel it a very great injustice, and I have had experience of this myself. The prisoners both in Tothill Fields and Millbank were continually complaining of the unjust way in which they were treated. I believe that many of them were refractory and were disobedient, because they thought that both themselves and their priest were unjustly dealt with, but when they have come to know that we are dealt fairly with, and when we are upon a footing with the chaplain, they are disposed when treated justly to be obedient and respectful to those who have charge over them. They learn justice by seeing justice in others.

4935. That sense of justice and injustice is not dead in the breast of prisoners?—By no means, they have an instinctive sense of what is just and what is unjust.

4936. You are in favour of every prisoner being taught and instructed by a minister of his own persuasion?—Undoubtedly I am; I think it is the only way in which to instruct a prisoner.

The Reverend Vincent Zanetti; further Examined.

Rev. V. Zanetti. 19 May 1870.

4937. Chairman.] You wish to correct one or two statements you made on your last examination about which you find you were in error?—I wish to correct a statement contained in Number 4889. The Question is, "Did they attend the Protestant worship?" I was under the impression at the time I gave that answer, that the Roman Catholic prisoners who were registered as such, were allowed to go to the Protestant service in Millbank Prison in the earlier times, and on leaving the Committee I had reason to doubt whether I had sufficient ground for making that statement, and I therefore made inquiries at Millbank from the old officers, and I found that those who registered themselves as Roman Catholics were never allowed to go to the Protestant service. They were consistent from those early times, and, therefore, that which I stated about the creed register would also have to be modified. I should propose, with the permission of the honourable Committee, to alter my answer to Question 4889, by saying that I believe those prisoners, male and female, who registered themselves as Catholics, were not allowed by the prison rules to go to the Protestant service; and I must then take it for granted that all those who were registered as Roman Catholics went to the Roman Catholic service.

Captain Edmund Frederick Du Cane; Examined.

Captain Du Cane.

4938. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Are you a Director of Convict Prisons?—I am Chairman of the Directors.

4939. And as holding that office you are the first authority over all the 11 Government prisons?—I am the head of the Government Convict Prisons Department.

4940. Will you inform the Committee what are the rules with reference to the record of a prisoner's religion, which is made upon his entry into the prison?—When a prisoner is first received into a Government prison he is asked by the authorities of what religion he declares himself to be; his answer is recorded, and whatever it is, he attends the services of that religion. There is a certain notice given to the prisoners and posted about in the prison, telling them what are the rules, and the privileges they have according to the religion they belong to.

4941. Is this the notice to which you refer? "Notice concerning a prisoner's religion." 1. Prisoners will be required, on their first reception into a Government prison, to declare of what religion they are. 2. Those who declare themselves to be Protestants will have the opportunity afforded them of being visited by the chaplain and Scripture reader, and will attend the services of the Church of England, or will be visited by, and attend the services of a Protestant minister of their own denomination. 3. Those who declare themselves to be Roman Catholics will have the opportunity afforded them of being visited by the Roman Catholic priest, and will attend religious services performed by him. 4. Prisoners are distinctly to understand that when they have once declared of what religion they are, no change will be afterwards allowed, unless upon satisfactory proof, after careful inquiry by the authorities that the change is real." Then follow the instructions with reference to the entry. "1. When the above notice has been read and explained, and each prisoner understands it, he will declare whether he is Protestant or Roman Catholic. 2. The governor or deputy governor will then cause to be entered in the separate reception ward book, opposite each name, the following remarks:—A. B. has read, or has heard read and explained the contents of the notice respecting a prisoner's religion. A. B. is a Protestant (or) is a Roman Catholic. 3. The entries will be made by a clerk from the governor's office, and will be signed by the governor or deputy governor, and countersigned by the clerk." Have you ever had any complaints made to you with respect to the working of that notice?—Certainly not.

4942. Are the changes frequent?—No, they are not now; men used at one time to apply rather often to be allowed to change their religion after they had once declared it; but it was thought that those changes did not very often proceed from good motives, and now a very careful ful inquiry is made, in case a man does wish to change, to find out how he has been brought up; but any change is discouraged as much as possible.

4943. Has the Roman Catholic priest free access to the prisoners of his persuasion?—Certainly; he has a key of the cell in which the Catholic prisoner is, and the Protestant minister has no right to go into it at all.

4944. Is there any distinctive mark over the cell?—There is a little label with the letters "R. C." written on it, so that no mistake can arise.

4945. You have with you a number of rules applicable to the religious instruction of Roman Catholic prisoners, have you not?—These are the rules that were authorised by Sir George Grey when the payment of Roman Catholic priests was first introduced in convict establishments.

4946. I will read them: "Convict Prisons. Rules applicable to the Religious Instruction of Roman Catholic Prisoners. So long as an allowance is granted by Parliament for the religious instruction of Roman Catholic prisoners, the following rules shall be in force: 1st. A Roman Catholic priest may be nominated by the Secretary of State to visit Roman Catholic prisoners, such nomination to continue in force during the pleasure of the Secretary of State. 2nd. Prisoners will be required, on their first reception into a Government prison, to declare of what religion they are. 3rd. Those who declare themselves to be Protestants will be visited by the chaplain, and will attend the services of the Church of England. 4th. Those who declare themselves to be Roman Catholics will be visited by the Roman Catholic priest, and will attend the Roman Catholic services performed by him. 5th. Prisoners are distinctly to understand that when they have once declared of what religion they are, as a general rule, no change will be afterwards allowed. Should exceptional cases arise, they will be carefully inquired into by the prison authorities, who will report the facts, and their opinions, to the directors. 6th. The visiting priest shall be subject to no interference by the prison authorities in strictly spiritual matters, but he must not interfere with the established rules and regulations of the prison, or the routine of discipline and labour. He will confer, whenever necessary, with the governor, or (in the case of a female prison) with the lady superintendent, on all matters connected with his duty; and, in the event of any question arising on which a difference of opinion exists, it must be at once referred for the consideration of the visiting director. 7th. The priest will have access to the reception ward book, and facilities will be afforded him for the performance of Divine worship, and reading daily prayers, at such hours and under such arrangements as may be consistent with the observance of the rules and the discipline and order of the prison. 8th. Subject to the general arrangements for the discipline and safe custody of the prisoners, the priest will have access to the male Roman Catholic prisoners in their cells, and be furnished with a key for this purpose. A proper place will be provided for the visiting priest to meet the female Roman Catholic prisoners for the purpose of attending to their spiritual instruction. 9th. The prison chaplains and Scripture readers will not visit Roman Catholic prisoners, neither will the Roman Catholic priest visit Protestant prisoners. 10th. The teaching in school shall be confined to secular subjects, as regards Roman Catholic prisoners. 11th. The letters to and from Roman Catholic prisoners will be read by the governor and deputy governor only. 12th. Prisoners' library books objected to by the visiting priest will not be issued to Roman Catholic prisoners"?—Those are the rules which Sir George Grey laid down.

4947. Have you found anything in those rules which in any way clashes with the good order and discipline of the prison and its management?—Nothing at all.

4948. I will ask you as the head authority, whether you have always found a good feeling existing between the clergymen of the different denominations within the prison?—Certainly, and the priests, I am bound to say, have always given every assistance towards the carrying on of the duties of the prison.

4949. There are 11 Government prisons, I think, under your control?—There are.

4950. Is it not the case that you commit Roman Catholic prisoners to a certain number only of those gaols?—We have Roman Catholic prisoners in nine of them, and wherever there are Roman Catholic prisoners there is a priest.

4951. Therefore, the Roman Catholic prisoners committed to the convict prisons are in every respect, with reference to the receipt of religious instruction, upon an equality with the Protestant prisoners?—Certainly.

4952. With regard to the pay of the Roman Catholic priest, how is that regulated?—The pay has been varied from time to time since the Roman Catholic chaplains were first appointed. The original arrangement was, that a certain sum, namely 500 l. a-year, was authorised in the Estimates to be distributed amongst the different prisons, and that resulted in three of them being paid 100 l. a-year, two of them 75 l. a-year, and the other 30 l. a-year; that was in 1862.

4953. That was found inadequate, was not it, after a time?—In 1866 that sum was thought to be insufficient, and then it was raised, so that three of the priests got 182 l. 10 s., one 136 l. 17 s., and one received 109 l. 10 s., and another 30 l. Then in the year beginning with the 1st of April 1869, they were all put upon a uniform rate of pay, amounting to 182 l. 10 s. a-year; and a certain sum, 26 l. 10 s. a-year for house allowance, that is the uniform pay with two exceptions, viz.: one of the priests this year has had his salary raised by 25 l., on account of the number of Roman Catholic prisoners being rather increased, and the other priest who has a small number of prisoners to attend to, only gets the sum of 30 l. a-year.

4954. That is a kind of special gratuity for services performed, is it not?—Certainly; in that case the priest only comes in and visits occasionally, and does not occupy all his time in the prison.

4955. He has a cure of souls in the neighbourhood as well, has he not?—He has a cure of souls in the neighbourhood.

4956. Will you give the Committee the average number of prisoners of all classes in all your 11 prisons throughout the year?—At Millbank this year we have an average number of 1,185, of whom about 360 are females. At Parkhurst, the average number is 450; at Pentonville, 798; at Portland, 1,540; at Dartmoor, 1,030; at

Captain Du Cane.

19 May 1870.

at Portsmouth, 1,250; at Chatham, 1,600; at Woking, 701 males; Brixton, 566, also males; at Fulham (female prison) the average number is 330; and at Woking Female Prison, there are 700.

4957. Have you the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners in each of those prisons?—The number of Roman Catholic male prisoners shown on a Return made in December 1869, is as follows: In Millbank, 385 males, and 54 females; at Portsmouth, 559 Roman Catholic male prisoners; at Chatham, 138; at Dartmoor, 228; at Woking Male Prison, 160; at Portland, 287; at Woking Female Prison, 286; and at Fulham, which is also a Female Prison, there are 30. (A Return, corrected to 23rd May, is appended.)

4958. To Parkhurst and Brixton, you do not commit Roman Catholic prisoners, I believe?—There are no Roman Catholic prisoners sent there, and therefore there is no priest appointed.

4959. Looking at the disproportion of the numbers in the various prisons, do you consider that that equality of pay is fair?—The priest has got work which keeps him entirely employed at work at all those places, and you would be liable to a variation in the number according to circumstances.

4960. At Fulham, where there are 30 prisoners, the priest has only a gratuity?—He is not fully employed, and therefore he is only allowed 30 l. a year.

4961. Do you give that as a kind of capitation grant?—No, not at all; it has been fixed at that rate; I do not quite know why it was put at 30 l., but it was thought sufficient.

4962. Take for instance, Portsmouth, with 559 Catholic prisoners, and Dartmoor with only about half the number; is the amount of work performed by the Catholic priest at the one, equal to that performed by him at the other?—No, I should say not. We might easily put more prisoners in Dartmoor without overworking the priest, but those prisons are all for special purposes. Dartmoor contains a special class of invalids, and if they are not invalids of that class, they are not sent there.

4963. At Chatham there are 138 Catholic prisoners; I suppose that number is enough to employ the whole time of the priest?—He could certainly take more, but you could not have the work done without employing a priest; and he could not do very much else beyond looking after those prisoners.

4964. If that is so, does it not appear to you, that for the larger numbers 559 and 385, a little larger allowance might be necessary. The pay varied with the numbers before 1869; then all were raised equally to the highest rate?—At Portsmouth, where there are 559, the priest does get more; those things are regulated by fixed rules approved by the Treasury; when the number of prisoners increases beyond 1,000, all the superior officers may get an extra allowance; at Portsmouth this rule comes into force, and the priest gets an extra 25 l. in consequence.

4965. Have you had any complaints of insufficiency of pay from any of the chaplains?—I think all officers want more as a general rule.

4966. But specially from Roman Catholic chaplains?—No; their salaries have all been raised, and I think they get now as much as they would get in their ordinary employment; I should think that they were rather good appointments.

4967. Have any of those gentlemen assistants or any pay allowed for assistants?—No; there is a schoolmaster who is a Roman Catholic, who gives them a little assistance when it is necessary, but that is not ordinarily the case.

4968. Is it the case, that in the school only secular instruction is given?—Certainly; the religious instruction is entirely under the priest, and the school instruction is entirely secular; in fact, it is of so very elementary a character that it could not be otherwise.

4969. You have had no complaints of any element of a controversial character being introduced into this instruction?—No, certainly not.

4970. Chairman.] You say that there is a good feeling existing between the officers in consequence of this change in respect of the recognition of the Roman Catholic priest as a salaried officer of the prison?—I think that there is always a good feeling between the officers, and we desire to get men who will perpetuate that feeling.

4971. But you are of opinion that giving the Catholic priest a status makes him more certain of his position, and more capable of exercising a beneficial influence?—No doubt it does.

4972. Your name is appended, is it not, to a report published in 1864?—Yes, it is.

4973. What time previous to that was the Catholic clergyman a paid and recognised officer?—From 1862 or 1863 they have received pay, but they were not all paid upon the same scale until 1868.

4974. But in 1862 was the first time that the Catholic clergyman was paid?—He was not paid at all before that.

4975. From 1862 he has been paid and recognised as an officer of the prison, has he not?—Certainly.

4976. In that report of 1864 there is this passage:—"The effect upon the convicts has been marked, and the recognition of their claim to the ministrations of a clergyman of their own persuasion has been a source of great improvement in their outward conduct;" do you still hold to that opinion?—Certainly.

4977. Will you explain to the Committee in what manner that improvement has been manifested?—Their prison offences have decreased, and they are more amenable to management, and more contented.

4978. Will you explain to the Committee a little more fully, what caused you to form that opinion?—The number of offences committed by Roman Catholic prisoners was less when they were placed under proper religious instruction, and religious influences, than before, when they felt themselves, it may be, neglected; I do not know exactly what it was, but it was remarked among the officers that they did behave themselves better from that time.

4979. You think that if the old system were still continued, and the Roman Catholic clergyman were merely tolerated, that good effect could not be produced upon the prisoners which would be produced by a priest who was recognised as an officer?—I should not like to say that it was on account of the different status of the Catholic clergyman, but on account of his being there at all. Before that time he was not necessarily there at all, and I do not think that the prisoners knew or considered very much whether there was any particular status given to him or not.

4980. This report states that "this measure has been one attended with unmixed good results;"

sults;" do you agree with that statement?—Certainly.

4981. Are you, after an experience of a great number of years, ready to confirm that opinion?—Certainly; I should be very sorry to say anything against the system which has been adopted.

4982. The more you see of it the more you are convinced that it is the right system?—There can be no doubt about it.

4983. You have already stated that when prisoners desired to change their recorded religion, inquiries were made as to how they had been brought up?—That is so.

4984. I suppose you were anxious to avoid any interference with the religion of the prisoners?—Certainly. Prisoners have been known to give in a religion which was not their true religion, and if there has not appeared to be any trifling in the matter, one would naturally desire that they should be allowed to revert to the religion they have been brought up in.

4985. I may take it that you are of opinion that any interference, direct or indirect, or any inducement, passive or active, to change the faith of a prisoner would be unfair?—Certainly it would be unfair and undesirable in every way.

4986. Assuming for a moment that in your prisons there was no Catholic service, and that the Catholics were allowed to attend the Protestant service, and in fact, could attend no other; do you not think that that would be an inducement for them to waver in their faith?—I have no doubt that many Roman Catholic prisoners would give in their names as Protestants for the purpose of attending the Protestant worship, because they do not like being left in their cells.

4987. You know something of Parkhurst Prison, I presume?—I do.

4988. Do you know Mrs. Sarah Gibson?—I do.

4989. She is a very intelligent woman; I believe she is the lady superintendent, is she not?—She was the Superintendent of the Parkhurst Prison.

4990. She speaks very highly of the conduct of the prisoners at Divine worship, and of the effect of religious instruction upon the most depraved?—Certainly; I quite agree in that.

4991. Mr. O'Reilly.] Have you many Protestant Dissenters in the prison under your care?—We do not record anything of that kind; it is simply put down as "Protestant," or "Roman Catholic," in the record which is made.

4992. But I suppose if a prisoner wished to be recorded separately as a Protestant Dissenter, and objected to attending the service of the Church of England, you would record his denomination?—At Chatham there are a certain number of prisoners who are Presbyterians, and have a minister who comes to them, and does a certain amount of service for them.

4993. You have had no experience of any other class of Protestant prisoners who wish to be considered separate from the Church of England?—There are no others with us.

4994. If there were any others, you would no doubt have had it made known to you?—I think I should.

4996. And of course that fixed sum should be a sum that would be adequate for the work that the priest has to do, and to maintain his position as a gentleman?—Certainly, it should be about what a man of his profession would get in any similar employment outside.

4997. I suppose 30 l. a year for a gentleman educated as a Roman Catholic clergyman, if he had not a cure of souls as well, would not be adequate to that purpose?—I do not think that it would be adequate of itself; but in the case of Fulham it is only a gratuity for a portion of his work.

4998. Where the prisoners were numerous capitation would be a good principle, as it would afford an adequate salary?—Yes.

4999. You were asked, with respect to Catholic prisoners attending Protestant worship, do prisoners consider being kept in their cells as a kind of punishment?—I think they look to the chance of getting out of their cells and escaping from solitude and so on as an advantage which they do not like to be debarred from.

5000. And do you consider that an extension to the ordinary prisons of the country of the same system which prevails in the Government prisons, from your experience of it, would have a beneficial effect?—I think it would, certainly.

5001. Lord Henley.] You spoke of changes in the religion amongst the prisoners as at one time having been very frequent, which you thought very undesirable; can you tell the Committee from what motives those changes arose?—The prisoners gave very various reasons; one man would say that he was induced by the fellow-prisoner who was with him to say he was this or that; another man would say that he wanted to go to a certain prison, where he heard that prisoners of that religion were sent; various motives were given, such as influence prisoners.

5002. In fact, founded upon anything except real conscientious objections?—I think so.

5003. But it did not arise from the admission to those prisoners of a minister of the church to which they did not belong?—No; because they declared their religion when they came in before anyone had had access to them.

5004. But I understand you to say that it was after they had made that declaration that they had made that change?—Yes; but it did not arise from the access of the minister of any other religion to them.

5005. It probably arose from the persuasion of other prisoners?—Yes; there are some men who say they have heard from their friends that they will never see them again if they give a false declaration of their religion, and that therefore they want to make a change, and various reasons of that sort are alleged.

5006. In those large prisons the number of Catholic prisoners has never fallen to a very small number, I presume, or below 100?—We generally keep them up to an average number.

5007. You have not had the number falling to 10 or 20?—Thirty is the smallest number, and that is at Fulham.

5008. Is there a Catholic priest from an establishment near, who can attend at the prison?—There

Captain Du Cane.

19 May 1870.

—There is a priest with a cure of souls in the neighbourhood, and it is only a small addition to his work to attend to the prison.

5009. If there were only a small number of prisoners belonging to the Roman Catholic religion, and no establishment of Roman Catholic priests near the prison, do you think that those prisoners would be taken to some other prisons attended by a priest?—Certainly, we should do so.

5010. I understand you to state that you allow Catholic worship in your prisons?—Yes; in each prison there is a chapel.

5011. And the fittings up for that chapel are found by the authorities, are they not?—Yes, they are.

5012. The ministers are not called upon to find them out of their own pockets?—I do not think that the vestments and those things are supplied by the Government. If a man wants something beyond a certain scale, there is no objection to his having it, but the Government are not responsible for it.

5013. Do you know of what the fittings up consist?—They consist of a tabernacle and an altar, and a super-altar, and candlesticks; I could give you a list of them.

5014. The Committee have been inquiring about the cost of the necessary appliances, perhaps you can give us some information upon that point?—I could not say what would be the cost of them, because we make all those things ourselves, so that the cost of them to us would be very little.

5015. You have stated that in all the large prisons there is a resident Catholic priest who has money allowed him for house rent?—In all prisons, except at Fulham, there is a resident priest who has a salary.

5016. Lord Enfield.] Have you ever visited any county prisons; prisons under the supervision of the justices?—Yes, I have.

5017. Do you think that there is anything in the discipline of county prisons which would prevent the same provisions being carried out as in Government prisons?—No; it is simply to provide the room and the man.

5018. Therefore, if the justices were willing, there would be nothing to prevent the service being performed in the county, just as it is in the Government prisons?—I think not.

5019. Mr. Talbot.] A noble Lord asked you the cost of the chapel fittings, and I think you said that you could not give it?—I could not say offhand, but it is very small, as we make the things ourselves.

5020. If you make them yourselves, they could make them in the county prisons, could they not?—Perhaps they have not the same mechanics as we have.

5021. My right honourable friend asked you the statistics of the number of Roman Catholics in each of those prisons, and the salaries paid to the priests. In all the convict prisons are there two separate chapels?—In all except at Portsmouth, and there they use the same chapel for both.

5022. Do you think it is a good arrangement for the same chapel to be used for both services?—I think a separate chapel for both is preferable.

5023. Mr. Guest.] Have you known any cases of prisoners wishing to see a minister of their own denomination, whether Jews or Dissenters?—We have got an establishment for the Jews.

5024. Do you send for a Jewish Rabbi when a prisoner wants to see him?—The Rabbi attends, and does the service regularly. The Jewish prisoners are all concentrated at Portsmouth.

5025. Does he receive a payment for that service?—No; I think he does it voluntarily.

5026. I suppose if any prisoner wished to see a minister of his own religion, there would be no objection?—Certainly not, if any minister chose to come, but we cannot force a minister to come.

5027. You stated that you did not see any reason why the two services should not be conducted with the same discipline existing, as now exists in the county prisons, but cannot you conceive that it might be rendered necessary to have an increase of staff?—No doubt it is quite possible that it would have that effect; there must be more officers on duty on Sundays if there are two services going on at the same time.

5028. If they did not go on at the same time, what would you say then?—Then the officers would be harder worked, and it comes to the same thing.

5029. And therefore it would require an increase of staff in any case?—I think it would do so.

5030. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] But you think it is necessary that religious instruction should be given to all the prisoners?—Certainly. I think there is no doubt that it is a good thing that prisoners should be instructed in their own religion.

5031. Then, if from insufficiency of staff the discipline of any prison has prevented that instruction from being given, what would you recommend?—I think the staff ought to be increased; the expense could not be very great.

5032. You would not visit upon the prisoner the laches of the prison authorities in not having employed a sufficient staff?—No, certainly not.

5033. Chairman.] How many Jews are there in the prison of which you spoke?—I do not think there are more than 10 or 12.

5034. How often does the Rabbi visit them?—I think he comes every Sabbath, and then they have a great number of other feast days.

5035. Does he reside in Portsmouth?—Yes.

5036. Is it usual for Dissenters to ask for ministers of their own faith?—No, I think not.

5037. Mr. Guest.] But are you not obliged if a prisoner wished to see a minister to send for him, according to the Act of Parliament?—If the minister will come I think we should be bound to do so, but of course if he does not choose to come, we cannot force him by any power that we have got.

5038. Is there no way of overcoming that difficulty of increasing the staff; for it appears to me that if you increase the staff, you increase it only for duties on the Sunday, and the warders would have nothing to do upon the week days, or rather you would have too great a staff upon the week days?—I do not think that the increase in the staff would be so great as all that. I think the point would be that the officers would be harder worked upon Sundays, and that you would have to consider that in giving them leave on other days; if there are two services going on you cannot give so many leave on Sundays, but I do not think there would be any great difficulty about that.

5039. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Do you know of any application having been made by Protestant Dissenting ministers for a salary?—I think there was Captain Du Cane.

19 May 1870.

was an application from a Wesleyan minister for permission to visit without being paid, and there is a Presbyterian minister paid at Chatham now.

5040. What answer was given to that application of the Wesleyan minister?—He was not allowed to visit.

5041. That answer was given entirely with reference to the carrying on of the discipline of the military prison?—It was on the ground that there are three different classes of prisoners in Millbank, who must be kept separate; and it was impossible to carry out so many different arrangements for religious services under such circumstances.

5042. Mr. Guest.] Is a Presbyterian minister paid at Millbank?—He is an army chaplain, and he is paid as such, and he is also paid at Chatham.

5043. How many Presbyterian prisoners have you at Chatham?—About 30 or 40.

5044. How much does the Presbyterian minister receive for his services?—He gets about 30 l. a year.

5045. That is about 1 l. a man?—Yes, it happens to be so, but it was not fixed at that amount, for that reason.

5046. Lord Enfield.] Are there Roman Catholic warders in any prison?—Yes; they are not chosen as such; they are appointed just as they come, without reference to their religion.

5047. There is no selection made, considering the number of Roman Catholic prisoners in the prison, in order to get Roman Catholic warders?—Not the least; we take a man just according to his ability and character.

Colonel Edmund Yeamans Walcot Henderson, called in; and Examined.

Col. Henderson.

5048. Chairman.] You have heard the evidence of Captain Du Cane, have you not?—I have.

5049. Do you quite agree with that evidence?—I agree with it entirely; Captain Du Cane and myself worked together for many years, and those regulations which you have read we drew up together, of course in conjunction with the other directors, and we are entirely agreed upon the whole subject.

5050. You quite agree that the system of paying the Catholic clergyman, and giving him a status as a prison officer, has worked no evil, but good?—Quite so; that has always been my opinion; I had very considerable experience in Western Australia before I became Surveyor General of Prisons, and my idea has always been that Protestants and Roman Catholics should have the same opportunities of religious instruction, and that the one should be placed upon precisely the same footing as the other; and I have never seen anything but good result from its being so.

5051. I would only ask you one other question: if the system has worked well, as you state, in the prisons under the control of Government, is there any reason why it should not work well in ordinary county prisons?—None whatever.

5052. And are you of opinion that the same system ought to be applied to them?—Most decidedly.

5053. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] These reports which the honourable Chairman has read were drawn up by you and Mr. Du Cane, and you entirely coincide with him in the views there stated?—Yes; those were reports drawn up by myself in conjunction with him and the other directors.

The Right Hon. Sir Walter Crofton, c.b., called in; and Examined.

Right Hon. Sir W. Crofton, c.b.

23 May 1870.

5054. Chairman.] I believe you have been connected for a very long time with the administration of prisons in England and in Ireland?—I was Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons in Ireland from 1854 to 1862. Subsequently, at different periods, I have been employed by the Home Office to assist in the development of the Prisons Act of 1865, and last year as a Commissioner with regard to prison matters and reformatory schools in Ireland.

5055. So that I may presume you have sufficient practical knowledge of the working of the Prisons Act in the two countries?—Yes, I think so.

5056. Are you acquainted with the general objects of this Committee?—Yes, I am.

5057. Will you state to the Committee what is your notion of its object?—My notion of its object is, that with regard to the Prison Ministers Act of 1863, it is desired to make the permissive clause compulsory, in consequence of all the gaols in the country not taking advantage of the permissive power contained in that clause.

5058. Will you first state, in reference to Ireland, what is the system adopted in convict prisons there; is it the same as that adopted in similar prisons in England, namely, that with regard to religious instruction prisoners of both persuasions are placed upon a perfect equality?—In the convict prisons in Ireland they are certainly placed upon a perfect equality; and in the county prisons, I should say that that is also the case, generally speaking.

5059. With reference to the county prisons, is it not within your knowledge that by law, under the Grand Jury Act, there is a Catholic chaplain and a Protestant chaplain in every gaol in Ireland?—So I should consider under the 7th of George the Fourth, and I believe that there are such officers in every gaol.

5060. Have you found any evil resulting in Ireland from the carrying out of that system of equality, by giving a prisoner the advantage of the ministrations of a minister of the faith in which he has been brought up?—On the contrary, I have found very great advantage to result from it. I will, with the permission of the Committee, read an extract which I have made from the Irish convict rules with regard to the chaplain, which will show what is expected from him in the way of co-operation: the fifth rule, relating to the chaplain, is, "He shall endeavour, by all means in his power, to obtain an intimate knowledge of the disposition of each prisoner under his care, and is expected to allot a considerable portion of his time to visiting, admonishing, and instructing such prisoners." This is not the Irish rule only; this is copied from the chaplain's rules at Pentonville. Pentonville Prison, as we all know, is the model prison in this country, in which the system of separation was tried for the first time: for many years it was under a very considerable amount of watchfulness. A Commission was appointed to look into all matters which would tend to the amendment of criminals, and I suppose that no system which has ever been established anywhere has had such careful supervision as the Pentonville system had when it was initiated; this was one of the rules for chaplains, and I wish to point it out, because it shows, after much watchfulness and care, what was thought necessary, and how much was expected that the chaplain would do for the amendment of prisoners.

5061. In order that a clergyman should exercise influence over a prisoner, he must, according to that rule, acquire a knowledge of his character and disposition; do you think it is possible, from your knowledge of the nature of men in a prison, that a clergyman of a different persuasion from a prisoner would be able to acquire that intimate knowledge of his character and disposition that his own clergyman could do?—Certainly not.

5062. Then do you think that his admonition and instruction would be attended with the same advantage to the prisoner as that of his own clergyman?—Certainly not.

5063. Are you of opinion that religious instruction in a prison is really an active means, or an influencing means, of reformation?—I have always found it so.

5064. Have you found it so from your own experience in Ireland?—Certainly, and I may state state that I have had the most active and beneficial co-operation on the part of the chaplains of all persuasions.

5065. Would you apply the same opinion with reference to your experience in this country?—I have not had a sufficient insight into the results of religious instruction in this country to enable me to say so, but I cannot see why it should not be so. The class of Roman Catholic prisoners are mostly Irish, and I cannot see why they should not be susceptible of the same improvement here as they are in Ireland.

5066. And would you say from your knowledge of their circumstances that they come to this country under circumstances of peculiar disadvantage, and are not as amenable to religious influences as they might be in Ireland, and that therefore they would be under the necessity of having more special religious advantages?—I believe so; I think you would find that that is the experience obtained at the borough gaol at Liverpool, in which prison the Act is carried out. They have a very large Roman Catholic population, I should think something like 60 per cent. of the whole number of prisoners; it is a very large and good gaol.

5067. Do you know anything of the working of the system at Manchester and Salford?—Yes, I know the gaol. Mr. Hibbert, the Member for Oldham, is the chairman of the justices at Salford, and I know that they have thought it desirable to have a salaried Roman Catholic chaplain there.

5068. Is the adoption of that system working satisfactorily there?—I understand so, perfectly. I think that they have not very long adopted it. Then, again, there is the case of Preston, in the north. The authorities of the prison have published rules for their Roman Catholic chaplain. I do not know whether the Committee have examined anyone from Preston, in order to ascertain the system which is carried out there; but I have their rules here with regard to chaplains, and I can refer to them, if the Committee desire.

5069. That is a county gaol, is it not?—Yes.

5070. The authorities of which have got permission by these Acts to appoint a Catholic clergyman, and to pay him?—Yes, and they do pay him. At Preston the number of prisoners would be about 439, and about 142 out of that number would be Roman Catholics. I see that a Roman Catholic chaplain is appointed there, at a salary of 100 l. a year. Then, after the chaplain's rules come the Roman Catholic minister's rules, which are printed, and they give his duties in so many clauses; one of which, in particular, says, "He shall see the sick, pay special attention to juvenile offenders, and visit the prisoners confined in punishment cells;" but the Committee will, on reference, see that the whole routine is the same as is expected from the Protestant chaplain.

5071. Now let us go to the discipline of the prison; is it within your experience that appointing a Catholic clergyman, and giving him a status as an officer of the prison, interferes in any possible way with the discipline of the establishment?—Am I to understand that your question refers to England.

5072. To any prison within your experience?—As far as Ireland is concerned, I can say with confidence that it has not interfered in any way with the discipline of the prison?—With regard to England, my province has been principally to attend to the labour department, so that I cannot speak to that point with such certainty, but I do not see why it should interfere.

5073. Do you imagine that there would be any special difference between an English and an Irish gaol, so that what was attended with no evil or disadvantage in one country, would be attended with evil or disadvantage in the other?—I cannot see that there would.

5074. Do you think that it would be advisable to give the Roman Catholic chaplain the status of an officer of the prison?—It is given in the rules which I have quoted; the officers of the gaol are enjoined to treat him with the respect due to the Protestant clergyman.

5075. When the Roman Catholic clergyman is in that position which gives him confidence and authority, are you of opinion that it rather assists him in the administration of his duty than otherwise?—Clearly so.

5076. Now with reference to the prisoners, do you imagine that prisoners are so insensible to every feeling of justice and fair play, that they would not feel a certain sense of annoyance if they found their own clergyman simply tolerated and allowed to come in at times under certain restrictions, while the other clergyman had all the rights of a prison officer?—I can easily imagine that they would be very sensitive upon the subject.

5077. And you are of opinion that it would be better to allow no sense of injustice or wrong to dwell in the mind of a prisoner?—Certainly.

5078. Will you kindly give your opinion to the Committee as to what your advice would be upon this matter?—On looking through the return which was printed last February, I think upon the motion made by the honourable Chairman of this Committee, I observe that there are a very large number of gaols having a great proportion of Roman Catholics in which they have already a Roman Catholic chaplain; there are some few exceptions, but where the number amounts to a large proportion of the whole number, I observe that they have both Roman Catholic chaplains and salaried Roman Catholic chaplains.

5079. Do you observe that in four prisons within the Metropolitan district the Roman Catholic chaplain is permitted to attend, and that the authorities take his services, but in no instance do they pay him?—I have observed that.

5080. Do you think that it is a fair or a wise thing that a clergyman should be asked to give his services, and not be paid?—I can see no reason why the Roman Catholic chaplain should not be paid just as the Protestant chaplain is paid if he performs his duties.

5081. Mr. Downing.] What is the salary of the Protestant chaplain at Preston?—According to the Return, I see it is 350 l.

5082. The Committee are aware that you have had a good deal of experience in Ireland?—I have.

5083. Are you aware that Protestant chaplains are paid in the gaols in Ireland, where there are very few Protestant prisoners?—Yes.

5084. Are you able to say what is the smallest number of Protestant prisoners in any gaol where a chaplain is paid?—I should think, in the county and borough gaols in Ireland, as regards the great majority of them, it would be found that the number of Protestant prisoners at one time would be under 10.

Right Hon. Sir W. Crofton, C.B.

23 May 1870.

5085. Would that observation refer to so large a county prison as Cork?—Not to Cork, because Cork is a garrison, and therefore there would be a larger proportion of Protestants there.

5086. Would you be able to direct the attention of the Committee to the gaol which you now have in your mind, as containing only 10 Protestant prisoners, and yet being attended by a Protestant chaplain?—I could not direct the attention of the Committee to a particular gaol, but I should say that the great majority of them would have under 10 Protestant prisoners.

5087. In those cases where the number of Protestant prisoners is under 10, are you able to say what would be the salary paid to the Protestant chaplain?—I am not able to give the amount; it would vary.

5088. Are you at all acquainted with the administration of the Poor Law in Ireland?—Yes, to a certain extent; not specially.

5089. I suppose you are aware that Protestant chaplains are paid to attend the Poor Law unions in Ireland, although there are scarcely any Protestants in them?—That is so.

5090. And that where a large proportion of the guardians are Roman Catholics?—Yes.

5091. In your opinion ought not the gentleman who attends the gaol to devote the greater part of his time to the reclamation of his prisoners, and the other duties which a clergyman is called upon to perform?—Clearly; the rules in Ireland direct that he should do so; I have just handed in the rules of the Preston gaol, and you will find that in that case the justices do direct the attention of the Roman Catholic minister specially to juveniles and others, of whom they have stronger hopes of amendment.

5092. I presume that the Roman Catholic chaplain, in gaols where he is paid, is bound, at least once a day, to pay a visit to the gaol?—That would depend very much upon the arrangements of the gaol. I should say that he ought certainly to attend three times a week, it just depends upon the arrangements which the visiting justices make with him.

5093. And where there is a Roman Catholic clergyman, I presume you would consider that he should be paid as much as would be sufficient to keep him as a gentleman?—Yes; certainly.

5094. And that his remuneration should not depend upon the number of Roman Catholic prisoners there were in the gaol?—I think it should to a certain extent.

5095. But not entirely?—Not entirely; I think that principle is generally recognised.

5096. You would consider that a Roman Catholic chaplain appointed to a gaol ought at least to receive such an annual sum as would maintain him in life according to the position in which he was placed?—It would depend very much upon local circumstances, such as whether he had other duties to perform.

5097. I am speaking only of those large gaols?—In one of these large gaols where his time would be principally devoted to the prison, no doubt that would be the right plan to adopt.

5098. Mr. Synan.] What is the body that presents for the Roman Catholic chaplain's salary in Ireland?—The grand jury, I believe.

5099. Those are magistrates, are they not?—Yes, those are magistrates.

5100. That is substantially the same body which refuses salaries for the Roman Catholic chaplains in this country, is it not?—Yes.

5101. Are you aware of any prison in Ireland in which there is a Protestant chaplain, although for the previous six months there was not a Protestant prisoner there at all?—I am not aware of any such case.

5102. But it is not improbable, I suppose, that such may be the case?—It is not improbable, because there may have been an influx of prisoners at any time, or there may have been a corresponding absence of them.

5103. You spoke of some gaols in which there were less than 10 Protestant prisoners, did you not?—Yes.

5104. There may be some in which there are none at all, or in which the average would be under 10, may there not?—No doubt.

5105. Do you know the gaol for the county of Limerick?—Yes, I do.

5106. Do you know that there is a Protestant chaplain there?—There is.

5107. Did you ascertain whether there was a Protestant prisoner there at the time you were there?—I do not know. I did not go there to ascertain that point.

5108. Do you not think that the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain would contribute rather than otherwise to the discipline of the prison?—I quite think so. I see every reason why it should contribute to the maintenance of discipline and good order in the prison.

5109. You stated to the Committee that where the number of Catholic prisoners is large, the capitation principle would give an adequate salary to the chaplain?—Yes, I think that ought to be a principal element in the consideration, but not the only element.

5110. Where the numbers were large it would give an adequate salary to the chaplain, but where the number was small, under 15 for example, that would not be a fair principle to adopt?—No, it would not.

5111. We have had some evidence before the Committee, with reference to Catholic worship on the Sunday; we have found some prisons where the authorities refuse it; do you think, from your experience, that it would interfere with the discipline of the prison, or add to the expense, if there was a Roman Catholic service at a different hour upon the Sunday from the Protestant service in the same chapel?—Probably it would be necessary to increase the staff of warders to carry that out; that is the only expense that I can see would be likely to result.

5112. Are you acquainted with the borough gaol at Liverpool?—Yes, I am.

5113. Might not the same staff of officers be sufficient in some cases?—It would very much depend upon whether the actual staff in the prison was a large one; in some of the gaols you will find that there is a very liberal staff, and in such a case this arrangement might not cause an extra expense; but where the staff was a small one, it would be necessary to increase it by a warder or two for the purpose.

5114. Where the staff was liberal and adequate it would not add to the expense?—I think not.

5115. Sir J. Trelawny.] Supposing a case where there were only 10 Catholics and several hundred Protestants, I understand that in your judgment the value of the appointmentin such a case should have some reference to the number?—That is my opinion.

5116. Can you make any suggestion to the Committee with reference to the mode in which the the Catholic prisoners should be provided for, such as that where the number were under 10, there should be a transference to other prisoners, or any other mode that might suggest itself to you?—I think there would have to be a special arrangement in a case of that kind, between the magistrates and the Roman Catholic chaplain.

5117. But would you give the Roman Catholic chaplain a salary equal to what would support him as a gentleman, supposing there were only 10 Roman Catholic prisoners?—It is very difficult to define what would support him as a gentleman; I think that that must be a matter, as I have said, of a special arrangement between the visiting justices and the chaplain.

5118. But there is no chaplain at first: I am taking a case in which the chaplain is not yet appointed; you can have no arrangement with the chaplain, unless the chaplain has been constituted?—But they might make an arrangement with any Roman Catholic chaplain in the locality. I think that must be a matter of agreement between the visiting justices and the chaplain, upon the best terms that they can make to satisfy him. I do not think that any individual can lay down what would be a proper salary for a minister with 10 or 15 or 20 prisoners under his charge; it must be a matter of contract.

5119. There would be many cases in which there would be no more than 10 Baptists or 10 Independents in a prison?—There would not, generally, be so many, I think.

5120. They might, possibly, ask for their minister in the same way, supposing a Catholic minister were appointed for a number under 10?—It is very unlikely that you would ever find so large a number as 10 Dissenters of different creeds in a prison; exceptional cases must be a matter of contract; we all know that it would depend very much upon the locality; there might be two or three Roman Catholic clergymen there with other work, and then they would take a lower salary than they would do under other circumstances. I can hardly give an opinion with reference to what should be the salary for 10 or any smaller number of prisoners; it must, I think, and as I have already said, be a case of special contract.

5121. Mr. Guest.] I understood you to say that where the number ranges from 10 to 15 or 20, you think it ought to be a matter of contract between the visiting justices and any Roman Catholic priest residing in the neighbourhood; where would you fix and limit the contract with the visiting justices; for if this is to be a matter of legislation you must lay down some hard and fast line upon which you will pay the salaries of Roman Catholic chaplains?—I do not consider legislation should fix salaries; there is no hard and fast line with reference to the salaries in any gaols; it is not so in the case of Protestant chaplains; I do not think that you could lay down any hard and fast line.

5122. What I wished to know was in a matter of this kind which we are now investigating, whether it would be advisable to pay the Roman Catholic priest for his services in the gaol. I understood you to say that where there were only 10 or 15 or 20 Roman Catholic prisoners, it should then be left to the visiting justices to contract with some gentleman to give his services. Would you say that from 20 upwards it should cease to be a matter of contract?—No; I should not fix the number at 20, but I should think that when the number got large, they would very likely take the capitation view of it.

5123. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Would you leave it to the discretion of the prison authorities whether they should or should not give a salary after a certain number of prisoners had been arrived at?—My impression is that the Roman Catholic chaplains should all receive a salary.

5124. You did not mean by your last answer to the honourable Member for Poole to convey the idea that you would still leave it to their discretion, as it is left at present?—No, my answer related merely to the amount of salary.

5125. Do you think that there is any other way by which the amount of salary can be pointed out to the prison authorities than by the fixing of a minimum salary by Act of Parliament?—I should be against fixing any scale by Act of Parliament.

5126. Would you abolish or put an end to the discretion which is now left to the prison authorities with reference to the appointment, but at the same time leave it to their discretion to fix the amount of salary?—I should leave it to their discretion to fix the amount of the salary; but even if that clause of the Act which is now permissive, that is to say, the 3rd clause, which says, "Where the number of prisoners contained in any prison," were made compulsory, but left open as to the number, you would always be liable to the visiting justices saying that there was not a sufficient number of Roman Catholic prisoners to make the appointment necessary. Some justices might fix 20 and others would say that 40 should be the limit; I think myself that the best way to fix it would be that it should be left to the discretion of the Home Secretary to say whether he considers the number of Roman Catholics in the prison is sufficient to justify the appointment being made, and that in all cases where he does consider it sufficient the appointment should be compulsory.

5127. Would you leave it to the discretion of the Home Secretary to fix the salary, or would you leave the amount of the salary to the discretion of the prison authorities?—I would leave the amount of the salary to the discretion of the prison authorities.

5128. Do you not think that the same feeling (not to use a harsher word) which has led various bodies of magistrates to refuse the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain where there are already large numbers of prisoners in the gaol, might lead them to give him a very inadequate salary when they were obliged to appoint him?—I apprehend that a minister would refuse, if the salary was not adequate, to perform the service, and therefore the prison authorities would be driven into coming to fair and reasonable terms with him.

5129. But how would the prison authorities be driven into coming to fair and reasonable terms with him if you left the amount to their discretion?—Because they would be bound to appoint a Roman Catholic clergyman to perform the duties under the statute when made compulsory, and if the Roman Catholic clergyman refused to perform the duties because he was not paid sufficiently, they would be obliged to give him an adequate salary.

5130. If it were left to their discretion as to what an adequate salary was, might not their views differ very materially from the views of the Roman

Right Hon. Sir W. Crofton, C.B.

23 May 1870.

Roman Catholic chaplain?—Yes; but that would lead to the Roman Catholic chaplain declining to act until they gave him an amount which he considered sufficient.

5131. Then when things had come to a dead lock, what steps would you take?—I do not apprehend that it would come to a dead lock, because we have already Roman Catholic clergymen performing the duties of chaplains without any salary at all.

5132. Take the case of Coldbath Fields, where there are 395 Roman Catholic prisoners, and nothing is paid to their chaplain; do you not think that the same persons who refuse, under the present circumstances, to pay anything to the Roman Catholic chaplain would be very likely to give him a very inadequate salary; what remedy would you propose for their still carrying out their present ideas of their duty in that way which you would still leave open to them?—They would be compelled to appoint a Roman Catholic chaplain, and the Roman Catholic chaplain would say, "Unless I am properly paid, I cannot perform my duties;" and they would then be obliged to get some other minister.

5133. Would you not wish for some other power to compel them to pay an adequate salary?—I see no way of obtaining it.

5134. Would not the difficulty be met by introducing some scale into the Act of Parliament?—I think that would be a difficult matter, as the numbers fluctuate very much.

5135. Is not the only way of settling these matters to strike an average?—I think it would be quite exceptional that anything like a collision would occur when the Act is made compulsory, and therefore it is hardly necessary to do so. With regard to Coldbath Fields prison, we know that there are a large number of the Middlesex magistrates who are in favour of having a Roman Catholic chaplain, and paying him, although they do not happen to be in the majority; if it was found, when he was there as an appointed officer, that no difficulties occurred, I do not think the justices would deal with the matter in an illiberal spirit.

5136. You think that when a body of men have refused to do a thing which the law did not compel them to do, when they were compelled to do it, they would meet the case in a friendly spirit?—That is, under the circumstances, my belief.

5137. And if they did not, you would provide no further remedy for this state of things?—I confess that I see a great difficulty in laying down the amount of salary that they should be compelled to give.

5138. You would not give any appeal to the Home Secretary in case of difference between the Roman Catholic priest and the prison authorities?—I should infinitely prefer that an adequate salary should be given, or what the Home Secretary might, in these exceptional cases, consider adequate.

5139. Do you think that, lest cases should occur, it might be well to enact that the Home Secretary should have the controlling power, or that he should refer the matter to the Directors of Convict Prisons for their opinion?—I do not think the Directors of Convict Prisons would be able to form any particular judgment upon the matter; I think it would be desirable to leave these cases to the discretion of the Home Secretary.

5140. Now with reference to the case of a Roman Catholic minister who lived at some distance from the gaol, and who might be appointed, supposing this Act were amended, would you insert any provision in the amended Bill to allow his travelling expenses?—No; I think it would complicate matters very much to have anything of that kind introduced; I should rather prefer it to be a contract between the two parties; the travelling is a point which would be taken into consideration, no doubt.

5141. You would rather leave that matter to the discretion of the prison authorities, to be taken into consideration when fixing the salary?—I would.

5142. Supposing the case that was put to you, of there being only some 10 or 12 Catholic prisoners in a gaol; that is to say, not a sufficient number to warrant the appointment of a Catholic priest specially to attend to them, do you think it would be possible to arrange some scheme by which the prison authorities at one county prison might arrange to take prisoners from another, so that it might be done with county prisons as it is done amongst convict prisons, in some of which only they receive a certain class of prisoners, a chaplain being appointed for those prisoners?—I think there would be difficulties attending it which would outweigh the convenience.

5143. You would agree that the power might be given to the Secretary of State to transfer such prisoners, provided the agreement was made between the prison authorities?—There would be no possible harm in giving him the power; but I think it would be a power that he would hesitate to use, as it would give a considerable amount of trouble.

5144. Take, for instance, the case of Maidstone prison; would there be any harm in allowing the justices of Surrey and Sussex to make an arrangement by which all their Roman Catholic prisoners should be sent to Maidstone prison, a contribution being given by the other counties for their share of prisoners?—That might answer very well in the case of long sentences; but in the case of short terms there would be great difficulties in the way.

5145. Is it not with reference to long sentences that it is the more necessary to provide religious instruction?—Clearly.

5146. Is it by the same Act and by the same body that the Roman Catholic and the Protestant chaplains are appointed in Ireland?—Yes; they are appointed by the grand jury.

5147. Is there any salary stipulated for in the Act?—No.

5148. It is left to the discretion of the grand jury in both cases, is it not?—It is left to the discretion of the grand jury.

5149. Mr. Matthews.] If I understand your view, it is this; that where the Secretary of State thinks the number of Roman Catholic prisoners sufficient to justify the appointment of a chaplain, you would make the appointment compulsory upon the visiting justices?—I would; that is my view.

5150. But you would leave the visiting justices to fix by private contract with the Roman Catholic chaplain the salary that they would pay him?—Yes.

5151. And therefore, supposing the visiting justices offered a minister a salary which he refused to accept, no appointment would be made?—No appointment would be made.

5152. What

5152. What do you conceive would be the remedy to compel the visiting justices to pay him an adequate salary?—I believe that such a case would be very exceptional, as you find Roman Catholic clergymen are now in the great majority of prisons, attending without any salary at all; I think, therefore, there is not likely to be any difficulty between the visiting justices and chaplains in that respect.

5153. They do that now, as a matter of religious zeal and duty; but if they were by law entitled to a salary, they might reasonably claim an adequate and sufficient salary in their judgment, might they not?—Certainly.

5154–5. And supposing the view of the visiting justices did not accord with theirs, and no appointment was made, do you see any remedy for that state of things, except the indictment against the visiting justices?—In country districts difficulties might happen where there were no Roman Catholic priests; but it is in large towns where large gaols are that you generally find many Roman Catholic clergymen, and if one Roman Catholic clergyman would not accept the salary another might.

5156. On the other hand, supposing a priest chose to be unreasonable and said, "I will not take less than 300*l.* a year," he would be free to do that?—Yes.

5157. And the visiting justices would be obliged to take him upon his own terms?—But it has been suggested that an appeal should be left to the Home Secretary; he would decide that the visiting justices had done their best in the matter, and would hold them free, but I should consider it quite an exceptional case, and one unlikely to occur.

5158. Mr. Synan.] Why would that case be exceptional; would it be exceptional by reason of the visiting justices changing their opinion upon the subject, or by reason of the Roman Catholic chaplain, from religious zeal, being willing to accept an illusory salary?—I think both parties would be inclined to meet in a case of that kind. The visiting justices being compelled to make the appointment would be inclined to give what was fair and liberal to the Roman Catholic clergyman, and he would, I believe, be inclined to accept what was fair and liberal; and therefore to my mind it would be exceptional that such a thing should take place.

5159. You think it would be exceptional for both reasons; a change of opinion upon one and a determination upon the other to accept a small salary from religious motives?—Yes; from wishing to do his duty, because I find the same persons are, in many cases now, working without salary at all.

5160. Do you think it fair that such a pressure as religious zeal should be put upon a man to induce him to accept an illusory and inadequate salary?—No, I think that the labourer is worthy of his hire.

5161. How would you carry that out, so that the labourer should get what was his hire?—I think the justices would give him that.

5162. Have you looked at the returns?—I have.

5163. Have you found that there are three prisons in which the Catholic prisoners number 300, where the visiting justices refused to give any salary at all; and that there are 20 where the average is over 100, where they have refused to do the same thing; and do you suppose that there would be such an entire revolution in the minds of those gentlemen, that they would alter their entire course of proceedings if the amount of salary were left to their discretion?—I think there would be a great difference when it once came to be compulsory instead of permissive.

5164. But they might comply with the appointment and refuse an adequate salary, might they not?—I do not believe that it is so much the question of salary that the justices are hesitating about in Coldbath Fields, which, I presume, is the prison you are alluding to in particular, as a question of opinion on the part of the magistrates with regard to the appointment.

5165. They comply with the Act at present by allowing the chaplain to visit, and all they refuse is the salary?—If you look at the return you will see that there are many gaols which now have salaried Roman Catholic chaplains, which previous to the passing of the Prison Ministers Act had refused to have Roman Catholic chaplains at all; and certainly as regards one of them, I may mention the Salford gaol at Manchester as an instance, it is only within the last year and a half that they have appointed a Roman Catholic minister with a salary; the justices have changed their minds in that respect, and I think I can name others who have done the same.

5166. You think, then, that the justices of Westminster and the Aldermen of London at the prison at Holloway, and all the others who have not changed their minds, but only continued their former course, will follow the example of the Salford prison authorities?—I believe that they would do so in time. I have seen other prison authorities changing their minds since the passing of this Act, and I believe these also will do so.

5167. Sir John Pakington.] If I followed rightly the answers you have given, you seem to object altogether to laying down any scale of salaries for the Roman Catholic prison minister on the face of an Act of Parliament?—I do.

5168. May I ask your reasons for objecting to laying down such a scale?—One reason would be that the number of Roman Catholic prisoners varies so much in different prisons; there would one year, or part of a year, be a large number, and another year there might be very few Roman Catholic prisoners. I can speak with regard to Winchester Gaol, in which, from various causes, they have at times only a few Roman Catholics confined there, and at others about 40. I think it would be very difficult to lay down by Act of Parliament that there should be any fixed salary.

5169. I presume that you do not mean to express to the Committee by that opinion that you would consider the spiritual interests of a Roman Catholic prisoner as being less worthy of care than the spiritual interests of a Protestant prisoner?—No; I said otherwise at the commencement of my examination.

5170. Would the difficulty which you seem to anticipate be in your mind diminished if the Act of Parliament were to lay down a scale of numbers, and were to allot to each of those numbers a maximum and a minimum salary at the discretion of the prison authorities?—I can only repeat my opinion that I would rather not have that upon the face of an Act of Parliament. I do not see why it should be laid down in the case of Roman Catholics rather than for chaplains of any other persuasion.

Right Hon. Sir W. Crofton, C.B.

5171. You do not dispute the propriety of paying an educated gentleman who fulfilled the functions of a Roman Catholic minister for the spiritual duties he performed, just as you would pay a Protestant minister?—Certainly not.

5172. But what should be the amount of such payment you would leave to the prison authorities or to the Home Secretary?—I would leave it to the prison authorities, but I see no harm in letting the interpretation of the term "adequate salary" be left, in case of dispute, to the discretion of the Home Secretary, and that he should have the approval or disapproval in case of the salary being reported to be inadequate.

5173. Do you mean that the Home Secretary should lay down a scale of salaries?—I should not mind his laying down a scale for his own guidance, but that would be a different thing from laying it down in an Act of Parliament.

5174. If a scale were not laid down, either in an Act of Parliament or some other place, there would be great risk of unseemly discrepancies between the amount paid to the Roman Catholic chaplain at one place and at another?—It is so now with the Protestant chaplains; it varies in different boroughs and counties.

5175. But owing to long custom those discrepancies are not serious in amount?—I think they are, and I cannot see why the Roman Catholic chaplains should have their salaries laid down in the statute, when it is not required in the case of Protestants.

5176. Is it the result of your experience with regard to Protestant dissenting prisoners that it is in any case desirable to appoint a minister of their own persuasion?—I do not think that it is desirable or necessary to make such an appointment.

5177. I presume that the reason why you have expressed such an opinion is that the difference between one class of Protestants and another is not sufficiently broad and distinct to make it desirable that there should be a separate minister appointed?—Yes; in some gaols you would find that some were Baptists and some were Independents, and you would find it difficult to attend to them all.

5178. But there would be real hardship and injustice in compelling a Roman Catholic prisoner to join the Protestant worship, would there not?—Certainly.

5179. But I assume that you would consider it no injustice to compel a Baptist, or a Wesleyan, or an Independent, to receive for a time his spiritual instruction from a Church of England minister?—Not in my opinion.

5180. Mr. O'Reilly.] You mentioned, as showing the difficulty of fixing the salary, that the number of prisoners in some prisons varied exceedingly from year to year, and you mentioned Winchester: do you not think that, supposing the number of prisoners varies from year to year, the salary also should vary from year to year?—No; I think that would be a very inconvenient arrangement.

5181. You expressed your opinion, if I gathered rightly, that the justices who admininster the county gaols in England, in your opinion, might be safely trusted to fix always an adequate salary when they appointed a Roman Catholic chaplain to attend the prison?—That is my belief.

5182. You mentioned that that belief was founded upon an examination of the Return which is before the Committee?—Yes, principally.

5183. Let me call your attention to the borough gaol of Usk, in Monmouthshire; the number of prisoners for any one day is not given, but the number for the whole year is given: the number of prisoners belonging to the Church of England is given for the year as 815, and the chaplain of that persuasion receives a salary of 200 l. a year; the number of Roman Catholics during the same period was 470, and the salary paid to the Roman Catholic chaplain by the justices of that gaol appears to be 25 l.; would it not strike your mind, as it does mine, that that is rather illustrative of the tendency upon the part of the justices, not to fix adequate salaries?—Those returns have been given in rather an extraordinary manner. I see it is signed, but I cannot help thinking that there must be some very great mistake. I cannot believe that 470 Roman Catholics were in Usk gaol, or anything like that number, in proportion to the number of Church of England prisoners, which is 815: but if you ask my opinion, I should say that the salary is very inadequate.

5184. You think that that return is probably innacurate; but assuming for a moment that it is accurate, you would consider that that was an instance in which the justices had fixed an inadequate salary?—I should, decidedly.

5185. Sir J. Pakington.] Let me ask whether, in your opinion, the Roman Catholic minister appointed to the prison ought not to be recognised as one of the regular officers of that prison?—Certainly he ought.

5186. Mr. Downing.] In answer to the Right honourable Baronet, I understood you to say that you would make no distinction between the status of a Protestant clergyman and of a Roman Catholic clergyman?—None.

5187. Would you consider that the Roman Catholic clergyman ought therefore to be paid upon the same scale as the Protestant clergyman, if he had an equal number to attend to?—There really is no scale for the payment of the Protestant clergyman.

5188. Supposing there was, you say that they ought to have the same status in the goal; should they not therefore be paid according to the labour which they perform?—I must qualify my answer with regard to that: it would depend very much upon the duties they were given to perform. In some prisons the visiting justices require much more than they do in others; in the Preston Gaol the rules require the Roman Catholic clergyman to do as much as the Protestant clergyman; but in many cases it would be otherwise. In some instances the priest might attend thrice a week, and in other cases the Protestant clergyman might attend twice a day.

5189. Laying aside those questions, you are acquainted with the respective duties of a Roman Catholic clergyman in Ireland, are you not?—Yes, I am.

5190. Are you not aware that the discharging of the duties of a Roman Catholic clergyman is much more onerous than in the case of the Protestant clergyman; that he is obliged to devote more time?—He does devote more time in Ireland.

5191. I think there was some mistake in this respect; you stated that in the event of a Roman Catholic clergyman contesting with the visiting justices for a salary, if one Roman Catholic clergyman refused it another might take it; are you aware that no Roman Catholic clergyman can take

Right Hon. Sir W. Crofton, C.B.

23 May 1870.

take such a course as that without the assent of his bishop?—I believe they would have to get the consent of the bishop; but I think that would be a protection rather than otherwise, and would facilitate a contract between the two parties.

5192. Let us suppose this case: that the visiting justices of a gaol where there might be a very large number of Roman Catholics, from one cause or another, as you said awhile ago, though they were obliged to appoint a Roman Catholic clergyman, gave him a very inadequate salary, say 10 l. or 15 l., would you then appeal to the Home Secretary, or how would you otherwise have matters arranged?—I should not at all object, under those circumstances, to appeal to the Home Secretary.

5193. Do you think that would meet the difficulty?—I think it would.

5194. And you would like also to have uniformity to some extent in reference to the salaries paid to the Catholic clergymen; if you will turn to the top of page 6 of the return, you will see, under the head of "Chester County Gaol," that the number of Protestant prisoners is 69?—Yes.

5195. Do you see that the salary is 300 l. per annum?—I observe it.

5196. Now if you refer to the opposite page, No. 7, the Cornwall County Prison, you will find that the number of Protestant prisoners is 65; that is only four less than Chester, and there the Protestant clergyman receives 100 l. a year?—That is so.

5197. Now go to the Derby prison, and you will find that there were 1,950 Protestant prisoners in that prison, and that the Protestant chaplain got 250 l.; how can you account for that?—That was exactly what I was stating in the earlier part of my evidence, namely, that you would find that there was no scale laid down for the payment of the Protestant chaplains.

5198. Sir J. Pakington.] Their salaries vary, do they not, according to the length of service?—They do; and also as to residence, and the time employed.

5199. Mr. Downing.] Now let me again refer you to the Liverpool borough prison, at page 15; you will find that there are 323 Protestant prisoners there, and that the Protestant chaplain gets 400 l. a year, with a house, coals, and gas?—I observe that.

5200. Do you find that the number of Catholic prisoner is 570; that is 240 more than the Protestants?—Yes; that is so.

5201. And that the Catholic chaplain gets but 300 l. per annum; you do not approve of that, according to your earlier evidence?—The Protestant chaplain's salary appears to be in that case higher than it is in any other, but the Roman Catholic chaplain's salary appears to be the most liberal one that is given. I happen to know that the Protestant chaplain at Liverpool has had a very long service, and it is quite probable that he began at 250 l., and is now at his maximum of 400 l. a year; whereas the Roman Catholic clergyman has, I believe, a much shorter service.

5202. Mr. Synan.] Supposing you were informed that any of the justices or prison authorities had stated to this Committee that they had refused, and would continue to refuse, a salary to the Roman Catholic chaplain, would that in any way alter your opinions with reference to having the salary or a minimum scale fixed by Act of Parliament?—No, that would not alter my opinion, as I have read that they have done so in the reports of the quarter sessions constantly. As I said before, in that case there should be an appeal to the Home Secretary, and he should judge whether the salary was adequate or not, having reference to the number of prisoners.

5203. Mr. Talbot.] Is it not your impression, from the intercourse which you have had with prison authorities, that when once a thing is expressed in an Act of Parliament the magistrates will carry out the intention of the Act liberally?—I have always found them do so.

5204. Therefore, if it were expressed in an Act of Parliament that a reasonable salary should be given where a proper number of prisoners were confined, you are of opinion that the magistrates would carry out that enactment liberally?—Yes, I believe they would do so.

5205. The reason that they have not done that hitherto has been that there was no compulsion upon them to give a salary under the Act of Parliament?—I think so.

5206. Lord Pelham.] As the law stands at present, could the magistrates escape from appointing a Protestant chaplain by offering him an illusory salary?—No, they could not escape from it any more than in the case we are supposing; it would be a parallel case.

5207. Then if this power were made compulsory, it would apply equally to the Catholic clergyman?—Certainly.

5208. Chairman.] Are not the prison authorities bound by law to have a Protestant chaplain in every gaol?—Yes.

5209. Does not the Act of Parliament require it?—It does.

Mr. Henry Wren, called in; and Examined.

Mr. H. Wren.

5210. Mr. Guest.] You are Governor of the Glamorgan County Gaol, at Cardiff, are you not?—Yes, I am.

5211. How long have you been there?—A little over two years.

5212. Will you tell the Committee what is the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners in that gaol?—Between 40 and 50.

5213. The Roman Catholic priest is allowed to see the prisoners in any cell that happens to be vacant at the time, is he not?—He is.

5214. They are sent to him?—They are.

5215. How do you determine who are to go to him?—The prisoners are all asked if they wish to see the Catholic clergyman, and those who express that wish are allowed to see him.

5216. How often does the Roman Catholic priest visit the prison?—He visits the prison twice a week.

5217. Is that by order of the visiting justices?—Yes.

5218. Is there any restriction as to the time he is allowed to remain in the prison on those days?—None whatever.

5219. Is it a fact, or not, that the majority of the Roman Catholic prisoners attend the Protestant service?—It is a fact that they do.

5220. Is there any persuasion or pressure used by

Mr. H. Wren. 23 May 1870.

by the warders to induce them to do so?—None whatever.

5221. Has Mr. Signini ever made any complaints to you of there having been persuasion used on the part of the warders?—Yes, he has.

5222. Did you pay attention to those complaints?—I investigated the matter, and have paid attention to it ever since.

5223. Did you find that there was any truth in that statement?—There was no truth in it, as far as I could discover; there was no disposition on the part of the warders to force the prisoners in any way.

5224. You have seen Mr. Signini's evidence, have you not?—Yes, I have.

5225. Do you notice that he says that "The prisoners have told me over and over again that the cell doors are thrown open with the announcement that service is going to begin, and the warders say, 'Are you going?' or, 'Make haste;' 'It is time;' or, 'Why do you not go?'" do they make use of such expressions?—They do not; they simply make use of one expression; they unlock the door, and say, "Church;" if the prisoner wishes to go to church, he goes out; and if he does not, he shuts his door and stays in his cell. Those expressions, "Make haste," and such like, may be made use of to a man who is walking slowly along the corridor; the prisoners acquire a slow lumbering gait, and that expression may be used to quicken them.

5226. But those expressions are not used to induce a man to go to the Protestant chapel against his will?—No, certainly not.

5227. Is there any difference between the way in which the Protestant Dissenters and the Roman Catholics receive the visits of the chaplain?—No, there is not.

5228. They are all visited by the chaplain in the cell?—They are.

5229. And is it the case that he uses the opportunity of visiting them for the purpose of proselytism?—I should think not; I never heard of any case of the kind.

5230. Has it ever been brought to your notice that Roman Catholic prisoners have been prevented from seeing the priest when they desired to do so?—They were always sent to him when they desired to see him; I have never known an instance of their being prevented.

5231. Are they sent to him when they are at labour?—Yes; they are sent to him from the wheel, or from the garden labour, or from the mat making. The warder goes in and asks, "Is there anyone of you who wish to see the priest?" and the one who says, "Yes," is allowed to do so immediately.

5232. With regard to the Parliamentary Report which was sent up by you, it states that "prisoners of all denominations differing from the Established Church accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain;" is that so?—It is so.

5233. Are those words here quoted from the chaplain's report?—They are taken from a report, drawn up by the visiting justices for the Parliamentary Return which was called for.

5234. And not by the chaplain?—Not by the chaplain.

5235. Has any report of the chaplain's ever appeared in the Cardiff journals?—It has not; The chaplain tells me that it has not.

5236. Is it, or is it not a fact, that books, the tenor of which is against the Roman Catholic faith, are placed in the cells of Roman Catholic prisoners?—They are not; I have only seen one controversial book since I have been in the prison; I took it into my office out of the way, and I think it was there that Father Signini saw it.

5237. Who chooses the books that are put into the cells?—The Roman Catholic priest brings them himself, and the Protestant chaplain also gives the prisoners books to read.

5238. In answer to a question that was asked by an honourable Member, of the Committee: "Looking at the ordinary class of prisoners, is it not very unlikely that they might not be particularly desirous always to see their priest?" and the answer is, "There are some very few cases in which such is the fact." And then he is asked: "Would not that apply equally to Catholics and Protestants, that a person who is sunk in vice might shun the visits of a minister of religion of his own or another persuasion?" and the answer is, "I think that when that happens they force the Protestant prisoner to attend." Are the Protestant prisoners forced to attend?—Never.

5239. In answer to a question put by the honourable Chairman: "Is there anything further that you wish to represent to the Committee?" Father Signini says, "I wish to state this: for a long time after the commencement of my attendance, I was under the impression that the number of Roman Catholic prisoners shown by my list as being actually inmates of the gaol was generally much larger than the number of those brought together for instruction into the chapel. I once accidentally compared the number present with those whom I knew to be in the gaol, and I found a very remarkable difference of about one-third. I looked over the previous entries (I generally put down the number that attend each time), and I found that that had been the case a great many times. I thought that, of course, was wrong, that not sufficient attention was paid to informing the prisoners of the presence of their clergyman in the gaol; and I remonstrated upon it." Is that the case?—It is not the case; if he had named it to me, I should have inquired into it. I should think the decrease in the chapel would be in consequence of the daily discharge which takes place about the time of the reverend gentleman's ministrations; the discharge generally takes place about 10 in the morning. If the Rev. Mr. Signini had made that complaint to me it would, probably, have been explained fully.

5240. In answer to Question 3465, "Perhaps that 'gratitude' which is mentioned in this public return might very well bear that interpretation which has become a common expression, namely, 'a strong sense of favours to come.' I do not know whether you ever heard that expression?" Mr. Signini said, "That would be about the key of the whole thing." Is it possible that the Protestant chaplain in any way bestows any favour whatever upon the prisoners?—I cannot conceive that he can do so; I know of none.

5241. Can he relax their labours in any way?—I think not.

5242. Have you anything further to say to the Committee with reference to the statements made by Father Signini?—I am not aware that I have.

5243. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] An honourable Member asked you, with regard to Question 3548, "Would not that apply equally to Catholics and Protestants, that a person who is sunk in vice might shun the visits of a minister of his own own or another persuasion?—I think that when that happens they force the Protestant prisoner to attend." Is it not the case that the Protestant chaplain has a right to visit the prisoners, whether they desire to see him or not?—Yes; he has a key of the cells.

5244. Do you not gather from that question and answer that the discretion which is left to a Catholic prisoner, as to whether he will or will not see his priest, is not left to a Protestant prisoner, but that he is obliged to receive the visits of the Protestant chaplain when the chaplain chooses to make them?—The Protestant chaplain can visit a prisoner if he thinks proper, and so could the Roman Catholic priest.

5245. Even if a prisoner had not asked to see him?—Yes.

5246. But as regards that particular question, it is true that, whether or not a Protestant prisoner wishes to see the chaplain, the clergyman has a right to go into the cell?—He has a key, being the authorised chaplain under the Act.

5247. And with regard to the expressions alleged to have been made use of by the warders, you would not always be present to see if any such expressions were used?—I have always given orders to the contrary, and I have concealed myself to see what their conduct was, and I never discovered their making use of any such expressions.

5248. When you say there is no marked difference between the Catholic and the Protestant prisoners receiving the ministrations of the Protestant clergyman, do you say that from your own knowledge?—I say that from my own knowledge.

5249. Are you always present when the chaplain is visiting the prison?—I am not present with him; I am about the prison.

5250. Do you think you can speak positively to the fact that there is no marked difference between the way in which they received the visits of the Protestant clergyman?—I think I can; I am sure I can.

5251. Now, with reference to this passage, "Prisoners of all denominations differing from the Established Church, accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain;" who gave that information?—The visiting justices know it themselves from their visiting the prison, and I know it myself from being in the prison.

5252. Do they know it from a report furnished to them by the Protestant chaplain?—They would know it both from their own experience and from a report.

5253. A report is furnished to them by the chaplain, is it not?—Yes, a report is furnished to the quarter sessions.

5254. And that would be the truth in this case?—I do not know that; I have never seen that report.

5255. But if the visiting justices are to ascertain the truth of what has passed between A. and B., they must seek to obtain that information either from A. or B.?—Yes; they must obtain it from the prisoners; they visit the prisoners and obtain the information from them.

5256. Do you think that if they obtain that information from the prisoners they would publish it in a report, unless it was confirmed by the clergyman?—I suppose they would not.

5257. And probably it would be stated upon the authority of the clergyman?—I cannot say that it would be upon his authority altogether.

5258. Chairman.] If any question arose with reference to the discipline of the prison, and the justices required information upon that, or upon any matter within your own province, you would be the person upon whom they would come for information?—Yes, certainly.

5259. Then, in any matter of religious instruction in the prison, is not the chaplain a very proper person from whom to get instruction upon that head?—Yes; I should say so.

5260. In this case, therefore, upon what authority would they rely to justify them in putting that information before Parliament?—They would do so from their own inquiry.

5261. From whom?—From the prisoners.

5262. Do you think it is from the prisoners, or from the officers of the prison that the justices would make such an inquiry?—I think it would be from their own observation, and from information supplied to them by the chaplain and myself.

5263. How many visiting justices are there?—I think there are 16.

5264. How many of those gentlemen attend during the week?—Two or three, or three or four.

5265. What times do they attend?—They attend at uncertain times, but generally from one to three in the afternoon.

5266. Do they attend at the time when the Protestant clergyman is giving religious instruction to the prisoners?—I have seen them present in the chapel.

5267. Constantly?—No.

5268. Then they do not attend constantly?—No.

5269. Of what advantage would their very little experience be, in order to form an opinion upon so very important question as that?—They visit the prisoners separately.

5270. Do you think that they would ask the prisoners whether they liked to receive the visits of the Protestant clergyman?—I do not accompany them when they go to the cells.

5271. Why do you say that they would make that statement from information supplied by the prisoners?—I say it would be partly from information supplied by myself, and partly from the chaplain.

5272. But do you adhere to what you said, that the visiting justices obtained that information from the prisoners?—I am never present with them, and I do not know from my own knowledge how they obtained it.

5273. Do you not think it very likely that upon a religious subject they would inquire of their own officer?—Very likely; no doubt they would.

5274. You stated that there was no persuasion used to induce the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service on Sundays?—No; there is not.

5275. There is no Catholic worship on Sunday it is not permitted in your goal, I believe?—It is not.

5276. Are you aware that a prisoner is very unwilling to be locked up in his cell while other prisoners are attending the chapel?—I daresay the prisoners would be glad of any relief.

5277. There is no Catholic service, but there is a Protestant service upon the Sunday; that is so?—There are two Protestant services.

5278. At all events, there is no Catholic service in the morning, I believe?—There is none.

Mr. H. Wren.

23 May 1870.

5279. Are not the Catholics very anxious to go to the Protestant service because there is no service of their own?—I do not know that that is the reason; I know that they go to the Protestant service.

5280. You state that they are very willing to escape from their cells for an hour?—Yes, they are.

5281. And here is an opportunity afforded to them of doing so?—Yes.

5282. Is it not likely that they should avail themselves of an opportunity of getting out of their cells?—No doubt.

5283. Even if there was a second service, do you not think they would be glad to attend that?—They do attend it.

5284. The prisoner would be as glad to have a second hour out of his cell as the first?—Very probably he would.

5285. Sir John Pakington.] You stated that at a certain hour of the day the cell doors were thrown open, and a warder announced "Church," and then the prisoners who desired to attend come out of their cells?—That is so.

5286. Did you mean to convey to the Committee that a discretion is allowed to the Protestant prisoners, whether they will or will not go to the Protestant worship?—Yes, if they really had any conscientious objections; but I never heard anybody make one.

5287. Is it the rule, that when his door is thrown open the prisoner is expected and required to go to the Protestant worship?—Certainly.

5288. Mr. Downing.] I wish to call your attention to this observation in this Return, where it says that "Prisoners of all denominations, differing from the Established Church, accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain, and attend the services in the chapel." You have read the evidence of Father Signini?—I have.

5289. Do you agree with him in his answer to Question 3413: "Do you think they gratefully accept the visits of the appointed chaplain; that is the Protestant chaplain?" He says, "I think his visits are accepted gratefully, but that requires an explanation; they are accepted gratefully on the principle that a poor creature who is severely punished by solitary confinement is very glad of any chance of breaking the silence by speaking to any one who visits him as a friend, as they thereby get a little relief?"—Yes; no doubt there is a great deal of truth in that.

5290. I take it for granted that you would not like to go to a place of worship when you did not believe in the doctrines of that church?—No, I should not.

5291. But if you were in a solitary cell you would be very glad to get relief from your confinement by going there?—I should.

5292. The Rev. Mr. Signini was not allowed to celebrate mass, I believe?—No, he was not.

5293. Nor was he allowed to celebrate any religious service of the church in the gaol?—No, that was the resolution; you will find that resolution quoted in the evidence.

5294. You were asked a question with reference to the very words quoted in this report having appeared in the local journals in Cardiff?—It has not so appeared.

5295. Did you read the evidence of Mr. Signini that he had read it there?—I have told that gentleman that he was mistaken, and he has admitted that, perhaps, he was mistaken; he said he thought he had read it, but that if it was not published he could not have done so.

5296. Was not this report read at the quarter sessions?—No.

5297. I mean the report of the visiting justices?—No.

5298. Do you mean to tell the Committee that it was not read at the quarter sessions?—No, it was not.

5299. Do not those very words occur in a report which was read at the quarter sessions, that "prisoners of all denominations, differing from the Established Church, accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain"?—I did not hear that read at the quarter sessions.

5300. Did you read that report?—I did not.

5301. Then you cannot take upon yourself to say that it was not in that report?—I believe it was not.

5302. Mr. Synan.] Have you a Creed Register?—We have.

5303. Are the Roman Catholics entered in that Creed Register?—Yes.

5304. And is there a copy of that Creed Register given to the Catholic chaplain?—He has access to everything he requires.

5305. Is there a copy of it given to him?—I do not think that a copy is given to him, but he has all the statistics he asks for.

5306. Some of the prisoners, according to Father Signini's evidence, stated to him that they had not attended his visits, because they were not invited; and on being asked why he did not visit them all, he stated that it was because he did not know of their being there, and that he only saw such as the warder brought to him: do you believe that statement?—I do not, because he comes in and sits down in the office, and the clerk gives him the names of all Roman Catholic prisoners.

5307. Father Signini said they made it an excuse for their not coming to him that they were sent to other business; do you believe that statement?—Then what the prisoners stated was untrue. I should not believe a prisoner unless he was corroborated, as lying is so much a habit with them.

5308. Do you think it is a right thing, when you register the Roman Catholic prisoners, and know their cells, to throw open their doors upon the Sunday, and announce "church" to them?—I cannot see any harm in it.

5309. You have stated that it would be a relaxation to yourself, under similar circumstances, to go to a church, even though it were not of your own religion; would you think it right, in the case of these people, to offer them that inducement in the shape of relaxation?—I do not see any harm in it; I have asked them if there is any harm in it, and they have told me that there was not.

5310. Mr. Dalrymple.] I understand you to say that there is no request necessary from a prisoner to see the Protestant clergyman, because the clergyman can visit him without waiting to be asked?—That is so.

5311. So that the idea that there is a necessity upon the Protestant prisoner to see his chaplain, whereas a Roman Catholic prisoner must show a desire to see his priest, is an imaginary state of things?—Yes, that is so.

5312. Every facility is given to the Roman Catholic priest to see prisoners of his own communion?—Yes, there is.

5313. Is the Creed Book open to him?—Yes, I have shown it to him myself.

5314. I suppose the Roman Catholic clergyman is invariably treated as a gentleman should be treated in the prison?—I have always endeavoured to treat him as courteously as I could, and he has admitted it.

5315. Do you imagine that as a paid official he would be treated with greater courtesy?—No, I do not.

5316. Are there any Catholic warders?—No.

5317. What proportion of the prisoners are short-sentenced prisoners?—The greater proportion.

5318. Chairman.] What do you call short-sentenced prisoners?—Those prisoners whose sentences are under a month.

5319. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen.] Father Signini was asked at Question 3382, "And besides that, for instruction for preparing for confession, and for hearing confession; are you allowed to see the prisoners singly;" and his answer is, "Yes, I generally go into a private cell, and there they are brought in one by one if they wish to see me;" you do not agree to the accuracy of that statement, do you?—Yes, I do.

5320. The prisoners are not brought in unless they wish to see him?—No, they are not brought in unless they wish to see him; I do not know whether I have quite understood the honourable Member's question.

5321. I will put it in this form: the Catholic clergyman has told us that the times of his visit are limited and are specified, and that the length of his visit is limited and specified, and that he sees prisoners in a private cell who are brought in one by one if they wish to see him; I want to know whether the expression of a wish upon the part of a prisoner is necessary before he sees the Catholic priest, or whether in contradiction to the answer Father Signini has given, you maintain that the priest can visit the prisoner when and where he pleases in the prison?—I will tell the Committee the manner in which it is done. The Catholic clergyman comes into the corridor of the prison and the warders then go out to the "treadmill," or to any other place where the prisoners are employed, and asks them, "Do you wish to see the priest," and those that do are mustered and marched into the corridor. I do not know precisely what takes place, but Father Signini gets a chair and goes and sits in one of the cells and sees the prisoners one at a time.

5322. The Protestant chaplain can visit the prisoners when he pleases?—So can the Catholic priest if he expresses a wish to do so.

5323. After the answer you have given, that the prisoners are asked if they wish to see the priest, and if they say they do, that they are allowed to do so, the statement that there is a grievance by reason of the necessity of a wish upon the part of some of the prisoners, and a non-necessity upon the part of others, appears to you to be an imaginary grievance?—I imagine that the prisoners go into some sort of confessional to the priest; he sits there to perform some ceremony; I believe it is a totally different thing from the visit of the Protestant chaplain.

5324. Mr. Dalrymple.] No request is necessary from a Roman Catholic prisoner to see his clergyman, any more than from a Protestant prisoner?—No; if he wished to visit the priest, he would have a right to do so.

5325. Mr. Guest.] Have you known at any time that Father Signini had expressed a wish to see any particular prisoner in the gaol?—No, I have not.

5326. Therefore you do not know that at any time he has visited a prisoner quite of his own accord in the gaol?—I do not.

5327. But when any prisoner expresses a wish to see him, he is always informed of that wish?—Yes, we have sent for him.

5328. Is it not the case that after the instruction which takes place about 10 o'clock in the morning, the prisoners go to their labour?—Yes.

5329. And of course the Roman Catholic priest, Father Signini, is not allowed to go to the "wheel" to see the prisoners there?—No.

5330. The warder is sent instead to ask any prisoners if they wish to see him?—Yes.

5331. And any prisoner who expresses such a wish, is taken off the wheel?—Yes.

5332. How long does Father Signini stop in the prison?—Nearly three hours.

5333. He is never told to leave the prison?—Never.

5334. He leaves of his own accord entirely?—Entirely.

5335. If he wished to stop longer in the prison, he would be allowed to do so?—Certainly.

5336. And if he wished to return later in the day, you know of no order of the justices by which you would be bound to refuse him admittance?—No; I know of nothing of the kind.

5337. Chairman.] Has Father Signini a key of the cells?—No, he has not, but he may have one if he asks for it.

5338. Has he been supplied with one?—No.

5339. Do you mean to say that he is obliged to ask for a key, in order to open any cell?—There is a key hanging up in the warder's room, which the chaplain has access to, and he goes in and takes the key.

5340. It is hung up for his convenience there; he, practically, has it in his own possession; is that so?—It is there, but he does not carry it in his pocket.

5341. If he carried it in his pocket he might lose it, but it is hanging up there?—It is.

5342. Is there a key accessible to Father Signini, without any demand from you or any other officer?—There has never been anything said about it.

5343. Let the Committee have it distinctly. You say that the Protestant chaplain has a key, and that that key hangs in a certain place; can the Protestaut chaplain go and get that key without permission from you or any other officer of the prison?—Yes.

5344. He has it at his command completely?—It is so.

5345. Is it the fact that Father Signini has a key at his disposal in that way?—No, he has not.

5346. The Protestant chaplain can open any cell in the prison he pleases?—He can.

5347. Can Father Signini?—He cannot unless he is supplied with a key; and there has been no application made for it.

5348. Mr. Downing.] Do you put over the doors of your cells any mark to indicate that a Roman Catholic prisoner is confined there?—Yes, we do.

5349. How did that key come there first for the Protestant clergyman?—It is hung up in the warder's

Mr. H. Wren.

23 May 1870.

warder's room with a lot of other keys; there are a lot of hooks, with the names of the different keys which are in the charge of the chief warder.

5350. There is one key for the Protestant chaplain?—There is one key marked "Chaplain."

5351. And there is not one marked "Catholic chaplain"?—There is not.

5352. Did you ever take the trouble to say to the Catholic chaplain, "You can have a key if you wish"?—No, I did not.

5353. Mr. Fowler.] I understand you to say that the Catholic clergyman has never applied for it?—Never.

5354. He has not a key, because he has never applied for it?—He has not; I should wish to add that when Father Signini was summoned before this Committee, he told me that he was coming to London, and that he should have the pleasure of giving a very favourable report of his treatment in the gaol.

Mr. JOHN GILBERT TALBOT, a Member of the Committee, called in; and Examined.

Mr. J. G. Talbot, M.P.

5355. Chairman.] YOU wish to make a statement to the Committee, do you not?—I wish to make a statement with regard to the evidence of the Rev. Mr. Purdon, beginning at Question 2801. Mr. Purdon states in No. 2822, in answer to the Question, "Have you any complaint with reference to the books supplied in the prison?" "I have no complaint whatever with regard to the books supplied, but I have a complaint with regard to the books that are withheld; the visiting justices very kindly, some time ago, recognised an exceedingly excellent class of Catholic books, but some different arrangement subsequently took place in the discipline of the prison which caused the visiting justices to depart from their original recognition of those books, and the only books that are now provided are the Prayer-book, the Catechism, and the Testament." With regard to that answer, I wish to say that the facts are reported to be as follows: Mr. Purdon's predecessor, in the year 1862, produced from his own library a certain number of books, some of which were entertaining, and those he had permission from the justices to distribute. In October 1868, Mr. Purdon asked for a renewal of those books; and in the terms of his application, it appeared that he expected them to be given out of the county funds. Leave was given on that day to issue the books; but they were not provided by the county funds, any more than the books for his predecessor had been. He now says that the books were recognised, and afterwards that that recognition was withdrawn. In answer to that I have to say that there is no record of that, so far as the authorities of the prison are aware, nor do any of the officers remember it. I have also to state that before Mr. Purdon came to the prison, and for some time after he came, the Roman Catholics constantly had entertaining books, but that he objected to them; and on his objection, they are now not issued to that class of prisoners.

PRISONS (RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION).

[Parliamentary Return, No. 24 of 1870.]

RETURNS of COUNTY and BOROUGH PRISONS in England, &c.

THIS Return embraces 124 prisons. In consequence of many Returns giving the number of prisoners in the year instead of on the 20th July, they cannot be included in this Analysis. These may be divided into—

1st. Those in which the number of Roman Catholic prisoners is 100 or upwards.
2nd. Those with 50, but less than 100.
3rd. Those with 25, but less than 50.
4th. Those with more than 10, but less than 25.
5th. Those with 10, or less, down to 1.

1st. One hundred and upwards. There are 8 such prisons; in 5 the Roman Catholic Priest is paid; in 3 he receives nothing.

They are—

Appendix, No. 2.

PAPER handed in by Mr. S. G. Rathbone.

ABSTRACT from Bye-Laws of the Liverpool Borough Prison.

Division of Prisoners into Classes and Marking System.

Convicted criminal prisoners shall be divided into classes, to be respectively distinguished by the letters A, B, C, and so on.

The system of giving good or bad marks according to a prisoner's industry or idleness, shall be applied to prisoners sentenced to any term of imprisonment exceeding two calendar months, but shall not be put in force until they shall have been in prison six weeks. Prisoners sentenced to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two months shall not be placed under the marking system.

Prisoners placed under the marking system shall receive a good mark for each day in which they perform the task allotted to them in a satisfactory manner; no mark if they fall a little short of it, and a bad mark if they be positively idle. One bad mark to cancel one good mark. In case of gross idleness or misconduct, the governor shall have power to award more than one bad mark.

Prisoners shall at first be placed in the lowest, or, Class A, and their progress to the higher classes shall depend on their industry and good conduct as shown by the marks respectively at their credit, and shall be regulated in accordance with tables drawn up and determined upon by the visiting justices.

The governor shall have power to order prisoners to be placed in a lower or in a higher class, or to have any of the advantages a higher class would entitle them to, irrespective of the number of marks at their credit, if there be any special circumstances in the case requiring such exceptional treatment.

Labour.

The labour is divided into three descriptions, viz. –

1st. Hard labour of the most penal kinds, to consist of work on the treadmill or crank and oakum-picking; the two first kinds of labour for able-bodied male adults only.

2nd. Hard labour of the ordinary kinds, to consist of picking hemp, cocoa-nut fibre, tailoring, shoemaking, weaving calicoes, mats, and matting with hand-looms, ordinary mat-making, winding bobbins, sewing and knitting sinnott-plaiting, or other kinds of industrial labour which can be performed in the cells of prisoners.

3rd. Labour in association, consisting of all kinds of labour, such as twine-making, work in the power-loom room, in the laundry, kitchen, smithy, packing oakum, &c., whether industrial or in the service of the prison, which is performed in company with other prisoners, with the exception of work on the treadmill or crank, which shall not be considered as labour in association.

The kind of labour a prisoner is to be employed at shall depend on the class he or she is in, as set forth in the tables hereto annexed, always provided that the privilege of a prisoner to be put to labour of the ordinary kinds shall be contingent on his or her being able and willing to make such class of labour profitable to the prison.

Criminal convicted prisoners, not sentenced to hard labour, shall be employed in the least irksome kinds of labour which can be conveniently supplied to them, and which they can make profitable to the prison. They shall be encouraged to perform their tasks by being placed under the marking system, but they shall not be punished for neglect of work except by a reduction in the class of diet as specified in the dietary tables.

The male prisoners who shall perform labour in association shall be selected for good conduct by the governor, and the female prisoners by the matron, at his or her discretion, subject to the following restrictions, namely, that no prisoners sentenced to hard labour shall be put to work in association until they have been at least three months in prison, and in the case of prisoners who are sentenced to hard labour for over six months they shall not be put to labour in association without the special permission of a visiting justice, until they have been one-half the term of their sentence in prison.

Appendix, No. 2.

Where these Bye-laws provide that prisoners shall work a certain number of hours at any kind of industrial labour, they shall be held to mean that the prisoners shall perform such an amount of that kind of labour as, regard being had to the prisoners' strength, previous practice, and acquired skill, it is estimated they can perform by reasonable exertions in the number of hours to be devoted to it.

Chapel.

The attendance of prisoners at the prayers read daily in the chapel shall be regulated as set forth in the tables drawn up and determined upon by the visiting justices.

Books.

Every prisoner who can read shall be supplied with a Bible or New Testament, and one other devotional book, but the privilege of having secular books shall depend on the class a prisoner is in, as set forth in the tables drawn up and determined upon by the visiting justices.

Letters and Visits.

The privilege of writing letters to and receiving letters from friends, and the privilege of receiving visits from friends, shall depend on the class a prisoner is in, in accordance with tables drawn up and determined upon by the visiting justices.

Extra Diet.

All prisoners who earn a good mark daily from Monday to Saturday shall have the extra diet provided by the dietary tables for industrious prisoners during the following week; or if any prisoners shall not have been under the marking system a full week, but have been placed under it on any day in the week not later than Wednesday, and shall earn one good mark daily up to the Saturday following, they shall, in like manner, have such extra diet during the following week, always provided that the same is not forfeited by misconduct.

TABLES referred to in the Bye-Laws drawn up and determined upon by the Visiting Justices.

Class A. to include all prisoners who are not under the mark system, and all others who have not earned good marks enough to entitle them to pass into the next class. Prisoners to enter the Classes B., C., and D. as soon as they have the number of good marks at their credit in proportion to the length of their sentences stated in the scale of marks given in the heading of each class, and to remain in each class until they have good marks enough to entitle them to enter the next, or until they forfeit so many good marks that they are no longer entitled to remain in the class they are in. As no prisoners can begin to earn marks until they have been six weeks in prison, and can only earn one good mark daily, the least time in which a prisoner industriously inclined can work his way out of the A. class is two months, out of B. class three months, and out of the C. class three and a-half months from their entry into prison; and prisoners in for longer periods than six months require more marks to get into the higher classes, as shown in the heading of the different columns.

—	Class A.	Class B. Terms exceeding— Marks. 2 months, and not exceeding 6 months - 12 6 „ „ „ 12 „ - 24 12 „ - - - - - - 36	Class C. Adult male prisoners sentenced to hard labour.	To perform seven hours on the treadmill or crank, and three hours "hard labour of the ordinary kinds;" or, if the prisoner be sentenced for less than 14 days, 10 hours' oakum-picking, without work on the treadmill or crank, may be substituted at the discretion of the Governor. To attend prayers only at Divine service on Sunday, Good Friday, and Christmas Day. Not to have secular books. Not to send or receive letters. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform six hours' labour on the treadmill or crank, and three hours' "hard labour of the ordinary kinds;" or, if the first three months of the sentence have expired, nine hours' "hard labour of the ordinary kinds." To attend prayers daily. Not to have secular books. Not to send or receive letters. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform nine hours' "hard labour of the ordinary kinds," or, if half the sentence has expired, "labour in association" may be substituted at the discretion of the Governor. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. To send and receive a letter once in three months. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform labour as in Class C. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. To send and receive one letter monthly. To be allowed a visit from friends every six weeks.
Juvenile male and all female prisoners sentenced to hard labour.	To perform nine hours' oakum-picking, if sentenced to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one calendar month, and if sentenced to a term of imprisonment exceeding one calendar month, may be similarly employed, or be employed for nine hours at "hard labour of the ordinary kinds," at the discretion of the Governor. To attend prayers daily, except adult female prisoners sentenced to terms of imprisonment of 14 days and under, who shall not attend daily prayers. Not to have secular books. Not to send or receive letters. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform nine hours' "hard labour of the ordinary kinds." To attend prayers daily. Not to have secular books. Not to send or receive letters. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform nine hours' "hard labour of the ordinary kinds," or, if half the sentence has expired, "labour in association" may be substituted at the discretion of the governor or matron. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. To send and receive a letter once in three months. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform labour as in Class C. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. To send and receive one letter monthly. To receive a visit from friends every six weeks.
Adult and juvenile criminal convicted prisoners of both sexes not sentenced to hard labour.	To perform the least irksome kind of work which can be conveniently supplied and made profitable to the prison. To attend prayers daily. Not to have secular books. Not to send or receive letters. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform labour as in Class A. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. Not to send or receive letters. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform labour as in Classes A. and B. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. To send and receive a letter once in three months. Not to be allowed visits from friends.	To perform labour as in Classes A., B., and C. To attend prayers daily. To have secular books. To send and receive one letter monthly. To receive a visit from friends every six weeks.

The Governor may, at his discretion, substitute one hour-and-a-half of labour on the treadmill or cranks, by way of exercise, in place of any other kind of labour, every other day, in the case of able-bodied adult male prisoners sentenced to hard labour who are in the higher classes.

Explanatory statement on the subject of employment in the laundry, and the temporary exclusion of Roman Catholics on account of the inconvenience caused by their being called away for religious services; compensation given for such exclusion by employing them in the garden, 848–853. 919–934. 1026–1029 —— Information relative to two prisoners reported as stating, falsely, that they were Protestants, in order that they might not be excluded from the laundry, 854–861. 935–944.

Denial that there was any cause of complaint as regards the appointment and change of warders who attended upon Mr. White, 863, 864——Facility allowed to Dissenters, Jews, &c. to see ministers of their own persuasion, 865–869. 959, 960. 998, 999. 1015–1022——Irresponsibility of witness as regards the custody or care of certain articles provided by Mr. White for the Roman Catholic chapel, 870, 871. 945–950.

Practice, previously to the opening of the Roman Catholic chapel, as to Roman Catholics attending the Protestant chapel; power of objection to do so, as set forth in the rules read to them on entry, 872–881. 951–953 —— Explanation that Dissenters are specified in the return filled up on entry, 954–958——Communication of the Protestant chaplain with each prisoner after their arrival, in order to ascertain their religious persuasion; no religious advice is given on this occasion, 965–968. 1000–1014. 1023–1025. 1030.

Circumstances under which two Protestant ladies are allowed to visit the prisoners, there having at one time been seven such visitors; approval of increased facilities in this respect as regards both Protestants and Roman Catholics, 969–976.

Bond, The Rev. Vincent. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is visiting priest of the Roman Catholic prisoners in Westminster House of Correction, 378–380 —— Average of from two and-a-half to three hours a day spent by witness in the prison, for which he receives no pay, 381–390——Better status and more useful position of witness if placed on a salary, 384, 385. 405–407. 442–445 —— Claim of witness to a salary on the ground that his prison duties interfere with his parochial work, whilst there is a large Roman Catholic population in the district which contributes to the prison rates, 386 et seq.

Absence of collision between witness and the prison authorities, his only complaint being that he is unsalaried, 402. 407. 418, 419 —— Conclusion as to the chapel for the Roman Catholic prisoners being too small, 408, 409——Powerlessness of witness as to proselytising; opportunities of the Protestant chaplain in this direction, as the prisoners pass through his hands on entrance, 421–427. 430–433. 440, 441. 447——Desire of the female prisoners for employment in the laundry; impression that the Roman Catholic prisoners are not excluded, 428, 429. 437. 446.

[Second Examination.]—Further statement as to the Roman Catholic prisoners requiring the whole of witness's services, 1698–1704.

Books (Roman Catholic Prisoners). Class of books provided for the Roman Catholic inmates in Tothill Fields Prison, O'Brien 460. 547——Similar regulations at Tothill Fields Prison as to the supply of books to Roman Catholics and to Protestants, ib. 691–694——Similar system of selection of books from the library for Protestants and Roman Catholics in Coldbath Fields, Glossop 1405–1407.

Complaint as to the books supplied to the Roman Catholic prisoners in Holloway Prison, Keens 2188–2200. 2297–2307. 2355–2359. 2373–2392——Explanation relative to the supply of books to the Roman Catholic prisoners at Holloway: belief that the priest has the right of selection, Carter 2748–2755. 2794–2800.

Complaint as to certain books being withheld from the Roman Catholic prisoners at Maidstone Gaol, Purdon 2822–2827. 2859–2861. 2893–2901——Explanation relative to the statement by Mr. Purdon as regards the books for the Roman Catholic cells in Maidstone Gaol; it is not the fact that books once recognised were subsequently withheld, Talbot 5355.

Absence of complaint by the prisoners at Bristol City Gaol as to the books supplied, Myers 3196, 3197——Complaint as to the supply of books to the Roman Catholics in Bristol House of Correction; circumstance of the Protestant Bible being placed in the cells, Dykes 3270–3272. 3305–3320——Approval by the visiting justices of the books for Roman Catholic prisoners in the Bristol City and County Gaol, Gardner 4739. 4775.

BRISTOL GAOL:

1. Statement by the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman: Sundry Complaints put forward.
2. Explanatory Statement on the part of the Governor of the Gaol.

1. Statement by the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman; Sundry Complaints put forward:

Total of about seven visits paid by witness to the prison, or about two visits every year, no visit being paid unless he is officially sent for, Myers 2931–2935——Ignorance of witness as to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners, save that the governor once told him there were very few or only about "four or five at present," ib. 2936–2938. 3008, 3009. 3062–3072——Probable accuracy of the foregoing statement of the governor; reference hereon to a return showing that there were sixty-nine Roman Catholic prisoners during sixteen months, ib. 2936. 2938. 3029–3031. 3123–3126. 3166–3169. 3179–3184. 3189–3195.

Statement as to witness not having had access to the register, nor having been furnished with a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners; explanation as to his not having applied on the subject, Myers 2939–2945. 3015–3022——Circumstance of witness having written to the governor on the subject of visits to sick prisoners, ib. 2943——Instances of witness not having been sent for to see prisoners till they were in a dying state; grounds for concluding also that prisoners have expressed a wish to see him, whilst he has not been sent for, ib. 2946–2959. 2967–2969. 2984–2997. 3092–3098. 3111, 3112——Circumstance of witness having made formal application to see the prisoners without being sent for; conversation with the governor on this question, ib. 2960–2962. 3003–3007. 3073–3080.

Application by witness to one of the visiting justices, in October 1869, with a view to his being appointed chaplain; nothing has yet come of this, Myers 2963–2966. 3001–3005. 3023–3028. 3057–3061. 3142——Statement as to witness having concluded that it was useless to apply for permission to hold a service on Sunday, ib. 2970–2972. 3081–3084. 3150——Grievance on account of the inducement to Roman Catholic prisoners to leave their cells in order to attend the Protestant service on Sunday, there being two such services, ib. 2973–2983. 2998–3000. 3010–3014. 3085–3091. 3135. 3161. 3185–3188. 3201–3204.

Claim of witness to payment for prison services; how such payment might be regulated, Myers 3048–3055. 3138–3141. 3147, 3148. 3151–3160. 3198–3200——Great majority of witness's visits paid to prisoners in health, ib. 3170–3172——Smaller number of female than of male prisoners, ib. 3173–3175.

2. Explanatory Statement on the part of the Governor of the Gaol:

Total of six Roman Catholic prisoners now in the gaol, the usual number not being more than three or four, Gardner 4581–4584. 4799, 4800——Permission given to the Roman Catholic clergymen to visit the prison whenever he is sent for at the request of the prisoner; witness would admit him at other times if he made application, ib. 4585–4592. 4801, 4802——Visits of other Roman Catholic clergymen besides Mr. Myers, but not during the last two years, ib. 4592–4594. 4645–4649. 4721–4725——Statement as to Mr. Myers having never visited the same prisoner a second time, though he might do so if he liked; circumstance of witness not having made any intimation to him on this point, ib. 4595–4605.

Readiness of some of the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service on Sunday, even though they have been told they could see a priest of their own persuasion, Gardner 4621–4632. 4725–4727——Belief that, if asked, the magistrates would permit the Roman Catholic service to be performed on Sunday, ib. 4633–4636. 4711–4713. 4802.

Witness objects to nearly the whole of the evidence of Mr. Myers, and submits various details in order to show the inaccuracy of such evidence, Gardner 4637 et seq.——Statement in justification of Mr. Myers having been refused access to the creed register, ib. 4639–4644. 4776–4778. 4825–4827——Denial that witness ever had any letter from Mr. Myers upon the question of visits to sick prisoners, ib. 4650–4658. 4757, 4758——Offer made by witness to furnish Mr. Myers with a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 4659–4662. 4728.

Examination in detail as to the inaccuracy of the evidence of Mr. Myers on the question of his not having been sent for to see certain prisoners till they were in a dying state; denial also that the request of any prisoners to see Mr. Myers have not been complied with, Gardner 4663–4709. 4716–4719. 4738–4752. 4759–4774. 4801–4805. 4814, 4815——Inaccuracy of a statement by Mr. Myers that he had complained to witness of not being sent for save to see dying prisoners, ib. 4710–4715.

Entire absence of any pressure on the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service; absence of any special inducement to do so, Gardner 4725–4731——Equal treatment of the Roman Catholic and Protestant inmates, ib. 4731–4736. 4806

 ——Practicability

2. Explanatory Statement on the part of the Governor of the Gaol—continued.

——Practicability of having two services without additional expense for warders, Gardner 4798.

Absence of distinction between Protestants and Roman Catholics as regards the gratuities given to prisoners on discharge; instances of witness giving money out of his own pocket to the latter, Gardner 4806–4811. 4828–4833——Approval of more frequent visits to the prison by Mr. Myers, and of his being a prison officer; no difficulty need arise on the score of discipline, ib. 4816–4824.

Cardiff Gaol:

1. Representations and Complaints by the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman.
2. Reply to the foregoing by the Governor of the Gaol.

1. Representations and Complaints by the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman:

Average of from forty-five to fifty Roman Catholic prisoners, Signini 3371–3374——Permission granted to witness by the visiting justices in March 1868, after long and repeated applications, for the collective instruction of male prisoners once a week and the female prisoners once a week, for an hour each day, ib. 3375–3394. 3401–3403——Permission to witness also to see the Roman Catholic prisoners separately, after the collective instruction, if they express a wish to see him; small proportion sent to him in this way, ib. 3377. 3382. 3389–3400. 3430–3433. 3442–3445. 3460–3464. 3476–3481. 3296–3499. 3415–3417. 3544, 3545. 3555–3557——Non-permission to hold divine service on Sunday, ib. 3383. 3446, 3447.

Explanation that witness has not applied for increased facilities of seeing the prisoners, or for permission to have service on Sunday, inasmuch as he knew it would be useless to apply, and thought it would do more harm than good, Signini 3404–3406. 3435, 3436. 3458, 3459. 3546——Grievance on the subject of the attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant Sunday service: undue inducements to them to do so, ib. 3407–3420. 3440, 3441. 3500–3509. 3552–3555.

Comment upon a statement of the visiting justices that prisoners of all denominations accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain and attend the services in the chapel; conclusion as to this being taken in substance from the chaplain's report, Signini 3411. 3465. 3485–3487. 3530–3549——Power of the Protestant chaplain to see the Roman Catholics whenever he pleases; this power is not abused, but it might be, ib. 34213425. 3437–3439.

Claim of witness to payment for prison services; about 100 l. a year should be given, Signini 3426–3429. 3448–3457. 3466–3469. 3518–3529. 3561–3564——Facility given to witness to see sick prisoners at any time, ib. 3482–3484——Practice formerly of not assembling all the Roman Catholic prisoners for witness's instruction, ib. 3560.

2. Reply to the foregoing by the Governor of the Gaol:

Average of from forty to fifty Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol, Wren 5212——Facility given to these prisoners to see their priest, the Rev. Mr. Signini, upon their expressing a wish to that effect; details as to the practice in this respect, ib. 5213–5215. 5230, 5231. 5310–5312. 5319–5331——Visits of Mr. Signini twice a week, there being no limit upon the time for which he may remain, ib. 5216–5218. 5332–5334.

Attendance of the majority of Roman Catholics at the Protestant service on Sunday; denial that any inducement or pressure is put upon them to attend, Wren 5219–5226.

2. Reply to the foregoing by the Governor of the Gaol—continued.

5247. 5274–5287. 5308, 5309——Conclusion as to the accuracy of a statement by the visiting justices that the prisoners generally receive gratefully the visits of the Protestant chaplain; doubt as to the chaplain having been the authority for this statement, Wren 5227–5235. 5240–5242. 5248–5273. 5288–5301——Provision by Mr. Signini of the books for the Roman Catholic cells, ib. 5236, 5237.

Denial that the Protestant prisoners are ever forced to attend the visits of the chaplain; the latter however has free access to the cells, and has a key for the purpose, Wren 5238. 5243–5246——Inaccuracy of a statement by Mr. Signini that all the Roman Catholics in the prison were not assembled for his instructions, ib. 5339——Power of Mr. Signini to see any prisoner he pleases; statement hereon as to his not having the use of a key to the cells, in the same way as the Protestant chaplain, ib. 5244–5246. 5322. 5325–5327. 5337–5354.

Access of Mr. Signini to the Creed register, though he is not furnished with a copy, Wren 5302–5305. 5313——Denial that any prisoners wishing to see Mr. Signini have been kept back from doing so, ib. 5306, 5307——Due courtesy with which Mr. Signini is treated, though not a paid officer, ib. 5314, 5315.

Carnarvon, the Right Hon. the Earl of. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—As chairman of the visiting justices of the Hants County gaol at Winchester submits sundry explanations relative to the representations and complaints laid before the Committee by Mr. Collingridge, 4284 et seq.

Refusal of the visiting justices to allow the association of the Roman Catholic prisoners for religious instruction, on account chiefly of the expense necessary for another room and for additional warders; examination in defence of the conclusion thus arrived at, 4286–4335. 4359 et seq.——Statement as to the effect of a daily Roman Catholic service in deranging the working of the prison, and interfering with the regulations for its discipline, 4288. 4295–4299. 4380–4386. 4432–4440.

Estimate of from forty to forty-three as the average number of Roman Catholic prisoners, 4289–4292. 4387——Argument that the visiting justices must decide what is best and fair for the prison as a whole, and that the minority of any religious persuasion must submit to inconveniences, 4303–4306. 4313. 4380–4385. 4402–4411. 4450–4454——Conclusion as to the necessity of increasing the staff of warders if it were decided to have a Roman Catholic service on Sunday, 4307–4312. 4390, 4391. 4413–4431——Doubt as to Roman Catholic prisoners attending the Protestant service on Sunday, or as to there being any great inducement or temptation to them to do so, 4321–4332——Belief that no offer was made by Mr. Collingridge to provide an additional room for Roman Catholic service, 4333–4335. 4377, 4378.

Comment upon the statement by Mr. Collingridge that a Protestant Bible, Prayer Book, and tract, were universally placed in the cells of all Roman Catholics; particulars hereon as to the regulations on the subject of books, and as to the obstacle to certain alterations suggested, 4336–4345. 4375, 4376. 4441–4449. 4505–4508——Explanation relative to the school instruction by the Protestant chaplain; belief that there is no abuse as regards the religious portion of the instruction, 4349–4351. 4397–4399. 4412——Probability of Dissenters being less unwilling, conscientiously, than Roman Catholics to attend Church of England services, 4352–4357. 4392–4395.

Facilities for religious instruction by the Roman Catholic clergyman in the prisoners' cells, and for the administration of the Holy Communion, 4358–4371. 4380. 4469–4477——Evidence to the effect that the facilities and concessions granted by the visiting justices are sufficient to meet the grievance urged by Mr. Collingridge as regards the question of a Sunday service, 4358–4371. 4380–4384. 4387–4389——Concession to Mr. Collingridge by allowing him to have an assistant, 4369–4371. 4380, 4381.

Explanation of the action of the visiting justices in awarding a salary to the Roman Catholic clergyman; circumstance of Mr. Collingridge having made no complaint as to the amount, 4372–4374. 4396. 4482–4487——Remarks upon the correspondence of Mr. Collingridge with witness and the previous chairman of the visiting justices, 4377–4379. 4499——Reference to a report by the visiting justices as explaining the decisions arrived at on the question of association of Roman Catholic prisoners for religious worship and on other matters, 4380–4384.

Grounds upon which it has not been permitted to use the Protestant chapel for the Roman Catholics; undue interference thereby with the prison regulations and management, 4380–4386. 4390, 4391——Conclusion as to the Court of Quarter Sessions having decided not to comply with Mr. Collingridge's application, 4380–4384——Obstacle to carrying out an arrangement whereby the Roman Catholics might stay away from part of the school instruction, 4399–4401. 4460——Admission as to religious instruction of all classes of prisoners being very important, with a view to reformation, 4455–4459.

Further statement as to the difficulties and expense in the way of a Roman Catholic service on Sunday, whether held at the same time as the Protestant service or at a different time, 4461-4463. 4500, 4501——Small number of visiting justices as compared with the number of the Court of Quarter Sessions, 4464, 4465——Statement as to its being competent to any member of the court to re-open the question of a Sunday service for the Roman Catholics, even though the visiting jurtices may make no recommendation on the subject, 4466-4468. 4509-4511.

Dissent from the view that it is felt as any special hardship or punishment by the Roman Catholic prisoners to remain in their cells whilst the other prisoners are associated for worship, 4478-4481——Opinion adverse to certain provisions of the Prison Ministers' Act being made compulsory, 4488-4494——Approval of its being left to the good sense and right feeling of the justices to provide religious facilities for Roman Catholic prisoners, 4489-4512——Difficulty in laying down any compulsory rule for the payment of Roman Catholic chaplains on the capitation principle, 4491-4493. 4504. 4513.

Statement as to many of the Roman Catholic prisoners in Hants gaol being partly chargeable to Government, as coming from the army or navy, 4495-4497——Admission as to the expediency of removing what is felt as a grievance, if it be possible to do so without encountering what may be a greater evil, 4502——Doubt as to the proposed facilities to Roman Catholics having much effect as regards ultimate reformation, 4503.

Willingness of the Hants Court of Quarter Sessions to give all reasonable facilities, without their being constrained to do so by Act of Parliament, 4512——Approval of the salaries of Roman Catholic chaplains being arranged with reference partly to their time in the prisons, and partly to the number of prisoners, 4513——Dissent from the view that Roman Catholic prisoners require from their clergy more frequent spiritual instruction than Protestants require, 4514.

Comment upon the unjustifiable statement of Mr. Collingridge that the visiting justices had proposed a salary for the Roman Catholic clergyman of the Hants Prison, merely in order that they might be able to say they had done so, 4515.

Carter, Mr. Alderman John. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is an Alderman of the City of London, and, as such, one of the committee of management of the gaol at Holloway, 2400-2403——Varying number of Roman Catholic prisoners at Holloway, there being now about forty-three, 2405-2409. 2487-2489——Payment made to the Protestant chaplain of the prison, who is also provided with a residence, and has due facilities for seeing the Protestant prisoners, and holding service on Sunday, 2410-2416. 2425-2428——Objection to payment in the case of the Roman Catholic clergyman, 2417-2421.

Permission given to the Roman Catholic clergyman to visit the prison twice a week, there being no Sunday service for the Roman Catholic, 2422-2433——Examination relative to an application by Mr Keens, the Roman Catholic priest, for permission to have service on Sunday, and for other facilities; grounds upon which refused, 2434 et seq.——Question considered as to witness having been justified in describing Mr. Keens' application as improper and impertinent, 2445-2467. 2550, 2551. 2699.

Evidence as to the grounds for refusing a salary to Mr. Keens; question hereon as to any salary having been applied for, 2471-2475. 2515-2523. 2569-2572. 2605-2632. 2657. 2718-2730. 2760, 2761. 2772-2793——Examination as to the management of the prison generally, witness declining to admit that further facilities for seeing the Roman Catholic prisoners, and for holding Divine service, should be given to Mr. Keens, and approving of distinct religious treatment of Protestants and Roman Catholics in a Protestant country, 2477 et seq.

Belief as to its being open to Mr. Keens to visit oftener than twice a week, though he is not allowed to go on Sunday, 2510-2514. 2560-2565——Reference to the long time allowed to elapse without a reply having been given to Mr. Keens' application; impression that this is not the fault of the Court of Aldermen, 2524-2528. 2732-2735——Statement as to Mr. Keens having been refused access to the creed register; doubt as to such refusal being illegal, 2529-2531. 2538-2542. 2637-2652. 2696-2998. 2765-2769.

Constitution of the Gaol Committee of the Court of Aldermen; absence of any Roman Catholic members, 2668-2690——Instances of prisoners not wishing to be troubled with the priest's visits, 2547. 2700-2703. 2746. 2762-2764——Mode of treatment of Dissenters in the prison; objection to any payment to a Dissenting clergyman, 2662-2667. 2692-2695——Explanation relative to the supply of books to the Roman Catholic prisoners; belief that the priest has the right of selection, 2748-2755. 2794-2800.

Change of Religion. Explanation as to prisoners at Clerkenwell who enter themselves as Protestants or as Roman Catholics not being allowed subsequently to change, Pownall 1693——Statement in further explanation and approval of the practice at Clerkenwell, as to the record of each prisoner's religion on his arrival, and as to subsequent change not being allowed, ib. 1718-1723. 1831-1838. 1859. 1922-1924——

Explanation

Explanation as to witness's application for power to give evidence as to the religion of prisoners at Holloway Prison, who, being registered as Protestants, desire to be entered as Roman Catholics, Keens 2218–2223——Discouragement of any change of religion in the Government prisoners, Du Cane 4940–4942——Approval of the obstacles in Government prisons to change their recorded religion by prisoners, ib. 4983–4985. 5001–5005.

Chapels. Circumstance of the visiting justices not being required by Act to provide Roman chapels; approval of chapels being ordered wherever practicable, Pownall 1964–2000——Advantage of separate chapels for the Protestants and Roman Catholics, Dykes 3282–3284——Non-objection to the use of the Protestant Chapel for Roman Catholic service, Signini 3565——Facility with which the same chapel serves for Roman Catholics and Protestants in Liverpool Borough Prison, without interference with the prison discipline or labour, Nugent 4091–4098. 4140–4144——Advantage of two chapels in each prison, Du Cane 5021, 5022.

Clerkenwell House of Detention. Average of about sixty Roman Catholic prisoners, Crescitelli 1518–1523. 1615——Permission given to witness about four months ago, to have a Roman Catholic service on Sunday, he having applied to that effect, ib. 1524–1527——Attendance of witness on week days for two hours daily; want of an extension of this time, ib. 1528–1530. 1587——Advantage also of a second service on Sunday, ib. 1531–1534.

Witness is not paid, though his prison work greatly interferes with his parish duties, Crescitelli 1537, 1538. 1591–1596. 1605–1610. 1616, 1617——Evidence in support of witness being allowed to have access to prisoners in their cells, and also to hold divine service daily, ib. 1538–1582. 1613——Temptation to Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant Service, ib. 1543–1549.

Circumstance of witness having had permission to instruct the prisoners collectively two days in the week, and having given up one day in order to be allowed to perform service on Sunday, Crescitelli 1572–1577. 1614. 1625–1631. 1642–1648——Terms of appointment of witness as visiting priest, in succession to Dr. Faa, ib. 1600–1604——Objectionable character of the chapel accommodation; obstacle to using the same chapel for all the prisoners, ib. 1611, 1612. 1618–1624.

Belief that all the applications made by the Roman Catholic priest, in the case of Clerkenwell prison, have been acceded to by the magistrates, Pownall 1651——Difficulty as to space, which prevents any better chapel accommodation being provided at Clerkenwell for the Roman Batholics; witness understood that the priest was satisfied with what has been done in this respect, ib. 1651, 1652——Use formerly of the chapel as a dormitory, ib. 1651.

Necessity of still using the Roman Chapel at the House of Detention as a dormitory, Pownall 1705, 1706——Examination to the effect that at Clerkenwell and other Middlesex prisons, some applications have been made relative to the Roman Catholic prisoners, since the passing of the Prison Ministers' Act of 1863, which have been refused or have not been at once complied with by the magistrates, ib. 1724–1735. 1964——Doubt as to the visiting priest at Clerkenwell Prison being thoroughly suited for the position, ib. 1868–1872.

Coldbath Fields House of Correction:

1. Sundry Details submitted by the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman, Complaint being made on various Points.
2. Explanations in Detail on the part of the Visiting Magistrates, and of the Governor of the Prison.

1. Sundry Details submitted by the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman, Complaimt being made on various Points:

Visits paid by witness four days in the week besides Sunday; statement hereon that he was allowed only three days up to last August, and that he is precluded from visiting daily, though he has not made direct application on the subject, Kirner 1032–1035. 1114–1123. 1173, 1174. 1181, 1182. 1196–1198——Attendance of witness on Sunday from nine to eleven, only one service being allowed for the Roman Catholics, whilst there are two for the Protestants, ib. 1036–1043. 1110–1113. 1175, 1176. 1248——Average of about 2,000 prisoners, of whom nearly 400 are Roman Catholics, ib. 1044, 1045——Necessity of witness attending the infirmary whenever sent for, ib. 1046–1049.

1. Sundry Details submitted by the Roman Catholic Clergyman, &c.—continued.

Great disadvantage in witness not being allowed to assemble more than twelve prisoners at a time for daily instruction, Kirner 1050–1053. 1163, 1164——Serious interference of the prison work with witness's parochial duties, whereas he receives no payment for the former; conclusion as to his having a fair claim to be placed on a salary, ib. 1061–1078. 1154–1158. 1202–1211. 1219. 1239, 1240——Tendency of the Protestant authorities of the prison to interfere with the Roman Catholic prisoners; instances of this, ib. 1079–1087. 1091–1094. 1100. 1127–1153. 1159–1161. 1177–1180. 1199–1201. 1216–1218. 1230–1236. 1244–1247. 1257.

Great advantage if witness could attend the prisoners every day, and had free access to the prisoners, Kirner 1088–1090. 1202–1207——Circumstance of witness's place having at times been filled by another clergyman; approval of the latter by the visiting justices, ib. 1101–1103. 1167–1172. 1212.——Adequacy of the present chapel accommodation for the Roman Catholics, ib. 1104–1109——Explanation as to witness not having applied for a salary, ib. 1154–1158. 1243.

Compliance, as a rule, with the applications made by witness to the visiting justices, Kirner 1173–1182——Advantage if witness were allowed an assistant; he has not applied for one, ib. 1183, 1184. 1251–1256——Approval of the manner in which the secular teaching is conducted, ib. 1262–1266.

Statement that the majority of the Roman Catholic prisoners are not assembled for reading on Sunday afternoon, Kirner 1506–1510——Belief that it is a prisoner and not a warder who reads, ib. 1507–1513——Numerous applications from prisoners to witness to see them; he does not restrict himself to those who apply, ib. 1511. 1515.

Probable mistake of witness in saying that he was restricted to seeing twelve prisoners at a time, the rule having been changed, Kirner 1512——Application made for Sunday afternoon service without effect, ib. 1514——Circumstance of the printed rules hung up in witness's room at the prison having stated until the last few days that he could not see more than ten prisoners collectively; recent alteration, extending the number to twenty-five prisoners, ib. 1694–1697.

2. Explanations in Detail on the part of the Visiting Magistrates, and of the Governor of the Prison:

Statement as to the Roman Catholic prisoners from the associated wards of the prison being assembled every Sunday afternoon, when books approved by the priest are read aloud to them; doubt when this practice commenced, or what numbers are assembled, Glossop 1270–1282. 1294, 1295. 1323–1328. 1370, 1371. 1377–1379. 1412–1425. 1433–1436. 1455. 1500–1502. 1466–1470——Belief that application has not been made by the Roman Catholic clergyman for an afternoon service on Sunday; difficulty, however, as likely to interfere with the prison discipline, ib. 1283–1295. 1361–1364. 1372, 1373. 1380–1382——Willingness of witness, individually, to extend every reasonable facility to Mr. Kirner, the Roman Catholic priest, as to the holding of services, &c., ib. 1284. 1290. 1299. 1362–1364. 1377.

Grounds for objecting to the Roman Catholic clergyman being a salaried officer of Coldbath Fields Prison; feeling respectively, of the visiting justices and the Court of Quarter sessions upon this question, Glossop 1298–1301. 1349–1357. 1471–1475. 1477–1499——Difficulty of the visiting justices in persuading the Court of Quarter Sessions to allow mass to be celebrated in the prison, ib. 1299. 1341–1348——Statement showing that Mr. Kirner may assemble the Roman Catholic prisoners up to twenty-five in number for daily instruction; belief that he does not exercise this power, ib. 1302–1304. 1358–1366. 1398–1401. 1426–1432——Impression that Mr. Kirner very seldom sees prisoners separately unless they express a wish to see him, ib. 1304–1306. 1365–1369.

Poor class of the population whence the Roman Catholic prisoners are supplied; this applies equally to the Protestant prisoners, Glossop 1307–1322. 1402, 1403——Circumstance of witness not being aware of any application by Mr. Kirner to the magistrates during the last two years; temporary absence of witness when there may have been applications, ib. 1332–1336. 1370–1376. 1395–1397. 1460–1465——Practice as to registering the religion of each prisoner on entry; impropriety if the Protestant chaplain has subsequently visited any of those entered as Roman Catholics, ib. 1386–1397——Belief that there are no special regulations for Roman Catholics not affecting Protestants, ib. 1404.

Circumstance of witness having been unaware of an application by Mr. Kirner's predecessor to deliver a catechetical instruction on Sunday afternoon, Glossop 1437–1443——Non-attendance of any Roman Catholic prisoners at the Protestant service on Sunday afternoon, ib. 1450——The books are read by a Roman Catholic prisoner, selected for the purpose, ib. 1454——Very few Protestant prisoners who attend two services on Sunday, ib. 1458, 1459——Belief that all the Protestant prisoners attend daily service, ib. 1476.

Probable origin of the permission given at Coldbath Fields Prison to have readings on Sunday

2. Explanations in Detail, &c.—continued.

Sunday afternoon for the Roman Catholics; obstacle to all these prisoners attending, Pownall 1653–1658. 1668——Willingness of witness to promote a Sunday afternoon service for the Roman Catholics, if applied for; belief as to the willingness also of the visiting justices generally, ib. 1659–1661——Difficulty apprehended on the score of warders' services on Sunday afternoon, ib. 1662–1667.

Explanation that not more than 80 prisoners are assembled for the afternoon reading on Sunday, this arrangement being left to the governor, Pownall 1707–1710——Further statement upon the question of witness and the visiting justices consenting to an afternoon service on Sunday for the Roman Catholics as well as the Protestants; less difficulty than witness had supposed as regards warders, ib. 1711–1717.

Particulars as to the refusal, for some time, of permission to the Roman Catholic priest to see more than one prisoner at once, or to celebrate mass, legal opinion having been twice taken on this question before permission was granted, Pownall 1729–1735. 1795–1819. 1873–1884——Reference to the first opinion taken by the visiting justices as being to the effect that it was legal for the priest to see more than one prisoner at a time; further opinion taken to the opposite effect, upon which the magistrates have since acted, and have allowed Divine service to be held, ib. 1731–1735. 1795–1819. 1873–1884.

Statement on the subject of the visiting justices having required that each Roman Catholic prisoner should state, on entry, whether he wished to receive the visits of a priest, Pownall 1781–1789——Explanation as to restrictions having been imposed in order to prevent familiar conversations in the cells, or improper communications being made to the prisoners by the priest, ib. 1790–1794. 1820–1830. 1860–1867. 1889. 1927, 1928. 1986–1997.

Witness, as governor of the prison, explains the circumstances under which an order was issued in the prison to the effect that the Roman Catholic prisoners might attend the Protestant service if he wished, Colvill 2022–2031——Possibility of the order, if continued, leading to proselytism; it has, however, been rescinded, ib. 2032–2037——Grounds for objecting to a second Roman Catholic service on Sunday afternoon; obstacle to a second service for all the Protestant prisoners, ib. 2038–2058——Absence of complaints of proselytising on either side, ib. 2059–2061.

Belief as to there being no interference by the Protestant chaplain with Roman Catholic prisoners after entry, Colvill 2062, 2063——Practice of taking down the creed register without the chaplain being present, ib. 2064–2068—— Difficulty in the way of a daily Roman Catholic service; impression that there has been no application for one, ib. 2069–2072——Explanation as to the rules relative to the number of Roman Catholics which might be assembled for daily instruction, having only recently been made known to Dr. Kirner, ib. 2073.

Collingridge, The Rev. Ignatius. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Since 1848 has visited the Roman Catholic prisoners in the Hants County Gaol, at Winchester, 3566–3568——Necessity at first of the prisoners sending for witness before he could see them; relaxation subsequently, by which he was allowed to see them at any reasonable hour, 3569–3582——Appointment of witness as visiting clergyman, 3583, 3584——Permission now given to witness to visit the prison twice a-day, though he is only allowed to see the prisoners separately, 3585–3587. 3892–3906.

Repeated applications made by witness to have Divine service, but without effect; several objections made, 3588–3592. 3603–3614. 3625. 3655–3658. 3686–3699. 3907–3909. 3928–3930. 3961—— Average of about forty-five Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol, these being chiefly soldiers, 3593–3602——Marked distinction between Dissenters and Roman Catholics as regards attendance at Protestant services, 3603–3609——Offer by witness to provide a room for Divine service, and to fit it up, 3610–3614. 3772–3776. 3786–3788.

Grounds for complaint as to the attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant service on Sunday; inducement to such attendance, 3615–3624. 3681–3685. 3713–3718. 3758–3760. 3910, 3911——Objection by the magistrates to the use, by witness, of the Protestant chapel for a Sunday service; belief that there was no good reason for such objection on the ground of discipline, 3626–3632. 3787–3810. 3864–3866. 3940–3945. 3964. 3977–3990——Long distance necessarily travelled by witness, and long time occupied, in going to and from the gaol, 3633–3636. 3743. 3823. 3913, 3914.

Supply of Roman Catholic books provided by the justices on witness's recommendation; complaint, however, as to the Protestant Bible and Prayer Book, and a Protestant tract, being invariablly placed in each cell, 3637–3649. 3752–3757. 3858–3863. 3915–3920. 3974–3976——Importance of witness being allowed to see the prisoners for a longer time than three hours daily, and being also allowed to instruct them collectively; beneficial results anticipated, 3650–3655. 3670–3672. 3731–3737. 3876–3879. 3962, 3963.

Payment of a salary of 40 l. a year to witness's predecessor and to witness, the Protestant chaplain receiving 300 l. a year; details on this question, witness contending that he is fairly entitled to a much larger payment for his services, though he has not made application to that effect, 3659-3670. 3719-3730. 3738-3748. 3782, 3783. 3811-3836. 3885-3888. 3946-3960. 3971-3973. 3991-4001.

Argument that the Roman Catholic prisoners are entitled to precisely the same facilities for religious instruction as the Protestants, and that equality of treatment should be enforced by Act of Parliament, 3674-3680. 3807. 3882-3884——List furnished to witness, showing the prisoners entered as Roman Catholics; doubt, however, as to there being any creed register, 3696-3712. 3837-3840——Impression as to the visiting justices having offered a salary to witness's predecessor, chiefly for the purpose of being able to say that they had offered it, 3813——Instances of Roman Catholics entering themselves as Protestants, and vice versâ, 3840-3857.

Visits paid by the Protestant chaplain to the Roman Catholic cells; witness, however, makes no complaint on this score, 3867-3870——Complaint as to the instruction in the school; amendment suggested in this respect, 3871-3875. 3931-3937. 3965-3970——More liberal spirit evinced by the visiting justices, and increased concessions granted to witness, since Lord Carnarvon has been chairman, 3880, 3881——Correspondence between witness and the visiting justices adverted to 3921-3939.

Colvill, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Harpur. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is Governor of Coldbath Fields House of Correction, 2021——Explains the circumstances under which an order was issued in the prison to the effect that the Roman Catholic prisoners might attend the Protestant service if they wished, 2022-2031——Possibility of this order, if continued, leading to proselytism; it has, however, been rescinded, 2032-2037——Grounds for objecting to a second Roman Catholic service on Sunday afternoon; obstacle to a second service for all the Protestant prisoners, 2038-2035.

Absence of complaints of proselytising on either side, 2059-2061——Belief as to there being no interference by the Protestant chaplain with the Roman Catholic prisoners after entry, 2062. 2063——Practice of taking down the creed register without the chaplain being present, 2064-2068——Difficulty in the way of a daily Roman Catholic service; impression that there has been no application for one, 2069-2072——Explanation as to the alteration of the rules relative to the number of Roman Catholics which might be assembled for daily instruction having only recently been made known to Dr. Kirner, 2073.

Compulsory Appointment (Roman Catholic Chaplains). Conclusion as to the expediency of Parliament, if so minded, directing that paid chaplains shall be appointed, Pownall 1751-1755. 1890-1897. 1914-1921. 1949-1955. 1999-2002——Opinion adverse to certain provisions of the Prisons Ministers Act being made compulsory, Earl of Carnarvon 4488-4491.

Conclusion of the Committee in favour of prison authorities being required by the law to appoint Roman Catholic ministers, Rep. iii.

Creed Registers. Approval of prisoners being classified on entrance either as Protestants or Roman Catholics, White 291-293——Improvement if some independent authority were to inquire into the religious persuasion of any prisoner when there is a doubt in the matter, Kirner 1241, 1242——Respects in which access to the creed register at Holloway would be very useful to witness, Keens 2216, 2217. 2362-2372——Statement as to Mr. Keens having been refused access to the creed register; doubt as to such refusal being illegal, Carter 2529-2531. 2538-2542. 2637-2652. 2696-2698. 2765-2769——Statement as to Roman Catholics sometimes registering themselves as Protestants in the belief that they will be better treated, Myers 3099-3110. 3176-3178.——See also Change of Religion.

Crescitelli, The Rev. Dominic. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is visiting Roman Catholic clergyman of Clerkenwell House of Correction, 1516, 1517——Average of about sixty Roman Catholic prisoners, 1518-1523. 1615——Permission given to witness about four months ago to have service on Sunday, he having applied to that effect, 1524-1527——Attendance of witness on week days for two hours daily; want of an extension of this time, 1528-1530. 1587——Advantage also of a second service on Sunday, 1531-1534.

Statement

Statement as to witness having had to provide certain articles essential for his celebrations at the altar; improved accommodation required, 1535, 1536. 1583–1586. 1588–1590. 1597–1599. 1632–1641——Witness is not paid, though his prison work greatly interferes with his parish duties, 1537, 1538. 1591–1596. 1605–1610. 1616, 1617——Evidence in support of witness being allowed to have access to prisoners in their cells, and also to hold Divine service daily, 1538–1582. 1613——Temptation to Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service, 1543–1549.

Circumstance of witness having had permission to instruct the prisoners collectively two days in the week, and having given up one day in order to be allowed to perform service on Sunday, 1572–1577, 1614. 1625–1631. 1642–1648——Terms of appointment of witness as visiting priest in succession to Dr. Faa, 1600–1604——Objectionable character of the chapel accommodation; obstacle to using the same chapel for all the prisoners, 1611, 1612. 1618–1624.

Crime. Very large proportion of the prisoners at Liverpool Borough Prison whose crimes arise directly or indirectly from drink, Nugent 4077–4080.

Crofton, The Right Hon. Sir Walter, C.B. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Large experience of witness in England and Ireland in connection with prisons and their management, 5054, 5055——Equality of Roman Catholic and Protestant prisoners in Ireland, both in the convict prisons and the county prisons, as regards the services of chaplains of their own persuasion, 5058, 5059——Very beneficial effect, in a religious and reformatory sense, of the appointment of chaplains in Ireland, in accordance with the religious persuasion of the prisoners, 5060–5064——Conclusion as to the good effect likely to follow from the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains in English prisons; instances of such appointment, with excellent results, 5065–5070.

Equally good effect anticipated in England, as in Ireland, on the score of discipline, by the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, 5071–5073. 5108——Expediency of the Roman Catholic chaplain having the same status as the Protestant chaplain, 5074–5080. 5185, 5186——Statement as to there being salaried Protestant chaplains in gaols and workhouses in Ireland, though there are sometimes hardly any Protestant inmates, 5082–5090. 5098–5107.

Consideration of the system of remuneration of Roman Catholic chaplains in England, witness approving of the capitation principle to a great extent, but submitting that the salary should be a matter of special contract in each case between the prison authorities and the chaplain, 5091–5097. 5109, 5110. 5115 et seq.——Probable necessity of an increase of staff in some prisons in order to carry out a Roman Catholic service on Sunday, 5111–5114.

Evidence opposed to the amount of salaries being fixed by Act, or to any scale being laid down, witness holding that the compulsory appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains is all that is required; there should, however, be an appeal from the magistrates to the Home Secretary, 5121 et seq.——Objection to any provision in a new Act relative to travelling expenses, 5140, 5141.

Probable advantage of a power to transfer long-sentence prisoners from one county prison to another, so as to obviate the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains where there are very few Catholic prisoners, 5142–5145——Discretion left to the grand jury in Ireland as to the amount of salary, 5146–5148——Opinion as to there being no necessity for the appointment of Dissenting chaplains, 5176–5179.

Dark Cells. Importance of the visits of witness to prisoners in the dark cells at Wakefield Gaol, Eyre 4544–4547.

Discharged Prisoners. Excellent operation of a discharged prisoners' relief society at Liverpool, Nugent 4116–4120.

Discipline. Obedience to be paid by witness to all the prison rules at Coldbath Fields, if an officer of the prison; Kirner 1098, 1099. 1165, 1166. 1186–1191. 1237, 1238——Necessity, on the score of discipline, of restricting the visits of the clergy, Glossop 1503–1505——Excellent effect as regards discipline at Liverpool Borough Gaol, through the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain, Nugent 4047–4051. 4128.

Facility in all prisons of defining the respective duties of Protestant and Roman Catholic chaplains, Rathbone 4166——Favourable effect upon the discipline of the Liverpool Borough prison, more especially on the female side, since the appointment of Mr. Nugent, ib. 4168–4170. 4182.

Advantage of witness's position as regards the observance of the rules by the prisoners at Millbank, Zanetti 4863. 4899——Conviction that discipline would be improved by a more more general appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, Zanetti 4899. 4934——Equally good effect anticipated in England, as in Ireland, on the score of discipline, by the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, Sir W. Crofton 5071–5073. 5108.

Dissenters. Instances of applications for visits of Dissenting clergy to Tothill Fields Prison; reference hereon to the practice of returning all Dissenters as Protestants, O'Brien 647, 648. 750–760. 795–801——Facility allowed to Dissenters, Jews, &c., at Tothill Fields, to see ministers of their own persuasion, Mrs. Billiter 865–869. 959, 960. 998, 990. 1015–1022——Explanation that Dissenters are specified in the return filled up on entry, ib. 954–958——Absence of difficulty as regards the religious services of Dissenters in Coldbath Fields prison, these not objecting to the ministrations of the same Protestant chaplain, Kirner 1223–1229. 1249, 1250. 1258–1261.

Circumstance of their being no payment to Dissenting ministers in respect of Dissenters in prisons, Pownall 1685. 1690–1692——Mode of treatment of Dissenters in the Holloway Prison; objection to any payment to a Dissenting clergyman, Carter, 2662–2667. 2692–2695.

Marked distinction between Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters as regards attendance at the chapel services, Signini 3417–3419. 3488–3494; Collingridge 3603–3609; Nugent 4032–4035——Very rare instances of Dissenters objecting to attend the Church of England services, Rathbone 4213–4215. 4221–4223——Probability of Dissenters being less unwilling, conscientiously, than Roman Catholics to attend Church of England services, Earl of Carnarvon 4352–4357. 4392–4395——Readiness of Dissenters to attend the Church of England service, whereas Roman Catholics must not do so, Eyre 4567–4571.

Small proportion of the prisoners at Bristol Gaol who are Dissenters; readiness of these to attend the Church of England services, and to see the Protestant chaplain, Gardner 4606–4620——Belief as to Dissenters making no difficulty about attending the Church of England service, Zanetti 4893–4896. 4900, 4901. 4906–4908——Willingness of any Dissenters in the Government prisons to be classed under the head of "Protestants," Du Cane 4991–4994. 5036——Opinion as to there being no necessity for the appointment of Dissenting chaplains, Sir W. Crofton 5176–5179.

Very rare instances of Protestant prisoners objecting to join in Church of England worship, Rep. iii——The Committee consider that when such cases occasionally occur, they may be satisfactorily met by the prison authorities under the powers which they now possess by Act of Parliament, ib.

Divine Service. Inducement to Roman Catholic prisoners to attend Protestant service as a means of enabling them to leave their cells, where there is no Roman Catholic service, Rathbone, 4221. 4282; Zanetti 4890, 4891; Eyre 4548; Du Cane 4986. 4999——Serious obligations upon Roman Catholics to attend religious worship upon Sunday, it being a great grievance when they cannot do so, Eyre 4549–4554.

Dissent from the view that it is felt as any special hardship or punishment by the Roman Catholic prisoners to remain in their cells whilst the other prisoners are associated for worship, Earl of Carnarvon 4478–4481; Gardner 4789–4797.

Facility of providing Roman Catholic services in the county prisons generally, Du Cane 5016–5018.

Du Cane, Captain Edmund Frederick. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons, 4938, 4939——Practice in the Government prisons as to recording the religion of each prisoner on entrance; any subsequent change of religion is discouraged as much as possible, 4940–4942——Free access of the Roman Catholic priest to the Roman Catholic cells, 4943, 4944——Rules authorised by Sir George Grey relative to the religious instruction of Roman Catholics in convict prisons; satisfactory working of these on the score of discipline, 4945, 4948.

Total of eleven Government prisons under witness's board, there being Roman Catholic prisoners in nine such prisons and a Roman Catholic chaplain in each prison, 4949–4951. 4958——Particulars relative to the salaries of the chaplains at different periods, there being now an uniform rate of pay; approval of the present arrangement although the number of prisoners differs greatly in different prisons, 4952–4966. 4995–4998——Secular instruction in the prisons by Roman Catholic schoolmasters; absence of complaint on controversial grounds, 4967–4969.

Exceedingly beneficial effect of the status held by Roman Catholic chaplains; decided improvement since their appointment in the conduct of the prisoners, 4970-4982——Approval of the obstacles to change of their recorded religion by prisoners, 4983-4985. 5001-5005——Inducement to Roman Catholics to record themselves as Protestants, where there is no Roman Catholic service; escape thereby from their cells on Sunday, 4986. 4999——Concurrence in the opinion of Mrs. Gibson of Parkhurst prison as to the excellent effect of religious instruction upon the prisoners, 4987-4990.

Willingness of any Dissenters in the Government prisons to be classed under the head of "Protestants," 4991-4994. 5036——Approval of an extension to prisons generally of the system of Roman Catholic chaplains, as in Government prisons, 5000——Practice of distribution of Roman Catholics in Government prisons, the smallest number being at Fulham, 5006-5009——Provision by Government of the fittings of the chapels, a certain scale being laid down, 5010-5014. 5019, 5020——Resident priest at each prison save Fulham, 5015.

Facility of providing Roman Catholic services in the county prisons, 5016-5018——Advantage of two chapels in each prison, 5021, 5022——Concentration of Jewish prisoners at Portsmouth, where the Rabbi regularly attends, 5023-5025. 5033-5035——Facility to any minister to attend a Government prison, if sent for by a prisoner, 5026. 5037——Inexpediency of the cost of a small increase of staff precluding the holding of Roman Catholic service on Sunday in county prisons, 5027-5032. 5038.

Objection made on the ground of discipline to the visits of a Wesleyan minister at Millbank, 5039-5041——Payment of a Presbyterian chaplain at Millbank and Chatham prisons, 5042-5045——Appointment of Roman Catholic warders, irrespectively of religious grounds, 5046, 5047.

Dykes, the Rev. Thomas. (Analysis of his Evidence).—Has occasionally been sent for, to visit the Roman Catholic prisoners in the House of Correction at Bristol; very few such visits, 3205-3222. 3263. 3265——Doubt as to the number of Roman Catholic prisoners, witness having never received any list of them, 3207-3209. 3223, 3224. 3248-3251. 3267, 3268. 3323-3326——Explanation as to witness not having applied for permission to visit the prison freely, and to hold service on Sunday, 3225-3232. 3243-3247. 3262-3264. 3285-3300. 3346-3348. 3351-3353.

Complaint as to the Roman Catholic prisoners attending the Protestant service on Sunday, 3233-3242. 3269——Benefit expected from a Roman Catholic service on Sunday, and from other facilities for religious instruction, 3243-3245. 3273-3276. 3354, 3355——Statement in support of payment of the Roman Catholic visiting clergyman, especially if permitted to hold Divine service, and to see the prisoners as often as is desirable, 3252-3261. 3277, 3278. 3301-3304. 3327-3334.

Complaint as to the supply of books to the Roman Catholics; circumstance of the Protestant Bible being placed in the cells, 3270-3272. 3305-3320——Information relative to the cost of fitting up a Roman Catholic chapel, and providing vestments, sacred vessels, &c., 3279-3281. 3321, 3322. 3337-3345. 3349, 3350. 3356-3364——Advantage of separate chapels for the Protestants and Roman Catholics, 3282-3284.

E.

Eyre, the Rev. Charles. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Was appointed in October 1869, as Roman Catholic minister of Wakefield gaol; acted for six years previously as substitute for the late Roman Catholic chaplain, 4520-4524——Average of about 250 Roman Catholics in Wakefield gaol, 4525——Satisfactory facilities of witness for holding Divine service, and for the religious instruction of the prisoners on week days, both in chapel and in their cells; free access to the latter, 4528-4536. 4539-4541. 4572-4574——On Sunday, there is only one service for the Roman Catholic, 4537-4539.

Importance of the visits of witness to prisoners in the dark cells, 4544-4547——Inducement to the Roman Catholics to attend the Protestant service, if they had not a service of their own, 4548——Serious obligation upon Roman Catholics to attend religious worship upon Sunday, it being a great grievance when they cannot do so, 4549-4554——Complete harmony between witness and the Protestant chaplain and other prison officers, his recognition as a prison officer being very important, 4555-4562——His salary is 150*l.* a year, 4563.

Large proportion of the prisoners open to reformatory influences; frequent instances of this, 4564-4566——Readiness of Dissenters to attend the Church of England service, whereas Roman Catholics must not do so, 4567-4571——Devotion of the whole of witness's time to his duties in the prison, 4575-4577.

F.

Fulham Prison. Salary of only 30 l. a year in the case of the Roman Catholic chaplain of Fulham prison, there being very few prisoners, and the priest not being fully employed, Du Cane 4953–4955. 4960. 4995. 4997. 5007, 5008.

G.

Gardner, Captain James Anthony. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Has been Governor of the common gaol for the city and county of Bristol for the last thirty-two years, 4578–4580——Total of six Roman Catholic prisoners now in the gaol, the usual number not being more than three or four, 4581–4584. 4799, 4800——Permission given to the Roman Catholic clergyman to visit the prison whenever he is sent for at the request of a prisoner; witness would admit him at other times if he made application, 4585–4592. 4801, 4802——Visits of other Roman Catholic clergymen, besides Mr. Myers, but not during the last two years, 4592–4594. 4645–4649. 4721–4725.

Statement as to Mr. Myers having never visited the same prisoner a second time, though he might do so if he liked; circumstance of witness not having made any intimation to him on this point, 4595–4605——Small proportion of the prisoners who are Dissenters; readiness of these to attend the Church of England services, and to see the Protestant chaplain, 4606–4620——Readiness of some of the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service on Sunday, even though they have been told they could see a priest of their own persuasion, 4621–4632. 4725–4727——Belief, that if asked, the magistrates would permit the Roman Catholic service to be performed on Sunday, 4633–4636. 4711–4713. 4802.

Witness objects to nearly the whole of the evidence of Mr. Myers, and submits various details in order to show the inaccuracy of such evidence, 4637 et seq.——Statement in justification of Mr. Myers having been refused access to the creed register, 4639–4644. 4776–4788. 4825–4827——Denial that witness ever had any letter from Mr. Myers upon the question of visits to sick prisoners, 4650–4658. 4757, 4758——Offer made by witness to furnish Mr. Myers with a list of the Roman Catholic prisoners, 4659–4662. 4720.

Examination in detail as to the inaccuracy of the evidence of Mr. Myers, on the question of his not having been sent for to see certain prisoners till they were in a dying state; denial also, that the request of any prisoners to see Mr. Myers has not been complied with, 4663–4709. 4716–4719. 4738–4752. 4759–4774. 4801–4805. 4814, 4815——Inaccuracy of a statement by Mr. Myers, that he had complained to witness of not being sent for save to see dying prisoners, 4710–4715.

Entire absence of any pressure on the Roman Catholic prisoners to attend the Protestant service; absence of any special inducement to do so, 4725–4731——Equal treatment of the Roman Catholic and Protestant inmates, 4731–4736. 4806——Approval by the visiting justices of the books for Roman Catholic prisoners, 4739. 4775——Dissent from the view that it is considered any relief by the Roman Catholics to leave their cells for chapel, 4789–4797.

Practicability of having two services without additional expense for warders, 4798——Absence of distinction between Protestants and Roman Catholics as regards the gratuities given to prisoners on discharge; instances of witness giving money out of his own pocket to the latter, 4806–4811. 4828–4833——Approval of more frequent visits to the prison by Mr. Myers, and of his being a prison officer; no difficulty need arise on the score of discipline, 4816–4824.

Gibson, Mrs. Concurrence in the opinion of Mrs. Gibson, of Parkhurst Prison, as to the excellent effect of religious instruction upon the prisoners, Du Cane 4987–4990.

clergyman being a salaried officer of Coldbath Fields Prison; feeling, respectively, of the visiting justices and of the court of quarter sessions upon this question, 1298–1301. 1349–1357. 1471–1475. 1477–1499.

Difficulty of the visiting justices in persuading the court of quarter sessions to allow mass to be celebrated in the prison, 1299. 1341–1348——Statement showing that Mr. Kirner may assemble the Roman Catholic prisoners, up to twenty-five in number, for daily instruction; belief that he does not exercise this power, 1302–1304. 1358–1360. 1398–1401. 1426–1432——Impression that Mr. Kirner very seldom sees prisoners separately unless they express a wish to see him, 1304–1306. 1365–1369.

Poor class of the population whence the Roman Catholic prisoners are supplied; this applies equally to the Protestant prisoners, 1307–1322. 1402, 1403——Circumstance of witness not being aware of any application by Mr. Kirner to the magistrates during the last three years; temporary absence of witness, when there may have been applications, 1332–1336. 1370–1376. 1395–1397. 1460–1465——Practice as to registering the religion of each prisoner on entry; impropriety if the Protestant chaplain has subsequently visited any of those entered as Roman Catholics, 1386–1397.

Belief that there are no special regulations for Roman Catholics not affecting Protestants, 1404——Similar system of selection of books from the library for Protestants and Roman Catholics, 1405–1407——Circumstance of witness having been unaware of an application, by Mr. Kirner's predecessor, to deliver a catechetical instruction on Sunday afternoon, 1437–1443——Refusal of the visiting justices to supply a new altar as applied for by the Roman Catholic priest, 1444–1449.

Non-attendance of any Roman Catholic prisoners at the Protestant service on Sunday afternoon, 1450——Explanation as to the governor of the prison being now absent from London, 1451, 1452——Very few Protestant prisoners who attend two services on Sunday, 1458, 1459——Belief that all the Protestant prisoners attend daily service, 1476——Necessity, on the score of discipline, of restricting the visits of the clergy, 1503–1505.

Government Prisons. Favourable opinion expressed as regards the scale of payment of Roman Catholic clergymen in the Government prisons, O'Brien 721.

Practice in the Government prisons as to recording the religion of each prisoner on entrance; any subsequent change of religion is discouraged as much as possible, and properly so, Du Cane 4940–4942. 4983–4985. 5001–5005——Free access of the Roman Catholic priest to the Roman Catholic cells, ib. 4943, 4944——Rules authorised by Sir George Grey relative to the religious instruction of Roman Catholics in convict prisons; satisfactory working of these on the score of discipline, ib. 4945–4948.

Total of eleven Government prisons under witness's board, there being Roman Catholic prisoners in nine such prisons, and a Roman Catholic chaplain in each prison, Du Cane 4949–4951. 4958——Particulars relative to the salaries of the chaplains at different periods, there being now an uniform rate of pay; approval of the present arrangement although the number of prisoners differs greatly in different prisons, ib. 4952–4966. 4995–4998——Secular introduction in the prisons by Roman Catholic schoolmasters; absence of complaint on controversial grounds, ib. 4967–4969.

Concurrence as to the excellent results of the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains in Government prisons, and as to the expediency of applying the same system to county prisons, Du Cane 4970–4982. 5000; Henderson 5048–5053.

Practice of distribution of Roman Catholics in Government prisons, the smallest number being at Fulham, Du Cane 5006–5009——Resident priest at each prison save at Fulham, ib. 5015——Facility to any minister to attend a Government prison, if sent for by a prisoner, ib. 5026. 5037.

Concurrence of evidence adverted to by the Committee as to the satisfactory working of the system in Government prisons, where salaried Roman Catholic chaplains attend the prisoners of their own persuasions, Rep. iii.

Holloway Prison (City of London):

1. Statement by the Roman Catholic visiting Clergyman; sundry Complaints made.

2. Explanations on the part of the City Authorities, or Governing Body.

1. Statement by the Roman Catholic visiting Clergyman; sundry Complaints made:

Witness visits the prison twice a week for about an hour and a half each time, Keens 2133——On 20th July 1869, there were fifty-six Roman Catholic prisoners; statement hereon as to witness not having access to the creed register, ib. 2134, 2135——Witness is precluded from seeing the prisoners except singly, ib. 2136, 2137——He sees only those prisoners who on entering express a wish to see him, and has been refused a list of all Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 2138-2151.

Particulars relative to applications made by witness in December 1868, for certain facilities with reference to the Roman Catholic prisoners; no official reply has ever been received, Keens 2152-2162——Statement as to the very improper way in which witness's applications were commented upon by Mr. Alderman Wilson, and other City magistrates; he has abstained in consequence from any further applications, ib. 2164 et seq.——Circumstance of their being no Roman Catholic service on Sunday, whilst there are two Protestant services, ib. 2177-2179. 2354. 2393-2396——Complaint as to the inducement to Roman Catholics to attend the Protestant service on Sunday, ib. 2180-2187. 2210. 2253-2259. 2282-2286. 2308-2316.

Great benefit anticipated if witness could visit the prison frequently, and could hold service on Sunday, Keens 2201-2209. 2224-2228. 2271-2281. 2292-2296. 2341. 2351-2353. 2397-2399—— Restrictions upon the access of witness to the cells of all the Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 2229-2247. 2367, 2368——Statement as to witness not seeing more than one prisoner at a time, ib. 2249-2252.

Further evidence as to the undue Protestant pressure upon the Roman Catholic prisoners; illustrations on this point, Keens 2253-2276. 2282-2286. 2308-2329. 2333. 2350—— Witness could not spare more time to the prison, ib. 2279——Absence of application for payment of the Roman Catholic clergyman, ib. 2287, 2288—— Heavy parish duties of witness; inability of his parishioners to pay him for his parish services, ib. 2337-2340. 2397-2399.

2. Explanations on the part of the City Authorities, or Governing Body:

Varying number of Roman Catholic prisoners at Holloway, there being now about forty-three, Carter 2405-2409. 2487-2489——Payment made to the Protestant chaplain of the prison, who is also provided with a residence, and has due facilities for seeing the Protestant prisoners and holding a service on Sunday, ib. 2410-2416. 2425-2428—— Objection to payment in the case of the Roman Catholic clergyman, ib. 2417-2421.

Permission given to the Roman Catholic clergyman to visit the prison twice a week, there being no Sunday service for the Roman Catholics, Carter 2422-2433——Examination relative to an application by Mr. Keens, the Roman Catholic priest, for permission to have service on Sunday and for other facilities; grounds upon which refused, ib. 2434 et seq.——Question considered as to witness having been justified in describing Mr. Keens' applications as improper and impertinent, ib. 2445-2467. 2550, 2551. 2699.

Evidence as to the grounds for refusing a salary to Mr. Keens; question hereon as to any salary having been applied for, Carter 2471-2475. 2515-2523. 2569-2572. 2605-2632. 2657. 2718-2730. 2760, 2761. 2772-2793——Examination as to the management of the prison generally, witness declining to admit that further facilities for seeing the Roman Catholic prisoners and for holding divine service should be given to Mr. Keens, and approving of distinct religious treatment of Protestants and Roman Catholics in a Protestant country, ib. 2477 et seq.

Belief as to its being open to Mr. Keens to visit oftener than twice a week, though he is not allowed to go on Sunday, Carter 2510-2514. 2560-2565——Reference to the long time allowed to elapse without a reply having been given to Mr. Keens' application; impression that this is not the fault of the court of aldermen, ib. 2524-2528. 2732-2735——Instances of prisoners not wishing to be troubled with the priest's visits, ib. 2547. 2700-2703. 2746. 2762-2764.

Keens, The Rev. Cornelius James. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—In visiting Roman Catholic priest of the City Prison, Holloway, 2131, 2132——Visits the prison twice a week for about an hour and a-half each time, 2133——On 20th July 1869, there were fifty-six Roman Catholic prisoners; statement hereon as to witness not having access to the creed register, 2134, 2135——He is precluded from seeing the prisoners except singly, 2136, 2137—— He sees only those prisoners who on entering express a wish to see him, and has been refused a list of all the Roman Catholic prisoners, 2138–2151.

Particulars relative to applications made by witness in December 1868, for certain facilities with reference to the Roman Catholic prisoners; no official reply has ever been received, 2152-2162——Statement as to the very improper manner in which witness's applications were commented upon by Mr. Alderman Wilson and other City magistrates; he has abstained in consequence from any further applications, 2164 et seq.

Circumstance of there being no Roman Catholic service on Sunday whilst there are two Protestant services, 2177–2179. 2354. 2392–2396——Complaint as to the inducement to Roman Catholics to attend the Protestant service on Sunday, 2180-2187. 2210. 2253–2259. 2282–2286. 2308–2316——Complaint also as to the books supplied to the Roman Catholic prisoners, 2188-2200. 2297–2307. 2355–2359. 2373-2392.

Great benefit anticipated if witness could visit the prison frequently, and could hold service on Sunday, 2201–2209. 2224–2228. 2277–2281. 2292–2296. 2341. 2351–2353. 2397–2399——Respects in which access to the creed register would be very useful to witness, 2216, 2217. 2362-2372——Explanation as to witness's application for power to give evidence as to the religion of prisoners who, being registered as Protestants, desire to be entered as Roman Catholics, 2218–2223.

Restrictions upon the access of witness to the cells of all the Roman Catholic prisoners, 2229–2247. 2367, 2368——Statement as to witness not seeing more than one prisoner at a time, 2249–2252——Further evidence as to the undue Protestant pressure upon the Roman Catholic prisoners; illustrations on this point, 2253–2276. 2282–2286. 2308–2329. 2333. 2350——Absence of application for payment of the Roman Catholic clergyman, 2287, 2288——Heavy parish duties of witness; inability of his parishioners to pay him for his prison services, 2337–2340. 2397–2399.

Kirner, The Rev. Dr. Æmilian. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is Roman Catholic visiting clergyman of Coldbath Fields Prison; commenced to visit in 1864 or 1865; 1031. 1101–1103——Visits paid by witness four days in the week, besides on Sunday; statement hereon that he was allowed only three days up to last August, and that he is precluded from visiting daily, though he has not made direct application on the subject, 1032-1035. 1114–1123. 1173, 1174. 1181, 1182. 1196–1198——Attendance of witness on Sunday from nine to eleven, only one service being allowed for the Roman Catholics whilst there are two for the Protestants, 1036–1043. 1110–1113. 1175, 1176. 1248——Average of about 2,000 prisoners of whom nearly 400 are Roman Catholic, 1044, 1045.

Necessity of witness attending the infirmary, whenever sent for, 1446–1049——Great disadvantage in witness not being allowed to assemble more than twelve prisoners at a time for daily instruction, 1050–1053. 1163, 1164——Circumstance of witness's predecessors having had to provide altar plate, vestments, and other essentials of divine service, 1054–1060. 1125, 1126. 1213–1215.

Serious interference of the prison work with witness's parochial duties, whereas he receives no payment for the former; conclusion as to his having a fair claim to be placed on a salary, 1061–1078. 1154–1158. 1202–1211. 1219–1229. 1239, 1240——Tendency of the Protestant authorities of the prison to interfere with the Roman Catholic prisoners; instances of this, 1079–1087. 1091–1094. 1100. 1127–1153. 1159–1161. 1177–1180. 1199–1201. 1216–1218. 1230–1236. 1244–1247. 1257.

Great advantage if witness could attend the prison every day, and had free access to the prisoners, 1088–1090. 1202–1207——Importance of the improved status of witness if a salaried officer, 1095-1097. 1192-1195——Obedience to be paid by witness to all the prison rules, if an officer of the prison, 1098, 1099. 1165, 1166. 1186-1191. 1237, 1238.

Circumstance of witness's place having at times been filled by another clergyman; approval of the latter by the visiting justices, 1101-1103. 1167-1172. 1212——Adequacy of the present chapel accommodation for the Roman Catholics, 1104-1109——Explanation as to witness not having applied for a salary, 1154-1158. 1243——Compliance as a rule with the applications made by witness to the visiting justices, 1173-1182——Advantage if witness were allowed an assistant; he has not applied for one, 1183, 1184. 1251-1256.

Absence of difficulty as regards the religious services of Dissenters in the prison, these not objecting to the ministrations of the same Protestant chaplain, 1223-1229. 1249, 1250. 1258-1261——Improvement if some independent authority were to inquire into the religious persuasion of any prisoner, when there is a doubt in the matter, 1241, 1242——Approval of the manner in which the secular teaching is conducted, 1262-1266.

[Second Examination.]—Statement that the majority of the Roman Catholic prisoners are not assembled for reading on Sunday afternoon, 1506-1510——Belief that it is a prisoner, and not a warder, who reads, 1507. 1513——Numerous applications from prisoners to witness to see them; he does not restrict himself to those who apply, 1511. 1515——Probable mistake of witness in saying that he was restricted to seeing twelve prisoners at a time, the rule having been changed, 1512——Application made for Sunday afternoon service without effect, 1514.

[Third Examination.]—Circumstance of the printed rules hung up in witness's room at the prison having stated, until within the last few days, that he could not see more than ten prisoners collectively; recent alteration, extending the number to twenty-five prisoners, 1694-1697.

Liverpool Borough Gaol:

Witness has been Roman Catholic chaplain to the Borough Gaol, Liverpool, since the 1st January 1864, Nugent 4002-4004——Voluntary services rendered by witness's predecessor, who only visited the prison when sent for at the request of any prisoner, ib. 4005-4007——Average of about 500 Roman Catholics and 400 Protestants in the prison, ib. 4008, 4009——Very large Roman Catholic population in Liverpool, consisting chiefly of the labouring class, ib. 4010-4018. 4036, 4037.

Constant and frequent attendance of witness at the prison, every facility being given to him to see the prisoners and to hold services, and the most intimate and harmonious relations existing between him and the governor and Protestant chaplain, Nugent 4029-4031. 4081-4086. 4145, 4146. 4154, 4155——Very objectionable practice previously to the holding of Roman Catholic services on Sunday, with respect to the attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant service; temptation to such attendance, ib. 4038-4047. 4085-4090. 4133-4139.

Statement as to the male prisoners not being allowed to attend daily prayers until they have been in the prison between two and three months; question as to the wisdom of this regulation, Nugent 4059-4066. 4105-4115. 4129-4132. 4158-4160.

Salary of 300 l. a year received by witness, a house rent-free having been added two years ago, 4074-4076. 4081, 4082. 4125-4127. 4156——Devotion of the whole of witness's time to the prison, ib. 4099, 4100——Facility of access of witness to the creed register, ib. 4145, 4146——Very uneducated character of the Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 4147-4149——Explanation as to witness being appointed by the borough magistrates, whilst his salary is provided by the corporation, ib. 4156, 4157.

Witness testifies to the very beneficial results consequent upon the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain of the prison, in the person of Mr. Nugent, whilst there has been no clashing between him and the Protestant chaplain, Rathbone 4164 et seq.——Explanation of the circumstances attending the appointment of Mr. Nugent by the bench of magistates, ib. 4190-4202——Payment of the chaplain out of the public rates, ib. 4204-4206——Mr. Nugent's appointment has been an unmixed good to the Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 4220.

Evidence in explanation and defence of the regulation whereby for some time after entry the prisoners are not allowed to attend daily prayers, and are required to behave well applied on the subject, 2939–2945. 3015–3022——Circumstance of witness having written to the governor on the subject of visiting sick prisoners, 2943——Instances of witness not having been sent for to see prisoners till they were in a dying state; grounds for concluding also that prisoners have expressed a wish to see him, whilst he has not been sent for, 2946–2959. 2967–2969. 2984–2997. 3092–3098. 3111–3122.

Circumstance of witness not having made formal application to see the prisoners without being sent for; conversation with the governor on this question, 2960–2962. 3003–3007. 3073–3080——Application by witness to one of the visiting justices in October 1869, with a view to his being appointed chaplain; nothing has yet come of this, 2963–2966. 3001–3005. 3023–3028. 3057–3061. 3142——Statement as to witness having concluded that it was useless to apply for permission to hold a service on Sunday, 2970–2972. 3081–3084. 3150.

Grievance on account of the inducement to Roman Catholic prisoners to leave their cells in order to attend the Protestant service on Sunday, there being two such services, 2973–2983. 2998–3000. 3010–3014. 3085–3091. 3135. 3161. 3185–3188. 3201–3204——Low intellectual condition of the Roman Catholic prisoners; benefit anticipated if witness had increased facilities for their religious instruction, 3032–3044——Opinion that if witness were allowed two days in the week for instruction, and at least one service on Sunday, that would suffice, 3045–3047. 3149. 3198–3200.

Claim of witness to payment for prison services; how such payment might be regulated, 3048–3055. 3138–3141. 3147, 3148. 3151–3160. 3198–3200——Statement as to Roman Catholics sometimes registering themselves as Protestants in the belief that they will be better treated, 3099–3110. 3176–3178——Doubt as to any proselytism resulting from Roman Catholics attending the Protestant service; tendency of the system to that effect, 3127–3132. 3162–3165. 3204.

Expediency of witness being placed in the same position as the Protestant chaplain, as regards free access to the prisoners, 3133–3137. 3143–3146. 3178——Great majority of witness's visits paid to prisoners in health, 3170–3172——Smaller number of female than male prisoners, 3173–3175——Absence of complaint by the prisoners as to the books supplied, 3196, 3197.

N.

Newgate Prison. Small number of Roman Catholics in the prison, Phelan 2077–2082——Several respects in which increased facilities are required for the religious instruction of these prisoners; explanation as to witness not having made application on the subject, ib. 2083 et seq.——Expediency of some payment to the Roman Catholic clergyman who attends the prison, if he were to do all that is required, ib. 2086–2097. 2113–2130.

Nugent, the Rev. James. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Has been Roman Catholic chaplain to the Borough Gaol at Liverpool since the 1st January 1864; 4002–4004——Voluntary services rendered by witness's predecessor who only visited the prison when sent for at the request of any prisoner, 4005–4007——Average of about 500 Roman Catholics and 400 Protestants in the prison, 4008–4009——Very large Roman Catholic population in Liverpool, consisting chiefly of the labouring class, 4010–4018. 4036, 4037.

Constant and frequent attendance of witness at the prison, every facility being given to him to see the prisoners, and to hold services, and the most intimate and harmonious relations existing between him and the Governor and Protestant chaplain, 4019–4031. 4081–4086. 4145, 4146. 4154, 4155——Essential distinction between Dissenters and Roman Catholics as regards attendance at Church of England services, 4032–4035——Very objectionable practice previously to the holding of Roman Catholic services on Sunday, with respect to the attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant service; temptation to such attendance, 4038–4047. 4085–4090. 4133–4139.

Excellent effect as regards discipline through the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain, 4047–4051. 4128——Grounds for the conclusion that the ministrations of witness, and his status as an officer of the prison, are very beneficial in leading to the reformation of prisoners, 4050–4059. 4101–4104. 4067–4073. 4128. 4149——Statement as to the male prisoners not being allowed to attend daily prayers until they have been in the prison between two and three months; question as to the wisdom of this regulation, 4059–4066. 4105–4115. 4129–4132. 4158–4160.

Salary of 300 l. a year received by witness, a house rent free having been added two years' ago, 4074–4076. 4081, 4082. 4125–4127. 4156——Very large proportion of the prisoners whose crimes arise directly or indirectly from drink, 4077–4080——Facility with which the same chapel serves for Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, without interference with the prison discipline or labour, 4091–4098. 4140–4144——Devotion of the whole of witness's time to the prison, 4099, 4100.

Excellent operation of a discharged prisoners' relief society at Liverpool, 4116–4120——Facility of access of witness to the creed register, 4145, 4146——Very uneducated character character of the Roman Catholic prisoners, 4147-4149——Allowance by the authorities of the sum required by witness for providing certain essentials for Roman Catholic worship, 4150–4153——Opinion that about 100 l. would be required in providing all the articles necessary, 4153——Explanation as to witness being appointed by the borough magistrates, whilst his salary is provided by the corporation, 4156, 4157.

O.

O'Brien, Captain Donatus. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is Chairman of the visiting justices of Westminster House of Correction, 448——Convenient accommodation for about 150 prisoners in the Roman Catholic chapel of the prison; conclusion that the chapel is sufficiently large with reference to the average number of such prisoners, 449–451. 540–543. 576–578. 583——Appointment of six Roman Catholic warders for attending exclusively to the Roman Catholic prisoners, 452, 453. 581.

Employment of Protestant and Roman Catholic prisoners in the laundry without reference to their religious persuasion; representation by Mr. White, the Roman Catholic clergyman, which led to this regulation, 454–456. 533–537. 561——Former regulation excluding Roman Catholics from the laundry, because of the inconvenience through their being required for religious services; compensation in the shape of garden work given for such exclusion, 457–459. 484–487. 533–537. 556–560.

Class of books provided for the Roman Catholic inmates, 460. 547——Permission given to singing at the Roman Catholic service, 461——Secular instruction given to the Roman Catholics by the schoolmistress, who is a Protestant, the religious instruction resting with the clergy, 462, 463. 530–532——Objection at first to the Roman Catholic clergymen giving instruction to the prisoners collectively, on the ground that it was considered illegal, 464–467.

Grounds upon which the visiting justices refused an application by Mr. White for a Scripture reader for the Roman Catholic prisoners, 468. 473, 474. 522–529. 544–546. 571–573——Refusal of an application in 1867 from a Roman Catholic lady to visit the prison, like applications from Protestants having been refused in 1866; legal opinion taken as to the illegality of such visits, 469–472. 548–550——Statement as to seven lady visitors who had been long allowed to see the prisoners not having been excluded when the legal opinion was taken, 471. 515–521. 550–552——Refusal of a harmonium in the Roman Catholic chapel adverted to and explained, 475, 476.

Information relative to the fitting up of the Roman Catholic chapel, and the refusal of the justices to provide certain articles stated by Mr. White to be essential, 477–479. 491–504. 512–514. 553–555——Refusal of an application by Mr. White for the services of a boy as clerk, though permission was afterwards granted on removal of objection as to the age and size of the boy, 480–482. 505–511——Entire inaccuracy of the inference that the temporary exclusion of Roman Catholic females from the laundry had a proselytising tendency, 486. 575.

Absence of differences between Mr. White's successor and the visiting justices, 488–490. 582——Statement as to there being no religious communication between the Protestant chaplain and the prisoners on the entry of the latter, 538, 539——Removal of Mr. White from the prison on the ground that he had communicated to the public press a letter from the magistrates, such letter having arisen out of the laundry question, 562–570——Opinion that Mr. White was never an officer of the prison, 567, 568——Explanation that witness, individually, is favourable to the payment and regular appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, 582. 601–605.

Evidence in support of the conclusion that little if any reformatory effect is produced by religious ministrations in prisons, 584–600——Approval of the same facilities generally to Roman Catholic as to Protestant clergymen, 595–608——Defence of the action of the visiting justices in gradually making concessions to Mr. White, 609——Disapproval of the former arrangement by which Mr. White was obliged to see the prisoners, singly, in a common cell, 610.

[Second Examination.] Further explanation relative to the exclusion for a time of Roman Catholic females from work in the laundry, whilst it was afterwards decided to remove the prohibition, 611–618. 669–671——Examination in further support of the opinion that the services of prison chaplains produce no appreciable good effect; views expressed by witness before the Transportation Committee of 1856 adverted to hereon, 619–626. 774, 775.

Statement as to witness not having felt it his duty as a visiting justice of Westminster Prison to bring forward the question of payment of the Roman Catholic clergyman, 627–646. 649, 650——Instances of applications for visits of Dissenting clergy to the prison; reference hereon to the practice of returning all Dissenters as Protestants, 647, 648. 750–760. 795–801——Sufficiency of the chapel accommodation further adverted to, 651–654.

Further particulars relative to the appointment of six Roman Catholic warders, 655-657. 712-717. 730-734——Statement in further explanation of the visiting justices having found they had legal power to permit the Roman Catholic priest to see the prisoners collectively, 658. 662——Withdrawal of refusal in the matter of the application for a clerk further adverted to and explained, 659, 660. 663, 664. 707-711.

Action of the magistrates in the prohibition of some lady visitors, whilst others were allowed, further considered and defended, 661. 665-668——Question further considered whether the exclusion of Roman Catholics from the laundry might not have a proselytising effect, 672-677——Grounds for concluding that the dismissal of Mr. White was a proper act on the part of the magistrates, and that the course taken by him in making public his complaints was an improper proceeding, 678-683. 689, 690. 695-700. 771-773. 802.

Anticipated progress of public opinion in the direction of granting salaries to Roman Catholic chaplains; approval, however, of legislation on the subject, 684-688. 747-749. 803-805. 812-814——Similar regulations at Tothill Fields Prison as to the supply of books to Roman Catholics and to Protestants, 691-694——Refusal of an application by Mr. White for a schoolmistress, 704-706——Reasons for laundry work in prisons being in favour with the prisoners, 718, 719.

Scheme suggested for the payment of Roman Catholic chaplains of prisons, the minimum salary to be 15 l. a year, where there are but few Roman Catholics, and the payment to be at the rate of 10 s. a head where there are more than a certain number, 720-728. 735-746. 806-811——Examination as to the relative salaries of Protestant and Roman Catholic chaplains, witness submitting that the clergy of the Established Church should be more highly remunerated, 724-729. 735-746. 761-770. 780-794. 821, 822——Long services of Mr. Hine, the Protestant chaplain of Westminster Prison, his salary being now 410 l., which is none too much, 735-737. 817-819.

Disadvantage, as well as advantage, in having Roman Catholic and Protestant warders in the same prison, 776-779——Doubt whether Roman Catholic chaplains, even where appointed with salaries, are officers of the prisons, 815, 816. 823, 824——Letter dated 29th May 1869 refusing Mr. White's application for a Scripture reader, 820.

P.

Phelan, the Rev. Patrick. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is in attendance temporarily at Newgate Prison as visiting Roman Catholic clergyman; does duty also in Moorfields, 2074-2076. 2087-2092. 2107. 2125——Small number of Roman Catholics in Newgate, 2077-2082. 2126——Several respects in which increased facilities are required for the religious instruction of these prisoners; explanation as to witness not having made application on the subject, 2083 et seq.——Expediency of some payment to the Roman Catholic clergyman who attends the prison if he were to do all that is required, 2086-2097. 2113-2130.

Pownall, Henry. (Analysis of his Evidence).—Long experience of witness as Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for Middlesex, and as Visiting Justice of the Prisons, 1650——Belief that all the applications made by the Roman Catholic priest in the case of Clerkenwell Prison have been acceded to by the magistrates, 1651——Difficulty as to space which prevents any better chapel accommodation being provided at Clerkenwell for the Roman Catholics; witness understood that the priest was satisfied with what has been done in this respect, 1651, 1652——Use formerly of the chapel as a dormitory, 1651.

Probable origin of the permission given at Coldbath Fields Prison to have readings on Sunday afternoon for the Roman Catholics; obstacle to all these prisoners attending, 1653-1658. 1668——Willingness of witness to promote a Sunday afternoon service for the Roman Catholics at Coldbath Fields, if applied for; belief as to the willingness also of the visiting justices generally, 1659-1661——Difficulty apprehended on the score of warders' services on Sunday afternoon, 1662-1667.

Evidence to the effect that witness approves of the payment of Roman Catholic clergymen for prison duties, but objects to their having status as prison officers, 1669-1689——Probable difficulty through the visiting justices having no power to select or appoint whatever priest they please, 1673-1683——Circumstance of there being no payment to dissenting ministers in respect of dissenters in prison, 1685. 1690. 1692——Explanation as to prisoners who enter themselves as Protestants or as Roman Catholics not being allowed subsequently to change, 1693.

[Second Examination.]—Necessity of still using the Roman Catholic chapel at the House of Detention as a dormitory, 1705, 1706——Explanation that at Coldbath Fields not more than eighty prisoners are assembled for the afternoon reading on Sunday, this arrangement being left to the governor, 1707-1710——Further statement upon the question of witness and the visiting justices consenting to an afternoon service on Sunday for the Roman Catholics as well as for the Protestants; less difficulty than witness had supposed as regards warders, 1711-1717.

Statement in further explanation and approval of the practice as to the record of each prisoner's religion on his arrival at Clerkenwell, and as to subsequent change not being allowed, 1718–1723. 1831–1838. 1859. 1922–1924——Examination to the effect that at Clerkenwell and other Middlesex prisons some applications have been made relative to the Roman Catholic prisoners since the passing of the Prison Ministers Act of 1863, which have been refused, or have not been at once complied with by the magistrates, 1724–1735. 1964.

Particulars as to the refusal, for some time, of permission to the Roman Catholic priest at Coldbath Fields to see more than one prisoner at once, or to celebrate mass, legal opinion having been twice taken on this question before permission was granted, 1729–1735. 1795–1819. 1873–1884. 1964——Reference to the first opinion taken by the visiting justices as being to the effect that it was not legal for the priest to see more than one prisoner at a time; further opinion taken to the opposite effect, upon which the magistrates have since acted, and have allowed Divine Service to be held, 1731–1735. 1795–1819. 1873–1884.

Examination in further explanation and support of witness's objections to the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, though he does not object to salaries being given; particulars hereon as to the views respectively of the visiting justices, and of the Court of Quarter Sessions, 1736–1780. 1811–1814. 1839–1857. 1890–1921. 1925, 1926. 1929–1948. 1963. 1965–1968——Suggestions as to the mode in which Roman Catholic chaplains might be paid; expediency in the first place of Parliament, if so minded, directing that payment shall be made, 1751–1755. 1890–1897. 1914–1921. 1949–1955. 1984, 1985. 1999, 2000. 2002.

Statement on the subject of the visiting justices of Coldbath Fields Prison having required that each Roman Catholic prisoner should state, on entry, whether he wished to receive the visits of a priest, 1781–1789——Explanation as to restrictions having been imposed in order to prevent familiar conversations in the cells, or improper communications being made to the prisoners by the priest, 1790–1794. 1820–1830. 1860–1867. 1889. 1927, 1928. 1986–1997——Opinion as to the objectionable conduct of the late Roman Catholic clergyman at Westminster Prison on the subject of the laundry, 1821–1830. 1860.

Doubt as to the visiting priest at Clerkenwell Prison being thoroughly suited for the position, 1868–1872——Impression that there have been no complaints as to the size of the Roman Catholic chapel at Westminster Prison; facility of enlarging the accommodation, 1885–1888. 1958–1962. 2000——Refusal of the visiting justices to provide certain articles considered by the priest at Westminster to be essential for his ministrations; argument in defence of such refusal, 1888. 1960. 1969–1983. 2001. 2003–2020.

Grounds for dissenting from the exclusion of lady visitors; very beneficial results produced by such visits, 1930——Obstacle to inquiry by the visiting justices into the mode of instruction pursued by the Roman Catholic clergy in prisons, 1956, 1957——Circumstance of the visiting justices not being required by Act to provide Roman Catholic chapels; approval of chapels being ordered wherever practicable, 1964–2000.

Presbyterian Chaplains. Payment of a Presbyterian chaplain at Millbank and Chatham prisons, Du Cane 5042–5045.

Preston Gaol. Reference to the rules at Preston Gaol relative to the duties of the Roman Catholic chaplain, Sir W. Crofton 5068–5070. 5091.

Prison Officers. (Status of Roman Catholic Chaplains.) See Roman Catholic Chaplains, 2.

Proselytism. Powerlessness of witness at Tothill Fields Prison as to proselytising; opportunities of the Protestant chaplain in this direction as the prisoners pass through his hands on entrance, Bond 421–427. 430–433. 440, 441. 447——Doubt as to proselytism resulting from Roman Catholics attending the Protestant service as at Bristol; tendency of the system to that effect, Myers 3127–3132. 3162–3165. 3204.

See also Change of Religion. Creed Register. Divine Service.

Public Opinion. Anticipated progress of public opinion in the direction of granting salaries to Roman Catholic chaplains; approval, however, of legislation on the subject, O'Brien 684–688. 747–749. 803–805. 812–814.

Purdon, the Rev. James. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is visiting Roman Catholic priest of Maidstone Gaol, 2801, 2802——Average of between forty-five and fifty Roman Catholic prisoners, the number much larger in the hopping season, 2803–2808——Visits of witness to the prison every day, whilst on Sunday he has two services; the authorities, in fact, offer him every facility for religious instruction, 2812–2821. 2867–2872. 2888–2892——Complaint as to certain books being withheld from the Roman Catholic prisoners, 2822–2827. 2859–2861. 2893–2901.

Treatment of witness by the magistrates and the prison authorities with the greatest possible courtesy and consideration, he having but few grounds of complaint, 2827, 2828. 2841–2845. 2926, 2927——Undue expense put upon witness in the provision of vestments and altar furniture; enhanced outlay necessary for this purpose in other prisons, such as Wakefield, 2829–2834. 2858, 2859. 2862–2866.

Very poor character of witness's mission at Maidstone, his income being scanty in the extreme, and payment having been refused for his services at the prison; grounds upon which he considers himself entitled to a salary, 2835–2857. 2873–2887. 2902–2925——Beneficial effect of witness's ministrations in the prison, 2852, 2853.

R.

Rathbone, Samuel Greg. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is chairman of the visiting justices of Liverpool borough prison, 4161–4163——Testifies to the very beneficial results consequent upon the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain of the prison, in the person of Mr. Nugent, whilst there has been no clashing between him and the Protestant chaplain, 4164 et seq.——Favourable effect upon the discipline of the prison, more especially on the female side, since the appointment of Mr. Nugent, 4168–4170. 4182——Conclusion as to the value of Mr. Nugent's influence with respect to the reformation of Roman Catholic prisoners, 4171–4183.

Question considered as to the amount of advantage resulting from the status of permanent prison officer, in the case of Roman Catholic chaplains, 4184–4187. 4216–4220. 4232–4235——Explanation of the circumstances attending the appointment of Mr. Nugent by the bench of magistrates, 4190–4202——Payment of the chaplain out of the public rates, 4204–4206——Approval of the appointment and payment of Roman Catholic chaplains where there are not so many Roman Catholic prisoners as at Liverpool; difficulty in drawing any line, 4207–4212. 4236. 4274. 4275.

Very rare instance of Dissenters objecting to attend the Church of England services, 4213–4215. 4221–4223——Anxiety of the prisoners to attend public worship rather than remain in the solitude of their cells, 4221. 4282——Inexpediency of the State not providing religious instruction for all classes of prisoners, 4224, 4225.

Evidence in explanation and defence of the regulation in force in Liverpool borough prison, whereby for some time after entry the prisoners are not allowed to attend daily prayers and are required to behave well during this period, as a condition of such attendance, 4226–4231. 4237–4273. 4276–4281.

Frequency of Roman Catholics entering themselves as Protestants, before a Catholic chaplain was appointed; that is, in order to escape labour by attending the Protestant service, 4282——Statement to the effect that the action of the justices in appointing a Roman Catholic chaplain to the borough gaol has not been without its influence on the good order of the town, 4283.

Reformation of Prisoners. Opinion that at Tothill Fields prison the cost of Roman Catholic chaplains would be well covered by the increased reformation of prisoners and the less charge upon the rates, White 367, 368——Evidence in support of the conclusion that little if any reformatory effect is produced by religious ministrations in prisons, O'Brien 584–600——Examination in further support of the opinion that the services of prison chaplains produce no appreciable good effect; views expressed by witness before the Transportation Committee of 1856, adverted to hereon, ib. 619–626. 774, 775——Opinion that very little good is done by religious services in prisons; illustration hereon, Glossop 1293. 1382–1385.

Grounds for the conclusion that the ministrations of witness at Liverpool borough prison and his status as an officer of the prison, are very beneficial in leading to the reformation of prisoners, Nugent 4050–4059. 4101–4104. 4167–4173. 4128. 4149——Conclusion as to the value of Mr. Nugent's influence with respect to the reformation of Roman Catholic prisoners, Rathbone 4171–4183.

Doubt as to the proposed facilities to Roman Catholic clergymen having much effect as regards ultimate reformation, Earl of Carnarvon 4503——Large proportion of the prisoners at Wakefield Gaol open to reformatory influences; frequent instances of this, Eyre 4564–4566——Belief that the spiritual instruction given by witness in Millbank tends very much to the reformation of the prisoners; diminished number of reconvicted prisoners adverted to hereon, Zanetti 4859–4862. 4909–4915.

Religious Instruction. Important distinctive teaching between Roman Catholic and Protestant inmates of prisons, White 376, 377——Obstacle to inquiry by the visiting justices into the mode of instruction pursued by the Roman Catholic clergy in prisons, Pownall 1956, 1957——Examination in support of distinct religious treatment of Roman Catholics and Protestants in a Protestant country, Carter 2477 et seq.

Low intellectual condition of the Roman Catholic prisoners at Bristol; benefit anticipated if witness had increased facilities for their religious instruction, Myers 3032–3044——Duty of Government to provide religious instruction for Roman Catholic prisoners,

Signini 3473–3475——Beneficial results consequent upon the visits of the priest, ib. 3452, 3453. 3556.

Inexpediency of the State not providing religious instruction for all classes of prisoners, Rathbone 4224, 4225——Admission as to religious instruction of all classes of prisoners being very important with a view to reformation, Earl of Carnarvon 4455–4459——Dissent from the view that Roman Catholic prisoners require from their clergy more frequent spiritual instruction than Protestants require, ib. 4514.

Great importance attached by witness to his visits to prisoners under punishment, Zanetti 4848–4856——Conclusion as to the great advantage of teaching prisoners in association; exceeding difficulty in teaching any considerable number separately, ib. 4857, 4858——Necessity, generally, of a moral and religious instruction of all prisoners, and of this being effected by ministers of their own persuasion, ib. 4930–4936.

Conclusion of the Committee as to the expediency of all religious persuasions being placed on an equality with regard to religious instruction, Rep. iii.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPLAINS:

1. As to the Expediency of the Appointment of paid Roman Catholic Chaplains of Prisons.
2. As to the Status to be held by Roman Catholic Chaplains.
3. As to the Salaries to be given, and the principle upon which to be regulated.
4. Statistics of the Number of Roman Catholics in Prisons, and of the Payments to Roman Catholic Clergymen.
5. Conclusions and Recommendations of the Committee.

1. As to the Expediency of the Appointment of paid Roman Catholic Chaplains of Prisons:

More useful position of witness if placed on a salary, Bond 384, 385. 405–407. 442–445; Kirner 1095–1097. 1192–1195 —— Explanation that witness, individually, is favourable to the payment and regular appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, O'Brien 582. 601–605——Approval of legislation on the subject of salaries, though witness considers public opinion will lead to payment generally, ib. 684–688. 747–749. 803–805. 812–814——Approval of the same facilities generally to Roman Catholic as to Protestant clergymen, ib. 595–608.

Argument that the Roman Catholic prisoners are entitled to precisely the same facilities for religious instruction as the Protestants, and that equality of treatment should be enforced by Act of Parliament, Collingridge 3674–3680. 3807. 3882–3884——Admission as to the expediency of removing what is felt as a grievance, if it be possible to do so, without encountering what may be a greater evil, Earl of Carnarvon 4502——Approval of an extension to prisoners generally of the system of Roman Catholic chaplains, as in Government prisons; excellent results of the system in the latter case, Du Cane 4970–4982. 5000; Henderson 5048–5053——Conclusion as to the good effect likely to follow from the appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains in English as in Irish prisons; instances of such appointment with excellent results, Sir W. Crofton 5065–5070.

2. As to the Status to be held by Roman Catholic Chaplains:

Doubt whether Roman Catholic chaplains, even where appointed with salaries, are officers of the prisons, O'Brien 815, 816. 823, 824——Evidence to the effect that witness, though approving of the payment of Roman Catholic clergymen for prison duties, objects to their having status as prison officers, Pownall 1669–1689. 1736 et seq.——Probable difficulty through the visiting justices having no power to select or appoint whatever priest they please, ib. 1673–1683——Objection on account of the magistrates having no power of selection, as well as on other grounds, ib. 1750. 1763. 1846–1851. 1868–1872. 1938–1945. 1965–1967.

Expediency of the Roman Catholic and Protestant clergy being placed on the same footing as regards facility of access to the prisoners of their own persuasion, Myers 3133–3137. 3143–3146. 3178; Signini 3544–3551——Question considered as to the amount of advantage resulting from the status of permanent prison officer, in the case of Roman Catholic chaplains, Rathbone 4184–4187. 4216–4220. 4232–4235——Exceedingly beneficial effect of the status held by Roman Catholic chaplains of Government prisons; decided improvement, since their appointment, in the conduct of the prisoners, Du Cane 4970–4982——Expediency of the Roman Catholic chaplain having the same status as the Protestant chaplain, Sir W. Crofton 5074–5080. 5185, 5186.

3. As to the Salaries to be given, and the Principle upon which to be regulated.

Scheme suggested for the payment of Roman Catholic chaplains of prisons, the minimum salary to be 15*l.* a year where there are but few Roman Catholics, and the payment to be at the rate of 10*s.* a head where there are more than a certain number, O'Brien 720–728. 735–746. 806–811——Examination as to the relative salaries of Protestant and Roman Catholic chaplains, witness submitting that the clergy of the Established Church should be more highly remunerated, ib. 724–729. 735–749. 761–770. 780–794. 821, 822.

Suggestions as to the mode in which Roman Catholic chaplains might be paid; expediency, in the first place, of Parliament, if so minded, directing that payment shall be made, Pownall 1751–1755. 1890–1897. 1914–1921. 1949–1955. 1984, 1985. 1999, 2000. 2002——Witness objects to payment at so much per head, and thinks he should receive 100*l.* or 120*l.* a year, Purdon 2910–2925——Opinion favourable to the principle of capitation payment, Myers 3138–3141. 3147, 3148. 3151–3160.

Approval of the payment of Roman Catholic chaplains where there are not so many Roman Catholic prisoners as at Liverpool; difficulty in drawing any line, Rathbone 4207–4212. 4236. 4274, 4275——Difficulty in laying down any compulsory rule for the payment of Roman Catholic chaplains on the capitation principle, Earl of Carnarvon 4491–4493. 4504. 4513——Objection to capitation payment, as compared with a fixed salary, Du Cane 4995.

Consideration of the system of remuneration of Roman Catholic chaplains in England, witness approving of the capitation principle to a great extent, but submitting that the salary should be a matter of special contract in each case between the prison authorities and the chaplain, Sir W. Crofton 5091–5097. 5109, 5110. 5115 et seq.——Evidence opposed to the amount of salaries being fixed by Act, or to any scale being laid down, witness holding that the compulsory appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains is all that is required; there should, however, be an appeal from the magistrates to the Home Secretary, ib. 5121 et seq.

4. Statistics of the Number of Roman Catholics in Prisons, and of the Payments to Roman Catholic Clergymen:

Large number of Roman Catholics in several prisons in England; details hereon White 155–157. 191–193. 305–311.

Return showing that there are eight prisons containing 100 Roman Catholic prisoners and upwards, in five of which the Roman Catholic priest receives nothing, App. 217——Enumeration of fourteen prisons containing a considerable number of Roman Catholic prisoners during the year, in nine of which the Roman Catholic priest receives nothing, ib.——Information relative to various prisons, and the number of Roman Catholic inmates in each case, there being no payment for a Roman Catholic clergyman, ib. 218.

5. Conclusions and Recommendations of the Committee:

Grievance of Roman Catholic prisoners in many prisons through there being no Roman Catholic chaplain, Rep. iii——Scale suggested by which the minimum salary should be regulated, ib. iv——Recommendation that the system of salaried Roman Catholic chaplains be made general throughout the country, ib.——Also that Roman Catholic chaplains be classed as prison officers, ib.

Salford Gaol. Beneficial result of the appointment of a Roman Catholic chaplain, Sir W. Crofton 5067, 5068.

Signini, The Rev. Fortunatus. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is a Roman Catholic clergyman at Cardiff; has visited the borough gaol for about a year and a half, 3365–3370——Average of from forty-five to fifty Roman Catholic prisoners, 3371–3374——Permission granted by the visiting justices in March 1868, and after long and repeated application, for the collective instruction of the male prisoners once a week, and the female prisoners once a week, for an hour each day, 3375–3394. 3401–3403——Permission to witness also to see the Roman Catholic prisoners separately, after the collective instruction, if they express a wish to see him; small proportion sent to him in this way, 3377. 3382. 3889–3400. 3430–3433. 3442–3445. 3460–3464. 3476–3481. 3496–3499. 3515–

3515-3517. 3544, 3545. 3555-3557——Non-permission to hold Divine Service on Sunday, 3383. 3446, 3447.

Explanation that witness has not applied for increased facilities of seeing the prisoners or for permission to have a service on Sunday, inasmuch as he knew it would be useless to apply, and thought it would do more harm than good, 3404-3406. 3435, 3436. 3458, 3459. 3546——Grievance on the subject of the attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant Sunday service; undue inducements to them to do so, 3407-3420. 3440, 3441. 3500-3509. 3552-3555.

Comment upon a statement of the visiting justices that "prisoners of all denominations accept gratefully the visits of the appointed chaplain, and attend the services in the chapel;" conclusion as to this being taken in substance from the chaplain's report, 3411. 3465. 3485-4587. 3530-3541——Marked distinction between Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters as regards attendance at the chapel services, 3417-3419. 3488-3494——Power of the Protestant chaplain to see the Roman Catholics whenever he pleases; this power is not abused, but it might be, 3421-3425. 3437-3439.

Claim of witness to payment for prison services; about 100*l.* a year should be given, 3426-3429. 3448-3457. 3466-3469. 3518-3529. 3561-3564——Estimate of about 50*l.* as the sum required to provide chapel fittings and essentials, including the requisites for benediction, 3470-3472——Duty of Government to provide religious instruction for Roman Catholic prisoners, 3473-3475——Facility given to witness to see sick prisoners at any time, 3482-3484.

Beneficial results consequent upon the visits of the priest, 3542, 3543. 3556——Expediency of the Roman Catholic and Protestant clergy being placed on the same footing as regards facility of access to the prisoners of their own persuasion, 3544-3551——Practice formerly of not assembling all the Roman Catholic prisoners for witness's instruction, 3560——Non-objection to the use of the Protestant chapel for Roman Catholic service, 3565.

T.

Talbot, John Gilbert (Member of the Committee). (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Explanation relative to a certain statement by Mr. Purdon in regard to the books for the Roman Catholic cells in Maidstone Gaol; it is not the fact that books once recognised were subsequently withheld, 5355.

Tothill Fields Prison (Westminster House of Correction):

1. Complaints and Explanations on the Subject of Religious Instruction and Divine Service for the Roman Catholic Prisoners.
2. As to the Attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant Service.
3. Chapel Accommodation for Roman Catholics.
4. Laundry Question, and Dismissal of Mr. White.
5. Lady Visitors.
6. Question of Payment of the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman.
7. Other Details generally.

1. Complaints and Explanations on the Subject of Religious Instruction and Divine Service for the Roman Catholic Prisoners:

Statement as to witness having at first been allowed to see the Roman Catholic prisoners only one by one, whereas it is most desirable to assemble them together for the purpose of religious instruction; relaxation eventually, by which he was allowed to see twenty-five prisoners collectively on week days, White 6-12. 24-45. 164-168. 222, 223——Necessity for some time of the use of an ordinary cell by witness, in order to administer the sacraments of his Church; utter unfitness of this accommodation, ib. 13-23. 33, 34. 37-39. 177-180——Refusal at first of an application by witness to hold Divine service on Sunday; subsequent concession on this as on other points, ib. 36-54. 207. 312-314.

Application made by witness, and granted, for permission to hold an afternoon service on Sunday as well as a morning service, White 46-52——Permission given to witness to hold a day service as well as Sunday services, ib. 53——Complaint as to witness having been refused the services of a schoolmistress and of a Scripture reader for the instruction of the Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 55-63. 219-221. 224, 225. 261-267.

Impossibility of witness influencing new prisoners in choosing or stating their religion, White 294, 295——Power of the Protestant chaplain to visit the prisoners, whilst witness had no such power, unless requested by the prisoners to visit them, ib. 315-321——Absence of attempt at proselytism by the schoolmistress of Tothill Fields, ib. 330, 331.

Secular instruction given to the Roman Catholics by the schoolmistress, who is a Protestant, the religious instruction resting with the clergy, O'Brien 462, 463. 530-532

 ——Objection

1. Complaints and Explanations on the Subject of Religious Instruction, &c.—cont$_{d}$.

——Objection, at first, to the Roman Catholic clergymen giving instruction to the prisoners collectively, on the ground that it was considered illegal, O'Brien 464–467——Grounds upon which the visiting justices refused an application by Mr. White for a Scripture reader for the Roman Catholic prisoners, ib. 468. 473, 474. 522–529. 544–546. 571–573——Statement as to there being no religious communication between the Protestant chaplain and the prisoners on the entry of the latter, ib. 538, 539.

Disapproval of the former arrangement by which Mr. White was obliged to see the prisoners, singly, in a common cell, O'Brien 610—— Statement in further explanation of the visiting justices having found they had legal power to permit the Roman Catholic priest to see prisoners collectively, ib. 658–662——Refusal of an application by Mr. White for a schoolmistress, ib. 704–706——Letter, dated 29th May 1869, refusing Mr. White's application for a Scripture reader, ib. 820.

Particulars relative to the arrangements for the secular instruction of both Protestants and Roman Catholics by a Protestant schoolmistress, and for their religious instruction by their respective clergyman, Mrs. Billiter 844–847. 910–918. 983–989——Communication of the Protestant chaplain with each prisoner, after her arrival, in order to ascertain her religious persuasion; no religious advice is given on this occasion, ib. 965–968. 1000–1014. 1023–1025. 1030.

2. As to the Attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant Service:

Complaint as to the conduct of the matron of the prison in telling the Roman Catholic prisoners that they were at perfect liberty to go to the Protestant chapel, though a Roman Catholic chapel had been provided, White 80–89. 208–212. 231–233. 253–257. 289, 290. 327–329. 356–360.

Use of the Roman Catholic chapel of the prison for the first time on the 12th April 1868, Mrs. Billiter 828, 829——Address of the Roman Catholic prisoners by witness, on this this occasion, to the effect that any who wished might attend the Protestant chapel, but that none were obliged to do so, ib. 830–832——Examination as to the motive by which witness was actuated in making this address, and as to the precise circumstances under which it was made; denial that he sought to exercise any undue influence as to the religious pursuasions of the Roman Catholics, ib. 831–835. 882–903. 961–964. 977–982. 990–997.

Practice, previously to the opening of the Roman Catholic chapel, as to Roman Catholics attending the Protestant chapel; power of objection to do so, as set forth in the rules read to them on entry, Mrs. Billiter 872–881. 951–953.

3. Chapel Accommodation for Roman Catholics:

Estimate of about 150 persons as the number which the room allotted to witness for a chapel would hold; insufficiency of this accommodation, White 169–176. 239–242. 349–353——Conclusion as to the chapel for the Roman Catholic prisoners being too small, Bond 408, 409.

Convenient accommodation for about 150 prisoners in the Roman Catholic chapel of the prison; conclusion that the chapel is sufficiently large with reference to the average number of such prisoners, O'Brien 449–451. 540–543. 576–578. 583——Sufficiency of the chapel accommodation further adverted to, ib. 651–654.

Average of about 200 Roman Catholic prisoners, there being room for about 170 in the Catholic chapel; sufficiency, generally, of the accommodation, Mrs. Billiter 836–843. 904–909——Impression that there have been no complaints as to the size of the Roman Catholic chapel; facility of enlarging the accommodation, Pownall 1885–1888. 1958–1962. 2000.

4. Laundry Question, and Dismissal of Mr. White.

Particulars relative to the dismissal of witness from the prison through having published a letter or resolution from the visiting justices respecting the laundry question, White 110–122. 140–148. 335–346——Information on this subject to the effect that the matron unfairly excluded Roman Catholics from work in the laundry and kitchen, and that Roman Catholics were thus induced to enter their names as Protestants, ib. 114–122. 213–218. 234–238. 258–260. 278–282. 335–346.

Desire of the female prisoners for employment in the laundry; impression that the Roman Catholic prisoners are not excluded, Bond 428, 429. 437. 446.

Employment of Protestant and Roman Catholic prisoners in the laundry without reference to their religious persuasion; representation by Mr. White, which led to this regulation, O'Brien 454–456. 533–537. 561——Former regulation excluding Roman Catholics from the laundry, because of the inconvenience through their being required for religious services; compensation, in the shape of garden work, given for such exclusion, ib. 457–459. 484–487. 533–537. 556–560——Entire inaccuracy of the inference that that the temporary exclusion of Roman Catholic females from the laundry had a proselytising tendency, O'Brien 486. 575——Removal of Mr. White from the prison on the ground that he had communicated to the public press a letter from the magistrates, such letter having arisen out of the laundry question, ib. 562–570.

Further explanation relative to the exclusion for a time of Roman Catholic females from work in the laundry, whilst it was afterwards decided to remove the prohibition, O'Brien 611–618. 669–671——Question further considered whether the exclusion of Roman Catholics from the laundry might not have a proselytising effect, ib. 672–677——Grounds for concluding that the dismissal of Mr. White was a proper act on the part of the magistrates, and that the course taken by him in making public his complaints was an improper proceeding, ib. 678–683. 689, 690. 795–700. 771–773. 802.

Explanatory statement on the subject of employment in the laundry, and the temporary exclusion of Roman Catholics on account of the inconvenience caused by their being called away for religious services; compensation given for such exclusion by employing them in the garden, Mrs. Billiter 848–853. 919–934. 1026–1029—— Information relative to two prisoners reported as stating falsely that they were Protestants in order that they might not be excluded from the laundry, ib. 854–861. 935–944.

Opinion as to the objectionable conduct of the late Roman Catholic clergyman at Westminster Prison on the subject of the laundry, Pownall 1821–1830. 1860.

5. Lady Visitors:

Statement as to permission having been refused to Roman Catholic ladies to visit the prison and assist in teaching, &c., White 64–73.

Refusal of an application in 1867 from a Roman Catholic lady to visit the prison, like application from Protestants having been refused in 1866; legal opinion taken as to the illegality of such visits, O'Brien 469–472. 548–550——Statement as to seven lady visitors who had been long allowed to see the prisoners not having been excluded when the legal opinion was taken, ib. 471. 515–521. 550–552——Action of the magistrates in the prohibition of some lady visitors, whilst others were allowed, further considered and defended, ib. 661. 665–668.

Circumstances under which Protestant ladies are allowed to visit the prisoners, there having at one time been seven lady visitors; approval of increased facilities in this respect as regards both Protestants and Roman Catholics, Mrs. Billiter 969–976.

6. Question of Payment of the Roman Catholic Visiting Clergyman:

Conclusion as to the propriety of placing the Roman Catholic priest on the same footing as the Protestant chaplain, and giving him a salary, White 123–139. 197–201. 243. 275–277. 332–334. 354, 355. 360–374——Information relative to the heavy duties discharged by witness in the prison, so that he had to give up certain parochial duties, whereas he received no salary from the prison, ib. 90–109. 181–184. 275–277. 283–286. 360–374——Application made by witness for a salary, but without effect; explanation hereon as to his having had no status in the prison, not having been appointed as visiting priest, but only approved, ib. 107. 123–139. 149–161. 185–190. 197, 198. 249–252. 300–303. 323–326——Chief causes of complaint of witness, after the concessions made in 1868, that he received no salary, ib. 185. 243. 299. 348.

Average of from two and a half hours to three hours a day spent by witness in the prison, for which he receives no pay, Bond 381–390——Claim of witness to a salary on the ground that his prison duties interfere with his parochial work, whilst there is a large Roman Catholic population in the district, which contributes to the prison rates, ib. 386 et seq.——Absence of collision between witness and the prison authorities, his only complaint being that he is unsalaried, ib. 402. 407. 418, 419.

Statement as to witness not having felt it his duty as a visiting justice of Westminster Prison to bring forward the question of payment of the Roman Catholic clergyman, O'Brien 627–646. 649, 650.

Further statement as to the Roman Catholic prisoners requiring the whole of witness's services, Bond 1698–1704.

7. Other Details generally:

Average of about 200 Roman Catholic inmates of the prison, White 24–28 —— Comment upon the refusal of the magistrates to provide a harmonium for the Roman Catholic service, ib. 75. 226. 268——Refusal also at first of an application by witness for the services of a clerk or acolyte, ib. 76–79. 229, 230 —— Frequent change of the warders who waited upon witness, much to his annoyance, ib. 332–334.

Appointment of six Roman Catholic warders for attending exclusively to the Roman Catholic prisoners, O'Brien 452, 453. 581——Refusal of a harmonium in the Roman

7. Other Details generally—continued.

Catholic chapel adverted to and explained, O'Brien 475, 476——Refusal of an application by Mr. White for the services of a boy as clerk, though permission was afterwards granted on removal of objection as to the age and size of the boy, ib. 480-482. 505-511——Absence of differences between Mr. White's successor and the visiting justices, ib. 488-490. 494. 582——Opinion that Mr. White was never an officer of the prison, ib. 567, 568.

Defence of the action of the visiting justices in gradually making concessions to Mr. White, O'Brien 609——Further particulars relative to the appointment of six Roman Catholic warders, ib. 655-657. 712-717. 730-734——Withdrawal of refusal in the matter of the application for a clerk further adverted to and explained, ib. 659, 660. 663, 664. 707-711.

Denial that there was any cause of complaint as regards the appointment and change of warders who attended upon Mr. White, Mrs Billiter 863, 864——Irresponsibility of witness as regards the custody or care of certain articles provided by Mr. White, ib. 870, 871. 945-950.

Westminster House of Correction. See Tothill Fields Prison.

White, Rev Alfred. (Analysis of his Evidence).—Was visiting Roman Catholic priest at Westminster House of Correction from October 1866 till September 1869; 1–5——Statement as to witness having at first been allowed to see the Roman Catholic prisoners only one by one, whereas it is most desirable to assemble them together for the purpose of religious instruction; relaxation eventually by which he was allowed to see twenty-five prisoners, collectively, on week days, 6–12. 24–45. 164–168. 222, 223——Necessity for some time of the use of an ordinary cell by witness in order to administer the sacraments of his church; utter unfitness of this accommodation, 13–23. 33, 34. 37–39. 177–180.

Average of about 200 Roman Catholic inmates of the prison, 24–28——Refusal at first of an application by witness to hold Divine service on Sunday; subsequent concession on this, as on other points, 36–54. 207. 312–314——Permission given to witness to hold a day service as well as Sunday services, 53——Complaint as to witness having been refused the services of a schoolmistress, and of a Scripture reader, for the instruction of the Roman Catholic prisoners, 55–63. 219–221. 224, 225. 261–267.

Statement as to permission having been refused to Roman Catholic ladies to visit the prison and assist in teaching, &c., 64–73——Partial character of the provision made by the magistrates in order to enable witness to celebrate Divine worship; expense of about 150 l. incurred by witness for altar fittings, &c., 74, 75. 202–206. 226–228. 246–248. 269–274. 287, 288. 297, 298——Comment upon the refusal of the magistrates to provide a harmonium, 75. 226. 268——Refusal also, at first, of an application by witness for the services of a clerk or acolyte, 76–79. 229, 230.

Complaint as to the conduct of the matron of the prison in telling the Roman Catholic prisoners that they were at perfect liberty to go to the Protestant chapel, though a Roman Catholic chapel had been provided, 80–89. 208–212. 231–233. 253–257. 289, 290. 327–329. 356–360——Information relative to the heavy duties discharged by witness in the prison, so that he had to give up certain parochial duties, whereas he received no salary from the prison, 90–109. 181–184. 275–277. 283–286. 360–374——Application made by witness for a salary, but without effect; explanation hereon as to his having had no status in the prison, not having been appointed as visiting priest, but only approved, 107. 123–139. 149–161. 185–190. 197, 198. 249–252. 300–303. 322–326.

Particulars relative to the dismissal of witness from the prison through having published a letter or resolution received from the visiting justices respecting the laundry question, 110–122. 140–148. 335–346——Information on this subject, to the effect that the matron unfairly excluded Roman Catholics from work in the laundry and kitchen, and that Roman Catholics were thus induced to enter their names as Protestants, 114–122. 213–218. 234–238. 258–260. 278–282. 335–346.

Conclusion as to the propriety of placing the Roman Catholic priest on the same footing as the Protestant chaplain, and giving him a salary, 123–139. 197–201. 243. 275–277. 332–334. 354, 355. 360–374——Large average of Roman Catholic prisoners, not only in Tothill Fields Prison, but in several other prisons in England, 155–157. 191–193. 305–311——Estimate of about 150 persons as the number which the room allotted to witness for a chapel would hold; insufficiency of this accommodation, 169–176. 239–242. 349–353.

Chief cause of complaint of witness, after the concessions made in 1868, that he received no salary, 185. 243. 299. 348——Approval of prisoners being classified on entrance, either as Protestants or Roman Catholics, 291–293——Impossibility of witness influencing new prisoners in choosing or stating their religion, 294, 295——Power of the Protestant chaplain to visit the prisoners, whilst witness had no such power unless requested by the prisoners to visit them, 315–321——Absence of attempt at proselytism by the schoolmistress at Tothill Fields, 330, 331——Important distinctive teaching between the Roman Catholic and Protestant inmates, 376, 377.

3695. 3907-3909. 3928-3930. 3961——Average of about forty-five Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol, these being chiefly soldiers, Collingridge 3593-3602——Offer by witness to provide a room for Divine service, and to fit it up, ib. 3610-3614. 3772-3776. 3786-3788——Grounds for complaint as to the attendance of Roman Catholics at the Protestant service on Sunday; inducement to such attendance, ib. 3615-3624. 3681-3685. 3713-3718. 3758-3760. 3910, 3911.

Objection by the magistrates to the use by witness of the Protestant chapel for a Sunday service; belief that there was no good reason for such objection on the ground of discipline, Collingridge 3626-3632. 3787-3810. 3864-3866. 3941-3945. 3964. 3977-3990——Long distance necessarily travelled by witness and long time occupied in going to and from the gaol, ib. 3633-3636. 3743. 3823. 3913, 3914——Supply of Roman Catholic books provided by the justices on witness's recommendation; complaint, however, as to the Protestant Bible and Prayer Book and a Protestant tract being invariably placed in each cell, ib. 3637-3649. 3752-3757. 3858-3863. 3915-3920. 3974-3976.

Importance of witness being allowed to see the prisoners for a larger time than three hours daily, and being also allowed to instruct them collectively; beneficial results anticipated, Collingridge 3650-3655. 3670-3672. 3731-3737. 3876-3879. 3962-3963——Payment of a salary of 40 l. a year to witness, the Protestant chaplain receiving 300 l. a year; details on this question, witness contending that he is fairly entitled to a much larger payment for his services, though he has not made application to that effect, ib. 3659-3670. 3719-3730. 3738-3748. 3782, 3783. 3811-3836. 3885-3888. 3946-3960. 3971-3973. 3991-4001——List furnished to witness showing the prisoners entered as Roman Catholics; doubt, however, as to there being any creed register, ib. 3696-3712. 3837-3840.

Impression as to the visiting justices having offered a salary chiefly for the purpose of being able to say that they had offered it, Collingridge 3813——Instances of Roman Catholics entering themselves as Protestants, and vice versâ, ib. 3840-3857——Visits paid by the Protestant chaplain to the Roman Catholic cells; witness, however, makes no complaint on this score, ib. 3867-3870——Complaint as to the instruction in the school; amendment suggested in this respect, ib. 3871-3875. 3931-3937. 3965-3970.

More liberal spirit evinced by the visiting justices, and increased concessions granted to witness since Lord Carnarvon has been chairman, Collingridge 3880, 3881——Correspondence between witness and the visiting justices adverted to, ib. 3921-3939.

2. Explanations in Detail on the part of the Visiting Justices:

Witness, as chairman of the visiting justices of the Hants county gaol at Winchester, submits sundry explanations relative to the representations and complaints laid before the Committee by Mr. Collingridge, Earl of Carnarvon 4284 et seq.——Refusal of the visiting justices to allow the association of the Roman Catholic prisoners for religious instruction on account chiefly of the expense necessary for another room and for additional warders; examination in defence of the conclusion thus arrived at, ib. 4286-4335. 4359 et seq.——Statement as to the effect of a daily Roman Catholic service in deranging the working of the prison, and interfering with the regulations for its discipline, ib. 4288. 4295-4299. 4380-4386. 4432-4440.

Doubt as to Roman Catholic prisoners attending the Protestant service on Sunday, or as to there being any great inducement or temptation to them to do so, Earl of Carnarvon 4321-4332——Belief that no offer was made by Mr. Collingridge to provide an additional room for Roman Catholic service, ib. 4333-4335. 4377, 4378——Comment upon the statement by Mr. Collingridge that a Protestant bible, Prayer-book, and tract were invariably placed in the cells of all Roman Catholics; particulars hereon as to the regulations on the subject of books, and as to the obstacle to certain alterations suggested, ib. 4336-4345. 4375, 4376. 4441-4449. 4505-4508.

Explanation relative to the school instruction by the Protestant chaplain; belief that there is no abuse as regards the religious portion of the instruction, Earl of Carnarvon 4346-4351. 4397-4399. 4412——Facilities for religious instruction by the Roman Catholic clergyman in the prisoners' cells, and for the administration of the Holy Communion, ib. 4358-4371. 4380. 4469-4477——Evidence to the effect that the facilities and concessions granted by the visiting justices are sufficient to meet the grievance urged by Mr. Collingridge as regards the question of a Sunday service, ib. 4358-4371. 4380-4384. 4387-4389——Concession to Mr. Collingridge by allowing him to have an assistant, ib. 4369-4371. 4380, 4381.

Explanation of the action of the visiting justices in awarding a salary to the Roman Catholic clergyman; circumstance of Mr. Collingridge having made no complaint as to the amount, Earl of Carnarvon 4372-4374. 4396. 4482-4487——Remarks upon the correspondence of Mr. Collingridge with witness and the previous chairman of the visiting justices, ib. 4377-4379. 4499——Reference to a report by the visiting justices as explaining explaining the decisions arrived at on the question of association of Roman Catholic prisoners for religious worship, and on other matters, Earl of Carnarvon 4380-4384.

Grounds upon which it has not been permitted to use the Protestant chapel for the Roman Catholics; undue interference thereby with the prison regulations and management, Earl of Carnarvon 4380-4386. 4390, 4391——Conclusion as to the court of quarter sessions having decided not to comply with Mr. Collingridge's application in the foregoing matter, ib. 4380-4384——Obstacle to carrying out an arrangement whereby the Roman Catholics might stay away from part of the school instruction, ib. 4399-4401. 4460.

Further statement as to the difficulty and expense in the way of a Roman Catholic service on Sunday, whether held at the same time as the Protestant service, or at a different time, Earl of Carnarvon 4461-4493. 4500, 4501——Small number of visiting justices as compared with the number of the court of quarter sessions, ib. 4464, 4465——Statement as to its being competent to any member of the court to re-open the question of a Sunday service for the Roman Catholics, even though the visiting justices may make no recommendation on the subject, ib. 4466-4468. 4509-4511.

Statement as to many of the Roman Catholic prisoners in Hants gaol being partly chargeable to Government, as coming from the army or navy, Earl of Carnarvon 4495-4497——Willingness of the Hants court of quarter sessions to give all reasonable facilities, without their being constrained to do so by Act of Parliament, ib. 4512——Comment upon the unjustifiable statement of Mr. Collingridge that the visiting justices had proposed a salary for the Roman Catholic clergyman of the Hants prison, merely in order that they might be able to say they had done so, ib. 4515.

Wren, Henry. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is governor of the Glamorgan County Gaol at Cardiff, 5210, 5211——Average of from forty to fifty Roman Catholic prisoners in the gaol, 5212——Facility given to these prisoners to see their priest, the Rev. Mr. Signini, upon their expressing a wish to that effect; details as to the practice in this respect, 5213-5215. 5230, 5231. 5310-5312. 5319-5331——Visits of Mr. Signini twice a week, there being no limit upon the time which he may remain, 5216-5218. 5332-5336.

Attendance of the majority of the Roman Catholics at the Protestant service on Sunday; denial that any inducement or pressure is put upon them to attend, 5219-5226. 5247. 5274-5287. 5308, 5309——Conclusion as to the accuracy of a statement by the visiting justices, that the prisoners generally receive gratefully the visits of the Protestant chaplain; doubt as to the chaplain having been the authority for this statement, 5227-5235. 5240-5242. 5248-5273. 5288-5301——Provision by Mr. Signini of the books for the Roman Catholic cells, 5236, 5237.

Denial that the Protestant prisoners are ever forced to attend the visits of their chaplain; the latter, however, has free access to the cells, and has a key for the purpose, 5238. 5243-5246——Inaccuracy of a statement by Mr. Signini that all the Roman Catholics in the prison were not assembled for his instructions, 5239——Power of Mr. Signini to see any prisoner he pleases; statement hereon as to his not having the use of a key to the cells, in the same way as the Protestant chaplain, 5244-5246. 5322. 5325-5327. 5337-5354.

Access of Mr. Signini to the creed register, though he is not furnished with a copy, 5302-5305. 5313——Denial that any prisoners wishing to see Mr. Signini have been kept back from doing so, 5306, 5307——Due courtesy with which Mr. Signini is treated, though not a paid officer, 5314, 5315.

Z.

Zanetti, The Rev. Vincent. (Analysis of his Evidence.)—Is Roman Catholic priest, visiting Millbank prison, and is a salaried officer of the prison; has visited Millbank and Tothill-fields prisons since 1853; 4834-4838——Daily visits of witness to Millbank, where he holds two services on week-days and four on Sunday, 4839-4844——Frequent visits of witness to Roman Catholic prisoners in their cells, every facility being given for the purpose, 4845-4847——Great importance attached by witness to his visits to prisoners under punishment, 4848-4856.

Conclusion as to the great advantage of teaching prisoners in association; exceeding difficulty in teaching any considerable number separately, 4857, 4858——Belief that the spiritual instruction given by witness in Millbank tends very much to the reformation of the prisoners; diminished number of re-convicted prisoners adverted to hereon, 4859-4862. 4909-4915——Advantage of witness's position as regards the observance of the rules by the prisoners, 4863. 4899.

Very satisfactory relations existing between witness and the other prison officers, his status in the prison and the free facilities afforded him being attended with most beneficial results, 4864-4874. 4897. 4925-4934——Advantage of the service, as in Millbank, being accompanied by music, 4876-4878——Information as to the cost of altar furniture, &c.; from 60 l. to 70 l. would be a fair average, 4879-4884.

Large proportion of the Roman Catholic inmates of Millbank who used to attend the Protestant service on Sunday previously to the facilities for holding Roman Catholic service, 4885-4891——Inducement to Roman Catholic prisoners to attend Protestant service, as a means of enabling them to leave their cells, where there is no Roman Catholic service, 4890, 4891——Circumstance of there being now a regular Presbyterian service in Millbank, 4892——Belief as to Dissenters making no difficulty about attending the Church of England service, 4893-4896. 4900, 4901. 4906-4908.

Strong objection to the cost of a few additional warders standing in the way of proper services for all prisoners equally, 4898——Conviction that discipline would be improved by a more general appointment of Roman Catholic chaplains, 4899. 4934——Statement as to the celebration of Mass on Sunday being obligatory, and as to its being perfectly understood by all Roman Catholics that it is a duty incumbent upon them to attend Mass, 4902-4905. 4917-4924. 4926-4929. 4932——Necessity generally of a moral and religious instruction of all prisoners, and of this being effected by ministers of their own persuasion, 4930-4936.

[Second Examination.]—Explanation that formerly the Roman Catholics in Millbank, who registered themselves as such, were not allowed by the prison rules to go to the Protestant service, 4937.
